A PASTOR'S HAPPY NEW YEAR.

I wish you—
I pray may be yours!

HAPPINESS from what you have—life, home, friends, open vision, opportunity, God.

HAPPINESS from what you have not—corroding care, envy, malice, hate, strife.

HAPPINESS from what you think upon—truth, honesty, purity, justice, loveliness, virtue, beauty, praise.

HAPPINESS from what you suffer—"He also serves who only stands and waits."

HAPPINESS from what you do—passions mastered, sorrows assuaged, burdens lifted, hopes renewed, souls inspired, lives changed; in a word—DUTY DONE.

HAPPINESS from what you purpose—pure life, self-sacrificing service, Christlike endeavor, undaunted faith. "Not what I am, but what I would be, comforts me."

HAPPINESS—"forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."
—Horace G. Ogden, in N. Y. Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

IN THE BEGINNING.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Gen. 1:1. (Golden text for Sunday, January 5.)

It is vain to speculate about this beginning; you cannot conceive of how it took place. Neither science, philosophy nor revelation can carry you beyond it, nor explain the mode and manner of it. Like many other truths we meet in life; it is fundamental and neither has nor needs explanation. The only possible or needful explanation about it is found in the next word, "God." In the beginning God. That is sufficient, God was there. He ordered it; He looked after it; He arranged and directed it, and that is sufficient.

What was before this beginning? How did it go about beginning? How did beginning begin? How silly and senseless the questions, unless is added the one word, God. Just that and nothing more. This is the lesson of today, and of this text: to put God first. Just place Him at the beginning.

This is now a new year. Place God at the beginning of it. This is a new day. Place God at the beginning of it. This is a new plan you are making. Place God at the beginning of it. This is a new experience you are having. Place God at the beginning of it. Every beginning is a bad beginning unless God is placed there. We should begin nothing without having God in it.

The Bible order is the only right order—"In the beginning God." And no one of us orders any thing right unless we follow that order. We must place God first, just like the Book does. That is why the Bible is the Book of all books,—it places God at the beginning and then keeps Him there all through. "Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." The Bible carries out its own thrilling command, and is an illustration of how mighty is the meaning of it.

How long was the world in creation? Over what period of time did the creation extend? That time still abides and creation goes on. In the beginning was God, and God created then and He has been creating ever since. He alone is the Creator. Man makes nothing; man cannot create. God alone is capable of the creative act. Man brings together, in new and varied forms and shapes, parts and parcels of God's creation; but from the beginning until now man never has created anything. Man's efforts are all confined to the moving act. Man moves things together or takes them apart; but he never has created anything. Man may plant and cultivate and bring in the harvest; but God alone creates, gives the increase. How helpless and hopeless is man without God. We are the creatures of His handiwork and are absolutely dependent upon Him. In our beginning, in the world's beginning, He was. How important it is that we have and keep Him in all our beginnings.

Let us strive this new year to have Him in all our undertakings, in all our plans, in all our purposes, in all our hopes, ambitions, aspirations. "In the beginning God." No day is a right day and no plan is a right plan until man has placed God in the beginning of it. "O Lord undertake for us."

THE MISSIONARY SITUATION.

What The Sun's Editor desires in writing on the present missionary situation is not to hurt the cause but to help it. It needs helping. We have nearly struck bottom in missionary interest, enterprise, and enthusiasm. We don't want to hurt any body's feelings, if we can help it. We haven't any ill-will towards anybody in the world in the matter. Let that be put and kept plain.

What hurts us is that we are doing next to nothing in the matter of missions, and no one in particular seems to care if we are not. Our one thought is to help a cause that was always deplorably weak amongst us, and now seems to be growing weaker and weaker.

Here is the question: Is the Christian church to be missionary or non-missionary? Are we to do our part in helping to reach, with the gospel, the great unreached masses of pagan lands, or are we as a people to gradually withdraw the little we have been doing, a "little" indeed that is enough to make us hang our heads in shame?

Our good brother, Dr. M. T. Morrill, Secretary for Foreign Missions, Dayton, Ohio, in a very kind personal note calls our attention to the fact that we used the terms "recalling missionaries" in a recent editorial, and that we are mistaken: that the word "recall" is incorrect. "As a matter of fact our Mission Board never has recalled a missionary," explains Bro. Morrill. That is good. We hope the Board never will have to recall a missionary. We knew several who had been missionaries and were now at home, and that we had fewer missionaries on the field now than we had formerly; and that was what pained us. The fact that they were not "recalled," may help some in comfort to our conscience; but they are at home, and that is what this writer deplores.

Our Brother Morrill further calls attention to the fact that "we have not been able to send reinforcements, but that is not altogether because of lack of funds." Had there been suitable missionaries in sight Bro. Morrill feels that the money could have been secured. And we join with Bro. Morrill in deploring the fact that there have not been suitable missionaries in sight.

Well now this helps some. And what this writer wants is help. We want the facts brought out, and here at least is given a fact. Brethren, why is it that so few, so very few of our men and women feel called upon to offer themselves for the foreign work? Why is it that as one or two, or three, or four fall out, resign or return home on furlough, there are no recruits, offering to take their places? Don't these men and women who are at home on furlough want to go back? And as the workers drop out, are there not those amongst us to take up the work and carry it forward? When armies are in a conflict, engaged in battle, and men fall out, either from desertions or bullets, others fall in to take their places, fill the broken ranks with new recruits, if the army means business and really expects victory. Can't we find men and women amongst us to take the places, in our broken missionary ranks, of those who are falling out from one cause and another?

We must in some measure strive to interest men in the foreign work. A letter from our good Brother, Dr. O. W. Powers, Secretary of Home Missions, Dayton, Ohio, says "A comparison of the home and foreign mission receipts for the last quadrennium and the first half of the present shows an approximate increase of the foreign receipts of over thirty per cent., of home receipts of over ten per cent, if we continue at the present rate." Good: may the Father of light and life help us continue upward. We can't understand, but we feel sure that Bro. Powers knows what he is talking about. What perplexes us is that we haven't as many missionaries on the field now as we had five years ago, and haven't sent out any new recruits in that time, and that though receipts show this great and praiseworthy increase we are almost, if not quite, as deep in debt now as we were then.

Put it all down for a delusion and a snare on our part, brethren, if you will, but we cannot help feeling that something is vigorously and vitally wrong with us of the Christian church in this missionary situation. Nobody, or set of bodies have sought in one way or another to influence us in taking the position that we are taking.

We have deliberately come to the conclusion that we as a people are practically asleep in the matter of missions, and God will not prosper us as a people, as He wants to prosper us, until we wake up, and take our stand with other evangelical bodies, in the front ranks of those who are giving their men and means to the great tasks of helping evangelize the world, in helping to reach and to save the great unreached and unsaved millions now waiting in pagan darkness.

Brethren we are not asking for explanations. We don't care a fig about these. We don't doubt anybody's veracity or integrity as touching the present missionary situation. We don't believe a single penny has been unaccounted for, and all that. We do know there is a lack of means, men and interest amongst us with which to reach the millions who are perishing in heathen darkness. What we want to see is more men offering for the foreign work, more means coming in with which to send them, and more burdened hearts round about us for the unsaved of pagan darkness.

A PORTABLE CHURCH.

The Home Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention has purchased, and paid for, a Portable church to be used, for the present at least, in the bounds of the Delmarvia Christian Conference, as explained elsewhere by Dr. A. W. Lightbourne. This may be called a rather bold if not reckless step on the part of the Board, but the situation seemed to justify it, and the cause demanded it. Dr. Lightbourne said that his Conference could equip the church, fit and furnish it, also supply men to occupy its pulpit, if our Board would supply the building, at a cost of $1,000.00. There was strong evidence that Christian congregations could be gathered and churches planted permanently at several points in Delaware and Maryland in the near future if this portable church house could be obtained. The Board had no recourse save to put up the cash and buy the property outright, which property now belongs to the Southern Christian Convention. The President of the Southern Christian Convention, Rev. W. W. Staley D. D., advised with the Board and deemed the step highly important and altogether worth while. As Dr. Lightbourne explains, this is the first portable church in the world, so far as we know, and the venture will be watched with eager interest. It is the purpose to gather a congregation in a city, teach and preach till a permanent organization can be effected and a permanent place of worship established, then move the portable church on to another city or locality.

This is carrying the gospel to the people, and is a worthy undertaking.

GOD ANSWERS PRAYER.

It is an old, old story that all know who have put it to the test that God hears and answers prayer. But every personal experience of the kind is both new and interesting.

In the Monday papers this week is related an incident which though it is from the son of the richest man in the world, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is as true and interesting as if it had been the testimony of the poorest man in all the world. It was at Tarrytown, New York, before a large audience at the Y. M. C. A. last Sunday that young Rockefeller related his experience about the answer to prayer in the following manner: "when he faced the crisis of his life and happiness and usefulness to the world depended upon decision, he prayed to God for four years, night and morning to guide him on the right path.

"Suddenly one morning before dawn had broken he arose from his bed and lighted a lamp. He said the path of his life had been then and there made as clear to him as though a sign was before him pointing out the right road for him to follow. He took his pen and there in the early morning committed himself to the life he should lead. What the crisis was or how he committed himself he did not say.

"No man can prove to me that there is nothing in prayer after my experience," he said. "God answered me."

TO THOSE WHO OWE.

On making up our report to the Government as to the number of Christian Sun subscribers who are a year or more in arrears, we find that more than four hundred names on our list have received the paper a year or more, and have not, in that time, paid anything on subscription. This is too bad. We are not allowed by the postal laws to continue these on our list. At great personal expense and time we have mailed each of these dear friends a personal letter giving full and due notice. Will these four hundred and more not bestir themselves and send in the amounts due at once? We feel that there has just been neglect of the matter. It is now serious and important. Unless these pay up within the next week their names will have to be taken from our list and their accounts charged up against them and held for collection. This is a timely matter and should receive attention.

THEY GET THEIR PAY.

I am taking this paragraph of history from the Raleigh News and Observer, to wit: "Rev. J. M. White, an aged Baptist preacher and school teacher died in Franklin County a few days ago. More than 30 years ago Mr. White was a merchant in Raleigh and his firm failed, with an indebtedness of $5,000. Mr. White was not legally responsible for the debt; the failure may not have been his fault. But he went to work and out of his meager salary as a preacher and teacher, he reared and educated his children and paid every cent of the indebtedness."

Whereupon let us take notice, brethren, that Mr. White and men of his kind get their pay. Yes, it cost him the dollars, and he had to cut and plan, and live close and deny himself. But he got his pay. This same beloved Mr. White lived to see his older son one of the ablest, most elequent and influential men in the Baptist pulpit of all the South, the Rev. J. E. White, D. D., of Atlanta, Ga. He lived to see his second son an honored and influential State Senator from his Senatorial district and for some years now Superintendent of Schools in his native county and one among the leading educators of the State, Hon. R. B. White, of Franklinton, N. C. Yes, Mr. White was denied the dollars for his own pleasure that his honest efforts earned, but by his integrity of purpose and his unwavering devotion to what was morally right he won that which was better than wealth, and got that which was greater than gain. And the pride and joy of that father's heart in his old age were greater far at the achievement of his noble sons than could have been the case with him if he had saved his $5,000, and added to it a hundred times as much.

Yes, beloved, the good God and the holy angels see to it that Mr. White and his honest kind ever and always get their pay.

POUNDED.

Both the pastor and his horse share in the kind treatment—the pastor gets a purse of cash ($5.35) the horse gets a $22.50 set of buggy harness. A phone call carried us to Burlington where Bro. J. M. Wallace wished to see me, and that is the way he treated us. Fifty-nine friends at Union Christian church joined in the conspiracy. Surrender was the only thing to do, and this I did. May heaven's blessings rest upon the victors and the vanquished alike. Many thanks to you all, kind friends.

J. W. Holt.

FINE THINGS AHEAD.

By M. T. Morrill, Secretary of Foreign Missions.

Attention of the readers of the Christian Sun is called to some of the excellent features of the coming Foreign Mission campaign for our denomination.

In the first place we will line up with all the other denominations in observing the 100th anniversary of the birth of David Livingstone, the exact date of which will be March 19, 1913. It is planned to observe the 19th to 23rd inclusive, thus ending the anniversary on Easter Sunday. Preceding the anniversary will be a three-months educational campaign that shall prove most wonderfully inspiring, since it will largely concern Livingstone and Africa. We will be able to furnish the following material:

"The Story of David Livingstone," written for junior boys and girls.

"Livingstone the pathfinder," written for older boys and girls.

"David Livingstone," a popular biography.

"The Personal Life of David Livingstone," the famous biography by Blaikie that has given so many readers inspiration.

All the above books will be put out in cheap editions, but handsomely illustrated two of them with colored illustrations.

"Daybreak in Dark Continents" is the standard study book revised and much improved.

"Suggestions to Pastors for Sermons on David Livingstone" will be helpful to all ministers.

"The Prayer Life of Livingstone," by Dr. Speer, will be especially helpful to the devotional life of all readers.

Portraits of Livingstone, made from actual photograph, will be available in six sizes and two colors.

Then there will be a fine Easter program, "The Message of Light," for use of Sunday schools, which we purpose to give to all schools that will in return send a worthy offering for Foreign Missions.

"Africa—From Darkness to Dawn," two attractive programs for the Christian Endeavor Society.

"Livingstone Hero Stories," for use in Sunday schools in junior departments.

Such an array of material for a missionary anniversary has never before been available. All our churches should be given chance to feel the inspiration and uplift. Three months—from January 1 to March 23—will give pastors and workers a splendid chance to educate every church and awaken it.

In the second place, early in April, at a date to be announced later, our Japan Mission and Japanese Conference will celebrate the completion of twenty-five years of our missionary work in Japan, and will hold the celebration at Ishinomaki, our first station, and the place where our first Japanese church was organized by Rev. D. F. Jones. Special historical matter will be prepared for this occasion; handsome cherry blossom souvenirs will be on sale at the Mission Rooms in Dayton; the President of the Japanese Conference has sent an invitation to everybody who can and will to go to Japan for the celebration; and the brotherhood will be asked to observe the celebration week by special prayer for the Japan work. This occasion will afford all our churches a fine opportunity for getting information about our foreign work, and enlisting our brotherhood for a forward movement.

In the third place, our Conference Budget Missionary plan will be just the thing to turn the education and inspiration into money for the missionary work. We are much pleased with the hearty response given the plan, and believe that the hearty practice of it will put us far ahead in the missionary work. Special blanks, and other helps will be ready about January 1.

Our three-fold campaign will, we are sure, appeal to our people, and we earnestly urge every pastor to do his best to enlist the members and congregations for the missionary cause.

There will be special Livingstone editions for the Sunday school periodicals of the Christian Publishing Association. We hope that the Christian Sun, Herald of Gospel Liberty, Christian Vanguard and Christian Missionary will all issue Livingstone editions.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AMONG US.

We give below a part of the Report on Education to the Eastern Virginia Conference, because it is so pointed:

"In this country emphasis is laid more and more on physical and scientific education; hence the necessity for religious training increases year by year. It was this fault that wrought the downfall of Greece, and Christianity only saved Rome from a similar fate.

"Everywhere now school buildings are erected according to improved designs, and the nation is taxing itself liberally to provide for the education of the rising generation. Gymnasiums and mental athletics develop the body and the mind, and often leave the heart shriveled and untrained. The next generation will need stronger character foundations than the past generation, and church school occupy the place of largest opportunity for rounding out educational processes into full orb'd men and women.

"College men and women naturally become the teachers, exemplars, and leaders of human society, and they should be strong in body, mind, and heart. Elon College undertakes the hereculean task of developing the whole being of students and training them for work, citizenship, and Christian service.

"A new dormitory and standard gymnasium, combined, is under course of construction; new club houses for cheaper living for male and female students are already in successful operation; thirteen new pianos have been placed in the Music Department; Library and Reading Rooms have been greatly improved; Literary Halls and class rooms are in convenient and elegant condition; the Faculty is competent, devoted to the work, and loyal to the President; the student body of three hundred is well behaved and studious; the church services and religious organizations are active and spiritual; a homogeneous community is grouped around the institution; and all these furnish ideal conditions for young life and complete education.

"The Fifty-thousand-dollar special fund referred to in our last report has been fully subscribed, and is being paid by annual installments, but the erection of two new buildings, one of which is sixty by one hundred and twenty feet, three stories high, and containing gymnasium and dormitories for men, will probably cost more than $15,000.00; so necessities arise with new contributions, but the liberality of the church increases and the outlook brightens."

Presented by Rev. W. W. Staley, Chr.

THE EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

This is the second largest Conference, numerically, of the Southern Christian Convention. The 19th annual session held recently at Pleasant Union, Lillington, N. C. was possibly the best in the history of the body. The church and community did themselves credit and the conference honor in their most hospitable manner of entertainment.

Home Mission work is receiving more attention than any other enterprise of church work. Three points in town and several in the country are being aided by conference. Raleigh, Henderson and Chapel Hill were given liberal appropriation and the work at each point is prospering. Raleigh is now self supporting, so far as current expenses are concerned, the appropriation to this point being oc-sioned by the improvements to building. These improvements are to cost ten thousand dollars and when completed we have us a modern house of worship in the capital city that will be a credit to the Christians of the State.

The church building at Chapel Hill is in course of construction. It is to be a modern brick building. Rev. W. G. Henderson, the Chairman of the Home Mission Board of Conference is pastor of our church and expects to have the new house of worship completed before the next annual Conference.

The Laymen's Missionary Association has started three years ago, and is destined to become a powerful factor in the work of the Conference. The annual meetings are held during the session of Conference. The membership fee is $5.00 per year.

Jesse Franks of McCullers is Pres., D. Gunter, Sanford, Sec. and W. B. Mann, Raleigh, Treas. Ten new members were received recently, making thirty-five. One hundred dollars was appropriated to Henderson to pay on indebtedness.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Board reported that some progress had been made in organizing local societies. Mrs. L. F. Johnson, Mrs. La Smith, and Mrs. Sallie Cole constitute this board.

The board hopes to organize a Society in each church and this can be done with the assistance of the pastor. Each pastor is pledged to preach a special missionary sermon sometime during the year in which the plan and purpose of the Laymen's Missionary Association and the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Board are to be brought before the people. The Sec. of Conference will supply the ministers with such information as is needful to do this.

The next annual session of the body will be held with Mt. Auburn church, Warren Ct., commencing on Thursday before the second Sunday in November. Sunday is to be the mission day. Sermons on home and foreign missions will be preached by our ablest men in these lands.

A SPECIAL VISIT.

Some days ago after walking out in these perfectly beautiful days, admiring the incomparable picture which nature's brush had so wonderfully painted for the admiration of all who love the beautiful and sublime, and the golden sunlight days seemed to say farewell forever to the past hot summer, and as twilight was coming fast on the way, I received a message from Mrs. Diza A. Brantly of Courtland, Va. The message read like this: "Come and see me once more in my time. I am feeble and desire to see you more and more." This is the dear old woman who nursed me from infancy up to boyhood. I took the next train and gladly went to visit her home, for I loved her next to my mother, because she was always gentle, kind and lovable and had done so much for me. She nursed me with so much tenderness, love and devotion that my affections were boundless in her great loving heart, for she had a heart full of sympathy and love. The dear old precious lady met me at the old yard gate and gave me a splendid reception in her kind pleasant home.

She is 94 years old, and is very active and strong, with a very retentive mind. With her naturally pleasant, and entertaining manners, I was restful and at home, listening with delighted interest as she recounted the eventful happy days of childhood. It will be so delightful to remember her splendid entertainment in her simple pleasant home. She remembered me with special gifts which I greatly appreciate and gratefully accepted from her loving heart and tender hand, and in consideration of which she has my profound gratitude and best love.

CONSHOHOCKEN LETTER.

Our nine days revival services, with one week of "Union" revival services, at the Gulph Mills Church resulted in twenty four professions of faith in Christ. There have been three additions to church membership and others have expressed a purpose to unite soon. This week the union revival services will be continued at the Baligomongo Baptist Church. Congregations yesterday were good and interest encouraging.

Last Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mr. Henderson Davis near our church the writer united in marriage Miss Winona Davis and Mr. Frank Coffin of Radnor, Pa. The groom is a popular contractor and the bride is a very popular singer and soloist of this country. The marriage was a very quiet affair and after the ceremony they drove to their future home near Radnor. They carry with them the best wishes of their friends in their new relation. The Lord bless and give them peace, joy and happiness.

Some one has recently repeated the question, "How can we know that we love God?" It is an important question. There are some rules which I believe are of universal application. We cannot see God as something tangible. "God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

I know that I love God because I love the attributes of God. Some of God's attributes are Justice, Righteousness, Holiness, Unity, Love. "God is Love." I know I love God because I love the requirements of His Word and the guidance of His Spirit.

On Thanksgiving day "Union Thanksgiving services" were held at the Free-will Baptist Church, the writer preached the sermon. The tide of cooperation among the denominations in this vicinity is moving upward and onward. This country never before so much needed a united church to meet the foe as just now. The fact that during the past ten years, the most splendid period of opportunity the church has ever had, she simply held her own, should cause God's people to stir themselves to greater effort. The tide of sin is gathering new power with every year.

HEADACHE MEDICINE.

The powders, tablets and capsules so frequently taken for headache induce drug habits. He who takes them is a drug fiend. He may not relish the association, but he belongs with the "coke" fiend, the morphine "dope," and the whiskey soak.

Occasionally a large dose of "Headache" medicine kills suddenly by overwhelming vital nerve centers, but these causes are not so frequent as not to be the principal reason for not using the drugs.

The main reason for not using them is that they harm the blood cells in such a way that they cannot properly carry oxygen to the cells of the body, nor can they carry away body wastes.

The alcohol fiend may shoot up the town, and the morphine fiend may steal to get his drug. The headache medicine fiend has no disposition to bother anybody.

A man is frequently justified in taking a dose of such medicine for the relief of a headache, but the circumstances must be exceptional. Whenever they become regular the man had better by far er, whom to know was to love, and we feel she will be greatly missed in our combined.

He must fight it out some time, and he had better fight it out while the water is shallow. To take headache medicine and let it go at that is constantly drifting him towards water over his head.—N. C. State Board.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Please write it 1913.

—A happy new year to one and all of our readers.

—Read about the Portable Church by Dr. A. W. Lightbourne on page 4 this week.

—Rev. J. W. Wellons has been unwell several days, but is reported better at this writing.

—Make one good new year's resolution, and then keep it. That will be a great victory for one year.

—Make the year 1913 a better and happier year than 1912 was. It can be done in this way: be better yourself, and seek to make others happy.

—Elon College opens for the second term of the present session Friday, January 3. An increased enrollment is expected.

—Dr. P. W. McReynolds, President of Defiance College, was a welcome visitor at Elon College last Monday. He is away on vacation, and is taking a needed rest sight seeing through the South.

—How will this do for a New Year's resolution: Read at least one chapter in the Bible every day in the year 1913. That will not require much time, but will mean much in character building.

—Thirty-eight of the forty men who were being tried at Indianapolis for conspiracy in dynamiting many buildings and destroying many lives, were found guilty and are to serve time in a federal prison.

—Rev. J. W. Holt's Union Ridge congregation seem bent upon making him feel happy, and showing their appreciation of his valued services. He notes elsewhere his pounding which reached us just too late for last issue.

—How grateful we were for the many cards, beautiful, green, golden, merry, cheerful, that we received from friends Christmas. The world is much better and hearts are gladder and homes brighter because of Christmas.

—President-elect Woodrow Wilson last Saturday, December 28, celebrated the 56th anniversary of his birth at the place of his nativity, Staunton, Va. Immense throngs of people gathered to do honor to the eighth son of the Old Dominion to be made president of the United States.

—Bro. C. A. Hines, editor of our Young People's Department, has something to say this week that will interest Sunday school superintendents as well as Christian Endeavor workers. In fact his department this week is of special and practical interest, and his New Year's resolution will attract.

—Dr. Staley's Suffolk Letter—his

Christmas carol—though a week late is a prose poem, a Christmas classic, a song of the heart, which is as sacred and as sweet after Christmas as before. I believe Dr. Staley could write about a hot June day, and make it interesting, in February; or a cold, dreary one, and make you shiver from it in July.

—Good Doctor Barrett of the Herald of Gospel Liberty has not come along yet with his explanation of the present deplorable condition of our Missionary situation, or why we have fewer missionaries now than we had five years ago and the mission treasury is in as bad shape now as then, and during that time no new missionaries have been sent out, but we presume he will.

—The pastors' of the N. C. and Va. Conference are called to meet at Elon College, N. C., Tuesday, January 7, 1913 at 9:30 A. M., for a conference on church problems as provided by the last session of Conference at Greensboro. The program was printed in full in The Sun of December 11 and it is hoped there will be a full attendance of the ministers of the Conference.

—The women of Moore's Union church, Jonesboro, N. C., R. 2, have organized a Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society. Now if all other churches will do likewise it will be well. Then let the women start a mission study class in every society and it will not be long before our people will know something about missions. And when they know they will act.

—Rev. J. O. Cox, Durham, N. C., is a visitor at Elon College this week. Bro. Cox has done a great work in the financial interests of our Durham church in particular the past year, and is to be congratulated upon his achievements. Some people think that preachers are the poorest financiers in the world whereas they are the best considering the amount of finances they have to handle.

—Rev. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., is to come to Elon College Monday after 4th Sunday in January to begin a series of evangelistic meetings. Bro. Rowland has conducted, and very successfully, such meetings here before and will be greeted with glad welcome by large, expectant and intelligent audiences. Many lives are touched and turned by these meetings at Elon, and prayers should be many and earnest that Bro. Rowland may have free access to the hearts of all who hear him.

—Mt. Auburn church, Manson, N. C. where the Eastern N. C. Conference is to meet next year is erecting a new and handsome house of worship. This is well, for the former house was too small, and wholly incapacitated for the great congregations that gather there. Rev. C. E. Newman is the pastor, and no minister could ever hope for a better and more considerate people to serve.

—The following which we acknowledge with appreciation will be of interest to many Sun readers: "Mr. and Mrs. Wadrock Henry Dick announce the marriage of their daughter, Nancy, to Mr. Robert Henry Barnes, Thursday, 26th December, 1912, Suffolk, Va. At home after the 10th of January, 404 Blawie Avenue, Greensboro, N. C." We wish this popular and widely known pair a happy married life.

—Why in the world can't all our dear readers do like our good brother, A. M. House, Franklinton, N. C., namely, send in their renewal and write with it such cheering words as he sends, to this good effect "Dear Bro. Editor: I hope you will pardon me for not renewing to The Sun before now. It was not because I do not like the dear paper. Long may it live and prosper and may it continue to shine brighter and brighter as the years go by. Should I ever fail to send in my renewal when it becomes due you may know that it is for lack of means, not interest in the paper." Thank you, brother. May your kind multiply in this world below.

—We learn with deep sorrow of the death of Mrs. Susie S. Parker, of Cypress Chapel, Nansemond Co., Va., which sad event occurred at the Parker home on the morning of December 27. We accord heartily in the words of an exchange which says "The Parker home was celebrated throughout Nansemond County for its hospitality and Mrs. Parker was a woman of rare qualities of mind and heart." We shared the lavish hospitality of this home when the Eastern Va. Conference was at Cypress Chapel a few years ago, and remember well how graciously all guests were entertained. A most excellent and amiable Christian character has reaped its reward. We sympathize deeply with her fond husband, our good friend, Frank Parker, and his son and daughter. May God comfort them.

—Editor Harris of The Charlotte Observer gives President Taft's schedule for a year or more after leaving the White House. The Colonel usually gets his facts about right, so we pass them on in this case;

"Immediately after turning over the White House to Mr. Wilson, on March 4, Citizen Taft will start for Augusta, Ga., where he will remain until Spring. Then he will go to Canada to stay until Fall when he will go to California to await the beginning of the collegiate year at Yale, when he will take up the Kent professorship. At the beginning of the Yale vacation in 1914, Professor Taft will start on a tour of the world in the interest of universal peace. All of which is better than bottling himself up in that little old law office in Cincinnati."

—Our Southern Christian Publishing Company certainly owns a beautiful house and in a most desirable locality. It is a handsome two story brick building, grey pressed brick and French-plate glass front, facing the railroad only a hundred feet distant. The building is nearly finished, and is pushing on. The brick work is done, the ceiling, sub-floors and covering are all on.

It is a valuable piece of property of which, we believe, every stock holder would be proud. There are twelve living rooms of good size to let above: the lower floor has a wide room for printing purposes and two rooms for offices. But for unavoidable delay in getting building material the building would have been complete a month ago. But it is a handsome and valuable piece of property all right, now that it is up and can be seen in its entirety, and money has come in fast enough to pay and discount all bills.

—Dr. W. W. Staley said once he was half in notion to get us up a pounding, and would do so if we would agree to give him ten per cent. of all he got for us. But an editor's pounding must come fair and square, or not at all. And so here it is. One of Dr. Staley's great and good members, our noble friend Brother A. T. Holland has sent us a whole bulging bountiful bag of Holland and Lee's best and brightest peanuts for Christmas. Now that is business. We are as happy and thankful as we can be. And there is no ten per cent. rebate going to anybody. This is not the first time Bro. Holland has remembered us thus. Last year he sent a bag which came while we were away and the President of Elon College without our knowledge or consent took for his, and his good wife's own use, a bushel of them, for which we have never forgiven him. But we will see that Bro. Holland's timely gift is put in the right cellar this time; and how the editor and his family will parch and pop good old Eastern Va. peanuts will be a caution. We do not know whether the above is a very good note of thanks or not, but it shows the trend of our thoughts, and we are happy over the good gift.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Christmas commemorates an event rather than a time. The date is not so important as the fact. Let critics war over dates and theologians over the celebration of the day; the spirit of the event will still remain. Jew and Gentile share alike in the revenue from its observance, and the significance of the manger story gathers strength from age to age. It is not kept alive by law or gospel: it is the inherent expression of the gospel itself. Never while baby cries or mother prays will Christmas vanish from the thought and observance of man. It is the spirit of Bethlehem filling every place and every home with thought of the Son of God. The angel song no more dies than sunlight dies because the sun seems to set. The sun follows its own shadows around the globe. Angels sing and toilers hear their praises around the world. The joy of that Judean night has multiplied itself on a thousand hills, and glad as those shepherds were, when they told what they had seen and heard, are the uncounted children who run to and fro to show and tell what Santa Claus has brought. Every Christmas present comes on angelic wings of love.

Christmas wakes up a sleeping world. It hushes the grinding wheels of toil. It lightens the load of millions of hearts. Care hides herself when Christmas comes. Age feels young, and children are as rich as men. The air trembles with laughter and night shines without the stars. Christians measure the gifts of God, and wicked men immerse themselves in self-indulgence forgetful of His care. But the idea the spirit, the fact, the tremendous impulse of Christmas, moves on toward a more intelligent, more spiritual observance of the day. Revelry desecrates the event, degrades the revelers, and mars the significance of the advent of the world's Redeemer. But it will not always be so. Bethlehem's star will some day shine in an unclouded sky and angels or men will sing praises in an undefiled air. Then earth's toilers will rejoice and have glad news to tell their fellows, and the reign of peace will begin on earth. Capital and Labor are Siamese twins and the pain of one is the pain of the other, and the death of one is the death of the other. They cannot separate without the death of both; and mutual affection only can make either happy. Jesus came to bring peace among men and joy among angels. Babies bring angels to earth though the cradle is a manger. Gold, frankincense, and myrrh, wisdom and homage are all laid at the feet of the child. "Despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." The greatest night in time up to the night when Jesus was born was that night when the Judean hills echoed the song of angels and the hurried tramp of shepherd feet to the stall in Bethlehem, where they found the newborn King; but millions will be happy on this Christmas of 1912 where one was happy on that first Christmas day. That child has filled the childhood of the world with multitudinous joy. Peeping out from silken covers of down, or quilts patched out of worn garments by horny fingers, little eyes in millions of homes gleam with delight as they look for the plump silk hose or darned stockings on the wall. The pencils of light that fall across rosy faces on Christmas morn reveal happier hearts than the lights on Belshazzar's banquet hall. Hush! I hear the heart beats of millions of children dreaming of Christmas morn. The lights are all out. The house is still, save the beating of anxious hearts. Hark! the grey dawn mantles the world with the slow but sure light of the rising sun. The stars fade away into the white light of the new day. A million eyes open and a million bare feet press the carpet or the bare floor. It is Christmas morning. The shout of infant voices fills the world. Parents look out with tear-filled eyes of joy and hear the story of Santa Claus again. The armies of Alexander, of Xerxes, of Marius, of Napoleon, pale in numbers and power before this army of grateful childhood. Gladness fills the world. The tin horn leads the procession of triumph through the streets of a conquered world. "Joy to the world, the Lord is come." Would you believe it? the Prince of Peace already reigns. To be sure, some men will turn this glad week into debauchery and reel to their homes or to the prison house with no sense of gratitude or word of praise; but humanity moves on toward the time when every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess the name of Jesus Christ.

FORLINES-WILLIAMSON.

At the residence of the bride's father, W. H. Williamson, Mecklenburg County, Va., Dec. 14, 1912, this writer united in marriage Mr. A. C. Forlines and Miss Gela O. Williamson. Quite a company assembled to witness the marriage and partake of the sumptuous supper that followed.

The popularity of these young people is attested by the number and value of the presents received. Both are active church workers at Hebron Church. May Heaven's blessings attend them through life.

Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor.

This department under the direction of Young People's General Convention. Frequent news items from Sunday schools, organized classes, and C. E. societies are desired. If you are interested in either or about to organize, address the department's editor,

CHARLES A. HINES, Editor and Cor. Sec.,

Greensboro, N. C.

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

The editor of this department has made for one of his New Year's resolutions the decision to have this department more practical than it has been heretofore.

To this end he will try to publish things that will really assist in making more attractive Christian Endeavor meetings and more interesting the weekly study of the Bible in the Sunday school.

Much that will be printed here will not be original. The editor does not claim to be wiser than men who give all of their time to Sunday school work, for he must make his living in another way, and gathers items for this department in his leisure hours.

Beginning with this issue, there will be published weekly some suggestions to Sunday school superintendents for making the opening and closing exercises attractive and interesting. This material is suggested by "The Sunday School Executive" (published by the David C. Cook Pub. Co.)

Again we wish to urge upon our people the necessity of frequent news items from Sunday schools, organized classes, teacher training classes and C. E. Societies. Will you not help to make the New Year a good one for this department?

WHAT ABOUT YOUR PLANS?

Will you have a little better system in your school next year, a little more attractive opening and closing exercises, more teachers' helps, brighter and better lesson helps for the little folks—or will you continue to follow on in the beaten path—the path that eventually makes a rut?

This question ought to reach every Sunday school officer and teacher and be pondered over by him. I shall not try to tell you what you should do. I want you to work out the details for yourself. This I know that your Sunday school organization is not an ideal one, and there is room for improvement. Will you make this improvement? Will you make progress?

FOR THE SUPERINTENDENT.

Some Suggestions for the Sunday School

Lesson, January 5.

Topic: "The Creation."

Golden Text: "In the beginning God created the Heavens and the Earth."

Introduction: During 1912 our lessons were from the New Testament; this year they are from the Old Testament, beginning with the very first verse in the Bible. Last year we studied of Jesus. His coming was the gateway from Ancient to Modern history. Now we step back into the misty morning of God's kingdom, and again endeavor to fathom the wonders of creation, life, time, eternity.

Illustrations: Suppose I had before me a bar of iron weighing one pound. Out of this I can make a variety of things such as needles, nails, scissors, and so on. But note very particularly, that in order to make those various articles I must have the pound of iron, as material, to start with. This pound of iron I cannot make. The question then is this: Where did the iron ore itself come from? Who made it? Ah, here comes out the infinite difference between man and God: Man is only a builder, constructing with materials. God creates; man fashions. Thus this word "create" is the divinest word in language, human or angelic.

Wise Dr. Beattie one day in springtime smoothed off a little plot in his garden. In the mold his finger traced the initials of his little boy's name. Then he sowed garden cress in the furrows thus made and covered the seed and smoothed the ground. Not many days after the little boy came running to his father with great delight, saying, "Somebody has planted my name in the garden." The father appeared to doubt this, and when the son led him to the place and showed him his own initials in the shining green, he said, "Oh, I guess that just happened." "No, no," said the child, "somebody did it. Maybe you." Then said the father, "Look at the birds, fitted with wings that they may fly in the air. Look at the trees, fitted with roots for the ground, limbs and leaves for the air. Look at yourself, your fingers, your feet, all fitted for just what they are to do. Can anyone make you believe 'it just happened'?" "No, no, no," cried the boy, "God made the world, God made me."

QUESTIONS.

1. From what part of the Bible do we study this year?
2. What does "Genesis" mean? (Beginning.)
3. Of what beginning does Genesis tell?

4. Who, alone, never had a beginning?

5. How many kinds of life did God create? (Vegetable and Animal.)

6. What is the difference between the two?

Lesson Announcement: To-day's lesson told the wonderful story of the beginnings of the earth, the sea and the living creatures in them.

Next Sunday's lesson is another part of the creation story, and tells of the first man and woman to live in the finished world.

I wish the boys and girls would notice as they go about the streets this week how our towns and our surroundings are different from the surroundings of the first people who lived on earth. Then see if you can be ready next Sunday to tell why we have so much more than those people had when the world was first given to them.

A RESOLUTION MEETING.

Notes on Christian Endeavor Topic for Jan. 5—The Ideal Christian. 1. His Consecration." Mark 12:28-34.

The leader, just before reading the lesson, should call attention to the fact that this is the first of a new series of consecration meetings, running throughout the first Sundays of every month of 1913. The first of the meetings deals with the fundamental of Christian life, Consecration.

Make the meeting a consecrated one indeed. Have expressions from every one. Let the prayers be consecrated.

LEADER'S OPENING TALK (IN OUTLINE.)

What consecration is: the yielding of all we have and are to the will of God. It does not mean giving up anything, necessarily, but it means the entire readiness to give up anything and everything. It is the opposite of selfishness. For example, if our money is consecrated, the fact does not decide for us whether we shall give anything to missions, or how much. It decides that we shall keep our hearts open to God's will regarding our money, and that if we hear God telling us to give it to missions, we shall be eager to give it, and long to give more of it, that we may please Him. Consecration is first of all indefinite. It is a matter of the will. It includes everything, and does not stop to consider any one thing. But consecration is not real, it is only a pretence, if it does not go on to very definite things, leading us to use this and that possession, this and that power, in God's service. This meeting, therefore, is to be filled with definite expressions of yielding to God. We shall express, in general, our purpose to serve Him, but also, in particular, our purpose to serve Him in some definite gift. So let every one that takes part be sure, before he is through, to name some one definite point of consecration upon which he has decided for the coming year; only one, however, since there are so many to speak, and the theme is endless.

- THE ROLL CALL.
- As the roll is called, let members speak upon the following topics. If more are needed, they can be readily added to by the leader and assigned in advance:
- Consecration of Time.
 - Consecration of Money.
 - Consecration of Home.
 - Consecration of Intellect.
 - Consecration of Skill.
 - Consecration of Imagination.
 - Consecration of Books.
 - Consecration of Ambition.
 - Consecration of Friendship.
 - Consecration of Speech.
 - Consecration of Talent.
 - Consecration of Hands.
 - Consecration of Courage.

MEMORIAL CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

Peacefully and triumphantly Edward I. Brickhouse passed away Saturday evening, November 16, 1912 at his residence 131 Lovitt Ave. Norfolk, Va. It was after months of illness with the best of medical attention and a stay of weeks at Clifton Springs, N. Y. where he hoped to recover his health. But it was in vain and the gentle spirit took its flight with the members of the family standing at his bedside. When the Father calls, all the waters of Virginia's springs, skillful physicians, health sanitariums, and loving friends cannot hold us back.

He was sixty-two years of age and had spent nearly all his life in Norfolk, the first eight years of his boyhood life being spent on the eastern shore of Virginia.

In 1875 he was married to Miss Margaret E. Haynes from near Norfolk and three children were born to them: Thomas E., Mrs. G. F. Birdsong, and Miss Fannie. In 1880 the wife and mother was taken from them. In 1883 he was united in marriage with Miss Lula F. Haynes, a sister of his former wife, and two children have been born to them: Miss Margaret and Edward Jr.

All the family live in Norfolk and faithfully and lovingly ministered to him through his illness. They have lost from their earthly presence a devoted and loving father. Besides the widow and children there are three grandchildren and one brother, Ryland Brickhouse, of the immediate family. They are a noble family, intensely interested in the church, and will cherish the memory of their father and husband with loving deeds.

For many years brother Brickhouse has been a trustee of the Memorial Christian Temple, and was a member of the Official Board of the church. He was highly respected by the church, and they have a deep appreciation of all that has been done so generously for the church which he loved. He was a most generous supporter of the work, and will be missed so much not only because of his financial help, but in counsel, and suggestion, and kindly spirit. The church will delight to cherish his memory.

He was a good neighbor and solid citizen ever looking for the best things, and highest ideals. He had many friends and the large home was filled to overflowing at the funeral service which was held at his residence Monday afternoon. The room and the casket were a literal bower of flowers laid by loving hands and tender hearts.

The services were conducted by his pastor, the writer, and the mortal part was laid away at Elmwood at the setting of the sun. May the Heavenly Father comfort and sustain the devoted wife, and lead the family into multiplied fields of usefulness in the church and community.

THE WHAT OF MISSIONS.

By Mrs. J. J. LINCOLN.

It is all too prevalent a notion that Missions mean money. Why, as a rule, at the very mention of the word 'Missions' or 'Missionary' people's minds at once revert to the question of dollars. They say—That means I am to be called upon to give some of my hard-earned coin; and they will absent themselves from a missionary meeting, or take the pains to empty their pockets before going, for fear of being persuaded to part with their treasure (?) Beware! For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also, says Jesus. Brother, sister, if your treasure is in the pocket, handbag, bank, your heart is there too, and is not that clearly a case of dislocation? Your doctor will tell you that dislocated heart is dangerous, fatal.

Money is unquestionably a factor, an indispensable factor, in missionary work; but, my friends, it is not the first essential, nor should its consideration constitute the controlling motive, in our effort to campaign to a successful issue the great missionary wave which so lately has struck the Christian church. Missions means giving, that is true, but giving what? giving service, giving ourselves. When we have done that, we do not wait to be asked for money; it follows as naturally as water flows through a pipe connected with the water-main. But there must be connection. Only from the great source of power, God Himself, proceeds the propelling, vitalising current. If operations are to be effectual, our heart must be linked to the great heart of God in such a way that our purpose and labors shall be one with Christ Jesus whom the Father sent as the fulfilment of His promise to Abraham that in him should all the nations of the earth be blessed, and in accordance with Jesus' command—Go ye.

A PORTABLE CHURCH.

Through the kindness and promptness of the Home Mission Department of the Southern Christian Convention, the Delmarvia Christian Conference is now in possession of the only Portable Church building in the world. This is not a tent the construction of its splendid new steel built of the same material that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is using in the construction of its splendid new steel passenger coaches. It is absolutely fire-proof. It is as comfortable in winter as in summer, and as cool in summer as it is warm and weather-proof in winter. It will accommodate 300 without crowding, and by using chairs affords a fine floor space for social gatherings, and makes possible any sort of class formation in graded Sunday school work.

We expect to open our portable church to the public at Magnolia, Del., next Sunday afternoon. This will be a Christmas service, with a sermon by the writer and music by my Dover choir and male quartette, rendering the same music given in the People's Church in the morning. I will endeavor to send you a report of this notable occasion. This is the realization of one of my fondest dreams. The taking of the message of God to the people. Christianity in motion. The Gospel on wheels. The making available to neglected localities all that is needed to regenerate, educate, and elevate the masses. The bringing to the people of all classes the pleasing and refining influences of social relations and intercourse under the directions and guardianship of the church. The making our young people content with life in the country and small town, and saving them from the baleful lures of the city, by furnishing them with wholesome diversion and opportunities for proper and necessary emotional expression through the social functions of the church. These are a few of the features constituting the mission of the Portable Church.

There is every indication that a number of these portable steel church buildings will be sent out in the very near future. My heart is made to rejoice over this cheering omen of the hastening day when the knowledge of our Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the deep.

GREENSBORO.

Last night Dec. 25 our Sunday school held "A Country Store," for the benefit of the children.

Our school here has a plan all the year which results into "A Country Store," at Christmas. Each attendance every Sunday through the year is given a card signed by the Superintendent. This card is worth one half cent at the "Store." At the end of each quarter every scholar who has not missed a Sunday during the quarter is awarded a card worth five cents at the "store."

Last night the store was ready, arranged in booths in the basement of the church, and the children, and grown-ups too, were ready each with their pack of cards; some with fifty-two and with blue cards too, others with less, down to ten.

At 7:15 o'clock previous to the opening of the "Store" at eight, missionary services appropriate to Christmas were held in the auditorium. This service was adapted to the children. Each song was of Christ and familiar to all, and was introduced with some story connected with it, having a setting in the mission field. A letter of Christmas-time, written by James Gilmour, from China, to his two sons in Scotland, was read by Miss Annie Lee Clymer. The pastor interspersed the music with stories of Christmas in Missouri, and Korea. The service, though simple, was suggestive and we trust helpful. (Our Christmas service of song and prayer and praise, by the church, was held Sunday morning).

At the close of the service, the school filed by classes into the basement where there was much fun and merry-making in the purchases made with the cards.

But to "Top the climax,"—some folks were permitted to carry some things away they neither bought nor deserved. Brother R. S. Petty called the pastor and his wife to a barrel of apples presumably to invite them to help themselves. Having arrived at the barrel, the people were called to "quiet." It was a little hard to do and the pastor innocently endeavored to assist in securing order, and even he had to be asked to keep quiet. When all was quiet, Brother Petty made a brief and happy speech on behalf of pastor and wife. The folding doors to a class room near by were swung open and we were introduced to "Santa Claus,"—"A Pounding," of the old fashioned sort, the heartiest sort: cans and cans of peaches, and pickles, all sorts of good canned goods, ham, butter, preserves, fresh meats, flour, coffee, salt, soups, potatoes, pumpkins, and spice, and everything, nice;—Wasn't that nice? Well, I would think!

FOR YOUR EYE.

Dear Subscribers:—

Your attention was called to the fact two weeks ago, that, complying with the requirements of the law, we were compelled to discontinue the paper to all subscribers who are one year or more in arrears. We have made a list of such names, and the work of taking them from the list, and entering up the amounts due must follow. We dislike to have this to do, but the law commands and we must obey. Besides, we ask you to consider, is it right for you to add to the burdens of the publisher by withholding what is due him? These items are small when considered separately, but the total makes it burdensome for one man to carry.

If you fail to respond to these calls, do not blame us when your paper fails to make its weekly visits to your home.

If other information is desired, write us.

Yours truly,

Whereas God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst to His kingdom above our beloved and highly esteemed sister, Mrs. Annie Showalter, therefore be it resolved;

1. That by her death Antioch Christian Church has lost a faithful and devoted member; the community a kind neighbor who was without a known enemy; the husband and children a most tender and devoted wife and mother.

2. That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, and pray that the religion which she so nobly professed and lived may be the comfort of those who are left to mourn her departure,

REV. EMORY M. CARTER.

Superintendent Christian Orphanage.

(Former student in Elon College, and ordained minister of the Alabama Christian Conference. His duties as Superintendent began December 1, 1912.)

Dear Children and Friends:

It seems that the cousins have gone into winter quarters from the number of letters we have had for the past few weeks. I wonder if we could do something to increase the interest in this department, for it is too bad to allow the corner to go that way. I have thought may be it might be well for some of our older cousins to write on some subject or about a book which they have read or a good story that would draw us out. The ground hog goes in when he sees his shadow, but we are creatures of the light and love to travel most when the sun shines.

I hope the Christmas holidays have passed off safely and no one has been hurt, either at play or eating the good things which "Santa" brought. We are up and getting along nicely. I think every one of us has certainly enjoyed Christmas. We could not do otherwise when so many people have remembered us so bountifully. We have been disappointed somewhat because the oysters sent by Bro. M. J. W. White of Norfolk and the two boxes of oranges sent by Bro. T. E. Brickhouse did not reach us by Christmas day, but we will enjoy them when they do get here.

We have had two visits this week which did us good; one by Bro. Turrentine, of Burlington, who drove up to our door Monday morning with a buggy load. Bro. Turrentine is a systematic man; and when we had brought the articles as listed elsewhere into the office, your unworthy superintendent was encouraged by his faithful sayings, as he represented those among our best friends. He says that this home would have every thing it needs if all the schools would do in a systematic way what they can.

The other was a visit by two of the brethren from New Providence, Graham, who brought two barrels, the contents being apples, oranges, potatoes, etc.

In the last report there were some mistakes in the accounts sent in by two of the churches; that of Burton's Grove, which sent $5.05 but the report only gives $1.40. The other was Shallow Ford, which sent $4.45 and was only credited in The Sun with $4.25. My duplicate copy shows the correct amounts. I shall give you credit for all moneys received and handle them to the best interests of the institution.

A number of the children are away visiting their people during Christmas and we hope they are having a good time, and I feel sure they are. They will return in time to enter school the first day.

Wishing all the cousins and friends a happy New Year, I am cordially, Uncle Emory.

NORFOLK LETTER.

A handsome Prince Albert suit, a five dollar hat, a pair of gloves, a beautiful white silk tie, a dress-shirt, and a set of gold-mounted shirt-studs; how is this for a Christmas present from the members of the Third Church to their pastor. The gift was made quietly, modestly and unostentatiously, after the manner in which the people of the Third Church are given to doing all their work. And yet, we venture to say that not many pastors in any church regardless of denomination received anything nicer. We shall say nothing at present as to the extent of our appreciation of this gracious kindness, but will try to make it manifest by our efforts to better serve them in the New Year.

It is a good, sound and prudent policy in religion as well as in business to be mistrustful of apparent growth and success until it has been shown by time to be the real thing, and yet we feel encouraged upon account of the fact that the growth of our Sunday-school and congregations has made an addition to our present building necessary. This addition will take the form of three new class rooms added to the existing structure, and these can be opened up for the accommodation of the congregation during the regular services as may be required. "Slowly, cautiously, but surely" is the key-note of our policy here. In all our hoping and planning we are not taking too much for granted, but we know that whatever comes to us must be won by hard work and tireless, unflagging prayer and application. Work upon the new rooms was begun today, Monday, December 30th, just in time to forestall 1913 by a day or two.

To the genial, able editor of The Sun, to Drs. Staley and Harper, to Bro. Carter, the new Superintendent of the Orphanage, and to the ministers and members of the Christian Church everywhere both the pastor and people of the Third Church send hearty greetings and best wishes for the New Year.

Henry Spencer Booth.

THE FAMILY HOLY OF HOLIES.

Prayer is the dynamo of the soul. The prayer circle, the family altar, is the Holy of Holies of the home, a power house for illuminating and setting into activity the life of the home in the service of the Christ. But the children of tomorrow will not have this heritage of Protestantism. The family altar is largely disappearing from our American Christian homes. If we of America lose this heritage, we cannot measure the menace to the men of tomorrow.

The value of the family altar is recognized by at least one factory, which begins the day's work by summoning all the employees to a central hall, where music is given, and a bit of literature read, as an inspiration for the day's work. The public schools either have opening Bible lesson and prayer, or some musical exercises, as an inspiration for the day. The Christian Scientists have their morning Bible reading as the part of a daily regime. And Protestant missionary Christianity still sees that every family won to Christ on the foreign field erects a family altar. Shall we send for our missionaries to come home and rebuild our ruined altars? Or shall we remember the sacred past, take account of the missionary present, and conserve the future by rebuilding them ourselves?

The Church is a part of the home. We must teach our children that the Church is a part of the home. The first and best way to give this instruction is through the daily prayer circle: "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—N. Y. Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

IN HIS IMAGE.

God created man in his own image.
Genesis 1:27. Golden Text for Sunday
January 12.

God was well pleased, very well pleased, when He had created man. When he had finished other, and former, parts of His creation He said, according to the first chapter of Genesis, that it was good. But when He had created man, and given him dominion and authority and power in the earth He said it was very good. The most exalted, the most noble of all God's creation is not the great mountains, nor the mighty sea, nor the starry heavens, but man. On man God expended the highest ingenuity and the most prodigal outlay of His creative act. So much was required to make man in God's image. Whether you consider the delicate organism of man's body, the intricate activities of man's mind, or the matchless wonders of man's soul, in one or in all three, you must admit that man is the most wonderful of all God's creation.

In at least three particulars man is the most wonderful of all God's creation, and in each of these three particulars man is made in the image of God.

1st. While man is made of the dust of the earth he had breathed into him the breath of God and so became a living soul. Man alone of all God's creation has a soul, a spirit. In this he is the thing Wonderful, and in so far as he has spirit he is like God. God and man alone have spirit; man is endowed with spirit. On his spiritual side, in his spiritual essence and make up, man is in the image of God. The spiritually minded, those who live and act and think in a spiritual atmosphere become more and more like God. If we would bear more of the image stamp of God, have more of the divine impress upon us, be more like God, we must cultivate and develop the spiritual side of our natures. On one side we are of the earth, earthly, on the other we are of heaven, heavenly. We have a heavenly, a Godly nature, as well as an earthly or sensual nature. We may ascend and so become more like God, or we may descend and become less and less like Him.

2nd. Man alone of God's creation has authority and dominion and power over the earth. In his dominion and authority man is in the image of God. True God gave man this dominion and authority; but man has it and so is like God. Physically man is not the strongest of God's creatures, but he rules all, has subdued all, has sway and dominion over all the others nevertheless. We have fierce beasts of the field, but man rules and tames them; we have mighty steam engines, great derricks, immense machinery, but man must control and direct. In this role of rulership man is in the image of God.

3rd. Man alone is endowed with a moral soul and so has a will of his own. Man is a free agent. He is endowed of his God with the power to choose or refuse as he may deem wise and prudent. Man alone of all God's creatures, was given the power or free agency, endowed with the ability to exercise a will of his own. All other of God's creatures act under constraint and a law over which they have no control. Man is a law unto himself. Man was given of God a will of his own. With this will he may serve God or reject Him. In having a free will man is made in the image of God.

THE MISSIONARY SITUATION.

The more we think over the missionary situation the more of a puzzle it becomes to us. And viewed from any angle whatsoever the situation seems to us both alarming and deplorable. This writer is not seeking controversy, doesn't care a fig for fine spun explanations, and has no desire to bring in any personalities whatsoever. What appeals us is that fact which we found in The Herald of Gospel Liberty, and which has not been denied, and which we presume is well known everywhere amongst us, how to wit:

That this Christian church of ours has not sent out a missionary now for six years or more: that there are now not as many missionaries on the field as there were five years ago; that the field of our operations abroad is shrinking and not broadening; and that we are as deeply in debt now as we were five years ago, and going deeper in debt all the time. If that is not enough to alarm us, brethren, to make us hang our heads in shame, to make angels weep over us then nothing

There is no other branch of our church work that shows results comparable to these in the matter of retrogression and degeneracy, that we know any thing about.

We are told on the one hand that there are not suitable and acceptable men to send out, offering in these years for the mission field; if there were men the money could be got. That is deplorable for two reasons. First, it is a reflection on some who we happen to know have offered to go to foreign fields, but were not sent.

(And second, it shows the alarming lethargy and indifference into which we have fallen as touching the missionary situation to say, or to think, that not a man or woman suited to be a missionary has offered for the foreign service amongst us now for six years. If that indifference is not enough to cause grief and shame amongst us, what is? Have we quit praying for God to raise up missionaries amongst us, or has God turned a deaf ear for six years to our pleadings?

He are told that money is going into the treasury nicely, increasingly, hopefully. Well will somebody please tell us then why in the world can't the Board keep up as much building, and as many missionaries in the field, as did dear Doctor Bishop under his administration, with about half the sum, or for a part of the time on less than half according to the figures they give us.

Brethren, there is something vitally and deplorably wrong, and we might as well face it. Interest in foreign missions is at a low ebb, and from the stand point of both men and women and money being offered, it is growing less all the time.

No amount of explanation or apology can get around that. We are just drifting along; that is all. God cannot prosper a non-missionary people and keep His word. It is with us to say whether we shall be missionary or non-missionary. Doesn't any body care that the missionary debt increase, missionaries decrease, and members offering to go as missionaries disappear altogether. God from heaven help us.

THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Our people of the South have not undertaken in a decade a more important, inspiring and necessary undertaking than that of building and equipping a Publishing House. And we doubt if any work ever undertaken has met with such uniform sanction and approval, and with such ready sanction and support. Few indeed have been those who have been appealed to to take stock who have declined, and these few purely on financial ground. There is a feeling that the time and opportunity have met, and that this enterprise is bound to succeed and prosper.

It was at first decided to erect a small one story, one room building for printing purposes at a cost about $800. or $1,000. and spend $9,000. in equipment. The idea began to take root and to spread that this Publishing House was to be a permanent institution and one that would in all human probability grow into great proportions as the years went by, and that the stock holders would want a valuable and commodious plant. Lots were accordingly purchased in the most conspicuous place available and a handsome two story-brick building, gray-pressed brick and French-plate glass front, has been erected at a cost approximating $4,000. This money is well invested, and the rooms to let in the building should prove a constant source of income. But this withdrew some $3,000. from the original $9,000, which was to be spent in equipment. The directors therefore had to do one of three things. 1st. Use the building as an asset and borrow money for equipment. Or, 2nd, Purchase equipment largely on a credit. Or, 3rd, Raise more money by increasing the paid in capital from $10,000 to $15,000, and thus equip the building well and begin with a running capital for supplies. The last named plan was adopted and stock to the amount of $5,000 is now to be placed. A few hundred of this has already been spoken for and as soon as The Sun's editor is at liberty from a press of work here in the office to canvass amongst the brethren he is to find purchasers for the balance of this stock. It ought not to be difficult to place. Many of the best and most business-like men of the church have put their money in to this enterprise and are willing to put more into it if necessary to make it go. It is determined by all to make the investment safe, and develop the business into proportions that will pay.

And as a final word here, we have been able to secure the services of Mr. C. W. Montgomery, Troy, Ohio who comes this week to take charge of the mechanical side of the office work. Mr. Montgomery is a practical printer of thirty years' experience and we have recommendations and proofs that he is an expert at fine job printing, does the best grade of calligraphic work, and is in every way equipped to manage an office and make it pay. If space did not forbid we would give recommendations of him and his work from Rev. W. H. Demson, Norfolk, and Mr. Netum Rathbur of our C. P. A., Dayton; but this cannot be taken here. Suffice it to say that we believe we have found the man who will be safe, is to be depended on, and who will see to it that only the best work is turned off from our presses, and that a profit shall accrue to the house on all work done.

The directors are working with the determination that only the best class of work shall be done by the House, and that the House shall be a safe and sound business proposition from the beginning. No struggling, deep-in-debt, bankrupt institution can either do worthy work or reflect credit upon the church it represents or be a source of pride or profit to its share holders. To do the best, most creditable and useful work for the church the institution must pay, make a profit, and develop in power and proportions as the years pass. And this we know is the great desire and determination of those in charge of the Publishing House enterprise.

GOING TO JAPAN.

Miss Alice True, one of our missionaries in Japan writes a most interesting letter in this week's Sun "From Japan," and calls on us to open a column for subscriptions to get money to send a Southern man to go to Japan in April to the 25th anniversary of the beginning of our mission work in Japan. The spirit of Sister True's letter is beautiful and her motive the highest, but we do not feel that it is in our province to do the promiscuous begging, with the matter coming in the regular channel. If the Mission Board of the Southern Convention, or of the A. C. C. will authorize this and wish it done, we are at their command. Haphazard, individual and numerous pleas without official backing always struck us as puerile, impulsive and usually result in more harm than good to the work permanently, and church work, to mean anything has to be steady, progressive, permanent, not hysterical or spasmodic.

But another point is yet involved, and this is the more pertinent now. It seems to us if we mean business about our foreign mission situation the thing to inspire our missionaries and help the work in Japan is to send there more workers and more money for the work. To take money now from our mission treasury and pay some official's way over there and back strikes us as the height of folly, not to say madness. Of course any of us would love to have a gratuitous trip, a free trip to Japan and back, all expenses back. But who pray, amongst us, would have the heart to take this money and use it for our own pleasure and profit, while missionaries from amongst us are home on furlough and have no funds to go back on. I do not believe a man in all this Southern country could be hired, with all the money that could be raised to take this money and use it for his own pleasure, while that money is so sorely needed to support missionaries who are willing to go back and work if they could.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

North Carolina has a problem. Its solution rests with the State Legislature which assembles Wednesday of this week. Already the State owes nearly a million dollars on current expenses; but the time has come when the disgrace of our short public school term, for children in the rural districts must be lifted. New Mexico with its Indians and cow-boys, saves North Carolina the shame of being at the foot of the column of all the States in the length of her rural public school term. Standing at the head of the column is Rhode Island with a free school term of 190 days the year, or a term of 9½ months. Georgia to the South of us has a rural school term of 141½ days; and Virginia, our nearest neighbor to the north, has an average term of 13½ or over 6½ months. North Carolina, next to the lowest in the column, maintains schools in her rural districts on 93 days in the year, a fraction over four months.

The people every where are demanding that our school term shall be lengthened to at least six months in the year. There is pressing demand for this, and the present Legislature will be a disappointment in a large measure if it does not increase the school term for children in the rural districts. These children should have a square deal and a fair chance, and they will get neither unless the school term is lengthened. Why should children in North Carolina have a poorer chance to obtain education than other children of the South, than all other children in the United States save the few, who live in wild and woolly New Mexico? The Legislature will fall short of its duty, and the urgent demands upon it, until it hears and heeds the public in this just cause.

A PERSONAL WORD.

The attention of friends of the Young People's work is invited to the need for money with which to carry forward the same. Our treasurer has faithfully done his part by way of letter and personal solicitation, but these have not been responded to as promptly as they should. Will you not send the amount you have been asked to give to Rev. L. I. Cox, Elon College, N. C. We feel that this department has stimulated activity in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work, and that it has been worth all that it has cost the church and individuals.

PLEASE HEED OUR CALL.

Rev. J. M. Roberts, now happily settled as pastor of our Main St. Berkley Va. Congregation writes: "I like the Berkley work very much. We have here a large band, and I see no reason why we should not make good our cause here." Brother Roberts' address is 306 Berkley Ave. Norfolk, Va. The lines have indeed fallen to him in pleasant places, for there is not a more active and aggressive and devoted people than those whom he has been called to serve.

FIRST SERVICE IN PROFITABLE CHURCH.

With favorable weather conditions, the first portable church in Delaware will be opened for public service at Magnolia, on Sunday afternoon next at which special music will be rendered by the Chorus Choir and Glee Club of the Peoples' Christian Church of this town, under whose auspices the church is brought to Delaware. At least two other churches of the same kind have already been ordered from the builders, to be established, one in the south and the other in Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Lightbourne, D. D., pastor of the Dover Christian church and organizer of the portable Church movement who will preach the dedicatory sermon on Sunday at Magnolia, has this to say about the Portable Church:—

"The portable Church building to be opened at Magnolia Del., Sunday afternoon is the only structure of its kind in the world. It is not a tent or tabernacle, but a roomy, substantial building capable of seating 300 without crowding. It is constructed of solid steel, the same material now used by the great railroads in their splendid new passenger coaches. It is well lighted by windows and is provided with adequate means of ventilation. It is absolutely fire-proof, and can be erected or taken down by two men within a few hours. The purpose is to move these church buildings from place to place as certain local conditions, needs and opportunities may determine. This first building cost $1,000, every dollar of which was paid before erection. Others will soon follow. The second one has been ordered.

The motive and spirit of this new movement is found in practical or applied Christianity. Practical Christianity is love in motion. The portable church is the gospel on wheels. It is the message of God to be carried to the doors of the people. But it is the whole gospel for the whole man. It is regeneration, inspiration, education and elevation for all classes. It is not pietistic pessimism nor denominational bossism. It is evangelistic, altruistic and eugenic. It brings a message of spiritual power and social cheer. It will seek to awaken and quicken both the individual and social conscience. It will provide pleasing and refining entertainment as well as moral and religious instruction.

Christ is our model as to both motive and method. His motive is love. He went about doing good. Our motto is—"Inasmuch." Our commission, the Sermon on the Mount. No human limitations, no religious differences, and no social distinctions check or circumscribe the spirit and scope of our movement. This movement is distinctively for moral and social uplift. It also has in view a new era of church efficiency in harmony with the new spirit that rules the age. Insurrection and reconstruction are in the air. The Church, with all other institutions, is under challenge. How will she meet it? Will she decide to shrink and shrivel into mere creed culture, denominational egotism and self-contented pietistic sentimentalism? Or will she restudy and restate the Gospel message, and proclaim the supremacy of the kingdom of God on earth in every sphere of life and over every human relationship. It is the mission of the Portable Church to meet the challenge of the age upon which we have entered."

FROM JAPAN.

November 6, 1912.

Dear Christian Sun:

Are you having as glorious Autumn days in North Carolina as we over here in North Japan, I wonder? It has been a good harvest, rice has fallen a little from its unprecedented high price of from 12 to 15 cents a sho. (about a quart and a half), there seems to be work at harvest time for even the poorest and the people are happy and busy. We are having a spiritual harvest, too. Up at Iinogawa, where Mrs. Watanabe, who is supported by four W. F. M. S. around Norfolk, lives, seven young men were baptized in October. They have had opposition in many ways. For one example: two of the school teachers went to the children's homes and warned the children not to go to S. S. The principal is a Shinto priest and the teachers thought they were doing him valiant service. However, when Mr. Kajitsuha boldly went to him to talk over the matter he said, "I visited churches in Tokyo a few years ago and I found their fruits good. Being a Shintoist, I can not endorse Christianity, but I am not opposed to it, as these teachers think."

The next morning in an address to the school, the priest quoted from the Bible praising its precepts. Since then not only the scholars have come freely, but the school teachers have come also. As the principal of the school is so influential and it was thought so utterly opposed to Christianity, this victory rejoiced our Christians much.

God is answering the prayers of our Norfolk and Franklin sisters and getting glory to himself in the forefront of the battle field.

Next April is our observance of the 25th year of our mission work at the Yearly Conference to be held in Ishinomaki. The Japanese brethren are so anxious to have some one from America represent the church on that occasion that they have sent 30 yen ($25.) to aid in paying the expenses. It is not a large sum for us, but considerable for them.

Mr. Bishop and wife have come to us; Bro. Barrett went to Edinburgh; Dr. Burnett and wife go to Porto Rico; we are told from headquarters that because of the mission debt, for a Secretary to visit us would evoke a storm of criticism. But, at this time, who could criticize sending one of our good Southern brethren who worked and prayed as few of us have done for Foreign Missions, at its beginning?

I shall never forget Bro. Underwood's showing me the house in Sanford, N. C., where an all night prayer meeting was held and power was gained which made all opposition to Foreign Missions give way the next day in the conference session. Nobody can tell that story to the Japanese, of our F. M. beginning as you Southern brethren can. You educated our first missionary. Our anniversary cannot be complete without you. If The Sun will open a column for subscriptions to a delegate to our Japan Mission 25th Anniversary, I would like to subscribe the first five dollars to it.

I would like to write much more on this subject and may later. But I want you all to read this and think and pray over it and a short article will reach more of you.

With deep gratitude for the goodly start you gave us and believe in your present sympathy and co-operation with us.

Alice M. True.

ALABAMA LETTER.

The writer's work for the new conference year has begun very encouragingly. Since our annual session we have met two regular appointments at each church of our charge.

On the first appointment at New Harmony after Conference we received two members into church fellowship. At that time we also arranged to have the church heated, which has already been done. Now those who attend services through the winter may rest assured of comfort so far as the temperature of the building is concerned. At this point we are looking for a most profitable year.

At Pleasant Grove the third Sunday instant we held a most helpful, inspiring service. The attendance was good and the interest manifested was an encouragement to the pastor. At the close of the service a plea for the Christian Orphanage was made, not for money, but for syrup, and we were highly gratified with results. Bro. Carter will doubtless report this contribution through The Sun.

For the present the Sunday school at this place has been suspended, but it is very gratifying to know this work is to be resumed in January, a most unfavorable month in this section to undertake the reorganization of a Sunday school, but we entertain the hope of success. Here arrangements have been made for the installation of a heater at an early date.

Last Sunday was our day at Langdale. At the morning service we had only a small attendance, due to inclement weather, but at the evening hour the house was well filled with attentive hearers, at which service two were received into the church. The membership at this place has been greatly reduced by removals within the last two years until now only a few remain. In many respects this is one of the most loyal little bands in the writer's acquaintance.

The work at Wadley moves steadily forward, although we recently lost heavily when Bro. Walker Pearson and family went from us to Tifton, Ga., to make that their future home. No church has ever had more consecrated, loyal workers than these. We pray God's richest blessings and best gifts upon them in their home.

With this writer and family this has been indeed a Christmas of real joy and genuine pleasure. Chief among our joys was the generous pounding on Christmas Eve at the hands of the membership of the Wadley Christian church. Numbers of times during the past fourteen months have we been the recipients of their loyalty and kindly interest as individuals, but this time in a body they came bringing their gifts to make glad our hearts and to cheer us in the way. After their gifts which consisted of food and raiment and other house-hold necessities had been deposited, Bros. J. J. Carter and E. L. Mann and Dr. J. M. Welch each made short speeches in which they expressed their love and good will to their pastor and his family. Then this humble writer tried to say something that the heart felt, but here an impossibility faced him. For our gratitude lay deeper than words. For this expression of interest and kindness, we shall endeavor to render more faithful service in the Master's name.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

BETHLEHEM.

The third Sunday in December I was at Bethlehem and we had a fine day. The sun shone almost like a spring day, and a large congregation came out. At the close of the service I had the pleasure of presenting to the church in behalf of the Ladies' Aid Society a large, life-size portrait of Rev. Alfred Iseley who for many years served the church as pastor in its earlier history. Rev. W. T. Herndon and Rev. A. F. Iseley, a son of the former pastor, were present and both made some appropriate remarks.

UNION.

The fourth Sunday in December I was at Union. The regular service was followed by the presentation of three large portraits similar to the one presented to Bethlehem the Sunday before. Revs. Alfred Iseley, William S. Long, and the present pastor were honored on this occasion. The following was read by Miss Mamie Wilkins:

"In behalf of the Ladies' Aid Society of this church I present the following: Realizing that dear old Union is very rich in history, we decided that our love and appreciation could not be shown in a better way than to have enlarged photographs of some of our former pastors, thus keeping before us the faces of those whom we would fondly cherish the memory of for the great work that has been done and is being accomplished. We have taken for the first work in this line the photograph of Revs. Alfred Iseley, W. S. Long, and J. W. Holt. Uncle Iseley, as he was known to us, was during the forty-one years of his ministry, pastor of this church for seven years. While many of us don't remember him, we feel that his great work here left its influence and we should look upon his face as a model.

The enlarged portrait of Uncle Iseley has been, through the love and generosity of his son—Bro. J. H. Iseley—donated to us, which we sincerely appreciate.

Dr. Long, still known to all of us, was pastor of this church for about twenty years during which time we shared the results of a devoted Christian ministry. Although our present loyal and devoted leader, Bro. Holt, is with us, we feel that in this way we should show our love for him and appreciation of his work here. Now we take great pleasure in presenting to the church these portraits and trust they will prove beneficial and satisfactory, and hope that by looking into the faces of these good men that we will all be inspired to do better service in the Master's work."

Acceptance in behalf of the church was made by brothers William McCauley and W. J. Graham and also some remarks by the pastor. Some appropriate songs were sung by the choir, adding to the interest of the occasion. It is hoped that this is only the beginning of the good work of preserving and refreshing the history of our church at these two points. Both young and old will be helped and attractiveness will be given to our churches by such additions.

J. W. Holt.

THANKSGIVING AT RALEIGH.

Thanksgiving services were held in the Hillsboro St. Christian Church Thursday night. The program was an excellent one. Charles H. Stephenson presided, the pastor of the church, Rev. L. F. Johnson, read the eighth chapter of Psalms and Hon. J. H. Fleming led the prayer. The presiding officer gave an interesting account of the work of the Raleigh Christian church since last Thanksgiving. He was followed by a very appropriate recitation by Charles H. Stephenson, Jr. Misses Virginia and Caro Wood rendered a beautiful duet, after which Miss Ada Jones gave a reading that pleased, and created much interest. Master L. F. Johnson made the speech for the Ladies' Aid Society and Hon. J. H. Fleming for the Young Peoples Society of Christian Endeavor. The pastor made the appeal for the Christian Orphanage and a substantial cash offering was made. The major part of the congregation was made up of young people and children who seemed to enjoy the program from start to finish. The service was closed by an appropriate song and prayer.

Berea, Nansemond.

During the past three months the church building has been thoroughly renovated inside, all the wood work repainted, a handsome new carpet put down, a choir stand constructed and an elegant new pulpit set installed. These improvements were made at a cost of several hundred dollars. The Ladies' Aid Society had charge of the work, and raised the greater part of the money to pay for same.

The interior of the church is more inviting than ever before. The Ladies Aid Society is planning to add new chairs for the choir, and, later, a new organ. It is a great joy to a pastor's heart to be associated with such faithful and efficient workers in the kingdom. May the Father graciously continue his blessings upon them.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Bro. Johnson of Charity and Children lectures his brethren of the press for saying in print. "That is dreadful:" but on his front page Bro. Johnson prints as caption to an editorial. "The English and us." How come "us"?

—Since it is never too late to speak a word of gladness and good cheer, here is one to our beloved brother in Christian service, Rev. A. M. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va. The event took place at Linville, Va. Dec. 26 and the bride was Miss Effle Bowman. All joy to the happy pair.

—Our good brother, Rev. Jno. Blood, Riegelsville, N. J., President of Board of Control of Franklinton Christian College, is anxious to secure funds for much needed improvements to that institution. It is a worthy cause, and money spent in this direction, is well invested.

—Brethren, if in writing you would boil down the obituaries and curtail the marriage accounts it would wonderfully help the situation. There is an increasing demand upon our space which is limited. Instead of becoming briefer and more to the point the brethren seem to lengthen out their accounts.

—Rev. W. L. Wells writes most encouragingly of the work at Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga. His report for the past quarter, we note, carries these items, "Sermons preached, 24; conversions 6; members received 4; Sunday school enrollment 110; present church membership 59. "The work is growing steadily."

Bro. Wells has done a successful work at Columbus and one that will tell in the future.

—Work goes well with our good brother, Rev. L. E. Smith, 60 University Place, Princeton, N. J., who is now a full fledged Princeton University student, imbued with the Woodrow Wilson spirit and all that pertains to progress and great achievement. In renewing for The Sun Bro. Smith adds this gracious word "My hearty appreciation of your efforts and sacrifices to give us such a splendid paper. I am delighted with the editorials regarding our missionary situation. I would like to see our Southern Convention assume the responsibility of the Porto Rican work. We are well able to do it."

—Bro. Edwin E. Hill, Secretary of the Ga. and Ala. Conference, flings this fragrant flower this way, even if it is winter. "We certainly enjoyed having the man you sent as representative of The Sun at our Conference—Rev. L. I. Cox. Every one liked him and enjoyed his sermons and talks very much. Wish you would come to our next Conference and bring Prof. Harper and Bro. Cox.

We like so much to have such men (as these two) come amongst us." Our part of this gracious compliment consists in our keeping the good company of men like Dr. Harper and Bro. Cox. There is not only pleasure and privilege, but profit as well in keeping good company.

—If we mean business, and really care for our missions and their work in Japan, let us send some money to help along the work there, or send some new recruits to help in the work there. Sending some one of us there to look the field over—a free trip to Japan and return out of a depleted and almost bankrupt treasury—is about as big a piece of childish folly and silly nonsense as one could well conceive of. If this would not be giving people a stone when they are asking for bread then we don't know. Brethren, let's quit this sham and foolishness, unless we mean to kill our missionary cause altogether and get down to business.

—Of our friend D. R. Fonville, a first honor graduate of Elon College and now practicing attorney in Charlotte, N. C., The Daily Observer of Charlotte in its issue of January 4th thus speaks:

"A course of 20 lectures on commercial law will be given at the Young Men's Christian Association by Mr. D. R. Fonville.

The first lecture will be given Monday night at 8 o'clock in the parlors of the Young Men's Christian Association building. Much interest is being manifested by a number of young business men in the course and it is believed that the course given this year will largely exceed in number of enrolled students any similar courses yet given under the auspices of the association. The educational department committee is regarded as fortunate in securing such a teacher as Mr. Fonville which is in itself a guarantee that the course will be a profitable one. All those expecting to enroll or even interested in the matter are requested to be present Monday night at 8 o'clock.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

For Children.

Most all children love kittens and most all kittens love children. William Staley Cheatham is no exception to this statement and Pollyanna is no exception to this rule. Pollyanna is a little kitten which aunt Annie and grandma had kept for William Staley when he came to grandma's for Christmas. That was his third Christmas, and you know, Christmas is better every year for children; and it may be for kittens. Well, the little three year old grandson came with his papa all the way from Roxboro to Franklinton, North Carolina, just to spend Christmas. Now, if you grown people don't want to read about a child's visit and a kitten present, just hand the Christian Sun to some youngster and let him read for himself.

You know what a beautiful day Christmas day was in 1912. The sun was bright, the air was balmy, and, had the trees been full of green leaves, and the flowers in bloom, you would have thought it was spring or summer. The anxious little visitor had retired early the night before. Christmas so Santa Claus would come and fill up his stockings. He borrowed one of grandma's stockings because his little stocking was too short to hold all he wanted Santa to bring. There it is at the end of the mantle—a big, long, black stocking fresh from the wash. How can Santa get in? There is a metal screen over the fire-place and a stove where grandma used to sit by the big log fire on cold winter nights. But a door is left unlocked so he can slip in while William is asleep. That is the way Jesus gets into your hearts—you leave the door ajar and He slips in and leaves His blessings. I forgot to tell you that the whole family of stockings hung on the wall that night. It was a long line of black empties waiting to be filled—the hearts of all the owners were waiting, also, to be filled; for I think the people are just as full of joy on Christmas morning as the stockings are of good things. God does not put all his good in the storehouse. He puts his best in the soul.

The moon was at her best that night making the stars look pale and dim. Home was at its best, because good will was there. Religion was at its height because the recognition of Jesus was there. It was the night before Christmas and waiting hearts palpitated during sweet sleep till the morning.

I need not tell you about the anxious little visitor as he pulled down the bulging stocking, with tin horn, telephone, and a red stocking inside full of nice things. Toot! toot!! toot!!! first on big horn and then on little horn. "Look here what Santa Claus bot me;" "Look here at this fan;" "Here is some money." "He bot me 'phone." You know all the rest.

Christmas is over, Little Florence had had long spell of sickness and mama had to remain at home with her. Both the family said; "Thank God for sparing Florence and maby she and mama can come next Christmas." It was interesting to see William teasing his "gratma" who was enjoying her ninety-first Christmas and her little grandson.

But Wm. and papa had to hurry away to see grandpa and grandma Cheatum at Oxford then go home. Where is Pollyanna? On the back porch. "You want to carry your kitten home?" "Es." Grandma had a nice little wooden box about ten inches square and eight inches high. Some paper and cotton are placed in the bottom. There were two knot holes for Pollyanna's little house. Uncle Ben Holden said "they are holes and knot holes." Into that pretty box kitty kitty Pollyanna was placed and grandpa nailed the top on and put a good handle on the box. It was cute to see kitty peeping out of the holes. William was just as proud of his kitty as any present Santa Claus brought, and don't you know he took the box and carried it into the Pullman car and Pollyanna had a ride on the Pullman; and all because William loved the Kitten. Children always treat well those they love, and grown people do the same way. If all the world was moved by love some children would not be treated worse than cats and dogs. W. W. Staley.

NORFOLK LETTER.

Henceforth and perpetually I'm going to put a little more real "ginger" into these "Norfolk Letters." This is a brand new New Year's resolution; so new indeed that it fairly glistens with red paint and gilt stripes of all good and sincere intentions.

Yes, Mr. Editor, I'm going to get down to business now, I certainly am. I've been a thinkin' uv a few "thots" and I'm stirred up over the possibilities inherent in this scribbling. No dead copy just to fill up space for me, no siree, not if I can help it.

You see, I want these letters to be read, you understand, and folks "just nacherally" wont read "dead stuff." They are peculiar-like in such matters. So, therefore, this is merely meant to serve notice upon the readers of the Sun that I propose to "get busy" now and give them their time's worth in what I shall send henceforth from this, the metropolis of the Atlantic seaboard.

The "original Norfolk Letter" man was, according to the best of my information one Dr. J. W. Manning of the Third Church here. With many honeyed and beguiling words and silken-tongued blandishments the Dr. approached me with reference to assuming the task, and, in a fell hour of weakness I said I reckoned I would. At that time, in my bumptiousness I thought that I had enough of loose wisdom stored away and enough of sage advice with regard to matters in general to offer nonchalantly and offhand to last for the greater part of this decade at least. But, alas, in the words of the immortal Artemus Ward, "it cannot was." I shall have to get busy. And, being thus under dire compulsion I am going to get down to digging in lead earnest. I shall try to make what I shall send in from this date on as fresh, crisp and spicy as it can possibly be. In my choice of subjects I may occasionally get a little reckless and play with dynamite and nitroglycerine, though I shall try to avoid the production of any disastrous explosion, and, after all, dynamite and nitroglycerine are the most beneficial of agencies when wisely and prudently used.

Really, I am deeply indebted to Dr. Manning and the Editor of the Sun for the privilege of speaking to the Sun's readers each week. It is a pleasure indeed to try to express one's thought for the benefit and uplifting of others through the medium of the printed page or the written word. I have always enjoyed the scribbling pastime, though I have oftentimes feared that the chief good accruing therefrom was to myself alone.

However be that as it may, it is my sincere purpose now to take hold of some topics the consideration of which I hope may appeal to every reader of the Sun, and treat these after a fashion as fresh and original as possible. The first of these screeds I will send in next week.

ELON COLLEGE LETTER.

This government of our straining a gnat and swallowing a camel in its effort to bring about freedom of opinion in religious matters. The only recognition it takes of religion is the approval of one day in seven for rest more on economic grounds than religious, and to provide chaplains for its legislative halls and army and navy.

Christmas day does not make a holiday because that would be to keep a day not kept by the Jewish element of our citizenship, but it has no hesitancy about keeping New Year's day, for which there is no warrant in sacred associations nor holy traditions, unless it be that the month is called after the two-faced pagan god Janus. It keeps Thanksgiving Day, but it is kept as a governmental day and not as a religious day. Washington, Lincoln, Lee are honored by holidays, but the Man of Galilee who makes our civilization what it is and colors all our living and thinking cannot be so honored, because a few of our people do not accept Him as God. The government sees no inconsistency in assigning a special day for labor, tho a great many are not laborers, while it denies a day to Christ because some are not Christians.

Democracy is founded on majority rule, and this rule we try to follow faithfully, till it comes to religious matters. Here the minority rules. The minority do not believe in Christ, and so we cannot keep Christmas as a national holiday. The minority do not believe in the open Bible, and so the Bible is being gradually excluded from our public schools. The minority do not believe in religious institutions for adolescent young people, and so religious instruction is excluded from state institutions of higher learning. That is bad enough, but it is even worse, for not only are the Bible and religious instruction excluded, but irreligion and infidelity are included in a great many cases, and these evils are constantly growing in extent and insidiousness. How long will a free people tolerate this serfdom in sacred things at the hands of a self-assertive minority? The situation demands thorough consideration and heroic action. It cannot be always thus and our institutions and ourselves be free.

W. A. Harper.

Filling the Ranks.

You are reading in the papers that the war between the Turks and the Balkans is over. We wish it were, but it is exceedingly doubtful. At any rate the Greeks do not believe so.

Last Wednesday Jim Morris, a Greek, of Durham received a letter from his father away yonder in the land of Hellas saying "Your brother" is killed in the army. Come home and take his place against the hated Turks." And as merrily as a school boy goes to the ball ground on Thursday Jim quit his candy cooking, bade farewell to the "Palace of Sweets" and began his long journey across the continents and the seas to fight for home and native land, wear the uniform and bear the arms that his fallen brother had worn and borne. This is patriotism. Here is courage, too. Such conduct heightens the admiration for human nature and makes us feel that after all man is made of something more than common clay.

A man travelling thousands of miles to express to his countrymen, and show the world how to die.

"The love of God is broader than the measure of man's mind."

Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor.

This department under the direction of Young People's General Convention. Frequent news items from Sunday schools, organized classes, and C. E. societies are desired. If you are interested in either or about to organize, address the department's editor,

CHARLES A. HINES, Editor and Cor. Sec.,

Greensboro, N. C.

NOTES ON THE WORK.

Have you a Teacher Training class in your Sunday school for the New Year?

Are all of your adult classes organized, and in good running order for the cold months?

The First Christian Sunday school, Greensboro, has reorganized its Home Department with Mrs. C. C. Johnson as Superintendent. A Grade Roll is added with Mrs. H. E. Rountree superintendent. The Christmas exercise at the church. Christmas night was thoroughly enjoyed. The country store was the plan used this year.

THE CLASS DISCUSSION METHOD.

What is it? To discuss is not merely to answer questions. It is to examine, to exchange opinions. On the face of it, such interchange, such intercourse, is social.

Discussion does not inevitably mean arguments, pro and con, differences and disagreements. It means viewing a subject on all sides and from the view-point of individuals.

It is the natural way in a company of adults. The members are, presumably, on a par in most particulars, and the teacher is supposed to be a leader, to lead out the thoughts of the rest, that he may lead on and up, not that he may drive all before according to his own choice.

In the second place, this method is stimulating. Thought is stirred by output as well as intake. The activity of seeking prepares the way for the pleasure and profit of finding. It is the member of the class who asks a question, who is most eager for the answer. The power of suggestion is brought to bear, and the faculties are alert.

Self-expression is important to thought-activity. In discussion there is not only a chance for this, but a necessity for it. Members of the class are brought to utterance, and, however partial and even faulty expression may be, this "drawing out" is distinctly educational. No amount of pouring in, by the lecture system, will take the place of this intellectual and spiritual development by discussion.

Again, class discussion affords an opportunity for exercising judgment and decision which the lecture plan represses. The mere listener may have a passing impression, or may have an arrest of thought, in hearing explanations and exhortations but if he has no chance to put his thought into words, he will not hold it so clearly nor so long.

Another argument in favor of this method is that the teacher by this means learns to know and understand the class to a degree that no other plan affords.

Still another plea for the plan is the old one of Scripture that "iron sharpeneth iron," and so the interchange of ideas and experiences will have a tendency to make thoughts more clear-cut and incisive. Many a student's thought kindles and glows in a surprising manner, simply by means of such contact and response as this method brings about.

This method is ideal because it enlists the entire class, it reveals and encourages individuality, gives opportunity for expression that promotes class-feeling, develops fellowship, increases knowledge and deepens spirituality, and, all in all, secures the largest and most comprehensive result by way of inspiration, enthusiasm and growth.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Jan. 12—"Man the Crown of Creation." Gen 1: 26, 27; 7-9, 15-24.

Time.—When God created man.

Place.—The Garden of Eden.

Golden Text.—God created man in his image.—Gen. 1:27.

Leading Thought.—God is our Father.

Lesson 1, entitled The Creation, properly included the account of the creation of man, which was the supreme event of Creation Week. To-day, under the title Man, the Crown of Creation, we study more in detail the making of man, and learn something of the material, moral and social conditions under which the human race started upon its career in the world.

The purpose of this lesson is to show how God (1) created and endowed man (male and female) in his image, as "The Crown of Creation," (2) made and outfitted the first home on earth and (3) introduced to each other and married the first man and woman.

The words of our Golden text give man a position of wonderful exaltation. What greatness and dignity they indicate! Men ought to rejoice and to be supremely glad and thankful. They ought also to recognize the mighty, blessed responsibilities involved in being by creation the image of God. Jesus Christ shows us what that image is.

Lesson Contrasts.

In Lesson 1 we have God creating matter and the lower forms of life; in Lesson 2 we see him creating man. The heavens and earth and all that is therein declare God's power and might, wisdom and skill, but in man God's heart is laid bare. In our last lesson we saw God call worlds into existence "by the word of his power," but we see him creating man with loving deliberation and careful thought. In that lesson we saw God forming creatures, in this he is giving life to his own children. To all the creatures were given bodies wonderfully adapted to the life they were to lead, but man was made "in the image of God." Fixed laws govern all nature, but the law of loving obedience to the divine will must be accepted by man's hearty consent in order that he may be kept in the best way.

Question Review.

1. What was the last and greatest thing God created? (Probably some will say "Adam," some say "Eve.")

We will not dispute as to which was greater, Adam or Eve, but use the term which includes both male and female, and say "Man."

2. How is man related to the rest of the animal creation? (His body is made of dust.)

3. To whom besides the animals is man related?

4. What do we call the part of our nature which makes us children of God? (A living soul.)

5. Whom do most children look like? (Their parents.)

6. Whom should our souls look like? (The heavenly Father.)

7. How do any lose from their souls the "image of god"? (By sin, or wrongdoing.)

8. How can we grow more and more like our heavenly father?—Leonard.

Subject—"Becoming a Christian." Matt. 4: 17-25.

It is most appropriate that the lookout committee should lead this meeting, which is devoted to one of the chief designs of that committee, to promote decisions for the Christian life. The committee will sit in front of the society, and will all have a part in the opening exercises. The chairman of the committee may give the leader's talk. Another member will lead the prayer; another will read Scripture; another will announce the hymns. The committee will plan the meeting together, carrying out as many as possible of the following suggestions.

The Purpose of the Meeting.

(Stated by one of the lookout committee.)

This meeting is for the purpose of bringing as many as possible to the great decision to live a Christian life, joining Christ's church. It is intended also to stimulate as many as possible who are already Christians to testify of what being a Christian has meant to them. It is intended to answer difficulties in the way of church membership. It is intended to bring about public confessions of Christ. These are all great aims. God grant that they may be accomplished!

Discussion Topics.

1. Five members, each give one reason why we should accept Christ early in life.
2. Five members, each give a reason why all men, and women should be Christians.
3. Five members, each give one reason why all Christians should have church membership.
4. Five members, each give an excuse you have heard for not being a Christian, answer it.

Some Questions.

One of the best ways to set those that are not Christians to thinking about the matter is to give to each of them some such questions as the following, asking him to answer in the meeting.

- Why should every one be a Christian?
- Why could not the inconsistencies of Christians keep others out of the church?
- Why is it foolish that one is not good enough to become a Christian?
- Why is it foolish to postpone becoming a Christian?
- Why should all Christians join the church?
- What is meant by becoming a Christian?
- What does joining the church signify?

Hints for This Meeting.

1. A good meeting will be the result of earnest prayer and an obedient life.
2. Remember that God does not put His word into empty hearts. If you want a message for this meeting think hard upon the tonic.
3. "It is the broken speech that breaks hard hearts." "Be willing to break down for Christ." This meeting will depend upon you.

4. Have some concert feature in this meeting, the Lord's prayer, the Psalm or some other Bible passage. You may repeat the pledge on the wall.

5. Have some part of the associate members in your meeting. Do not hesitate, if opportunity affords, to invite your people to accept Christ.

HOW ONE MAN WAS REACHED.

(The following story taken from a personal letter from Miss Alice True is too good not to be passed on, and so we give it to our readers. Mrs. C. H. R.)

One of my friends, Mrs. Swelzer, when she first came to Japan was all alone out in Choshi, and, after three months of studying the language, got discouraged and thought she would never learn it. As she stood by her up stairs window, she saw a man planting rice. "If I can't speak to the Japanese, I can pray for them," she thought and she knelt down and prayed for the man. She prayed until she had the assurance of faith that he would be saved.

A few days later out walking, she passed near the field and it occurred to her that her teacher had taught her to say "you are planting rice skillfully," so she said it to him. He laughed as Japanese often do when they feel embarrassed, but she thought it was because he did not understand her poor Japanese and went home more discouraged than ever.

Months, perhaps years afterwards, in a men's Bible class which she had, several were ready for baptism. One said to her, "Do you remember the day when you first saw me?" "Yes, I remember when you came and enquired about the class." "No, that was not the first day. Do you remember speaking very kindly once to a man planting rice near your home? I was that man. I had just been obliged to leave school and was feeling so discouraged that day. When you spoke so kindly to me, I wondered who you could be, why you had come to this country, and what your aim was. I enquired many things about you and hearing a good report of you concluded to come to your Bible class."

God may use our apparently wasted efforts at letter writing in some such unexpected way. I hope he will enable us to have that faith that will lead us to pray through to victory about all our work.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Holidays are over and the work of matriculation nearly over, and recitations begin today (Monday.) Already nineteen new students have matriculated for the Spring Term and a few others are expected. Our friends have been effectively protecting our interests, for which we are profoundly grateful.

We have had so many visitors during the vacation season and so many of our own people have been visiting during the holidays that we are bewildered in the attempt to parcel them out for individual mention. Suffice it to say that all seemed to have a happy time and that there were no accidents or sickness to mar the festivities of the gladdest time of the year.

The College was happy in a recent call from President McReynolds of Defiance College. He had been away from home for a month, recreating from his strenuous duties in Mexico and Texas, and passed near us on his way up north and so visited us. We have not met a more genial, progressive educator than he in many a day. The unprecedented growth and development of Defiance under his administration is easy of explanation now.

The ministers of the N. C. and Va. Christian Conference will meet here Monday for an institute, from which great good is expected to be derived.

The new graded school building will be formally opened Monday at 3 P. M. It is a handsome structure and a great credit to our town and community.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell, one of Elon's most devoted friends, will preach here next Sunday morning. He will lecture Sunday evening on Christian Education and then at the daily Chapel Exercises each morning and at seven in the evening for the first two days of the following week he will lecture on Protestantism in England. No lecturer is more welcome here than Dr. Summerbell and he will be given a large and appreciative hearing.

A Talk to Mothers

Every good mother is something of a doctor.

She is called upon almost daily to practice medicine in the lesser ailments of the children. Frequently she is forced to use her skill on more important diseases until a doctor can be secured.

Hence, every mother should be as well informed as to advanced methods of sanitation and medical practice as possible.

Here are some valuable medical facts which every mother ought to know.

1.-In treatment of coughs, colds, catarrh, croup, and especially pneumonia, plenty of fresh air is all important. It is life to the organs of respiration.

2.-In the treatment of these and of other diseases it is very important not to disturb digestion.

The stomach is the laboratory in which fresh life blood is made from food and drink.

In the interest of health, the process should never be interfered with, if it can be avoided.

3.-Given plenty of fresh air and good digestion, it only remains to eliminate the cause of disease and nature quickly responds to complete recovery.

4.-The modern treatment of croup, colds, catarrh and pneumonia with Vick's Croup and Pneumonia Salve permits plenty of fresh air to enter the lungs, avoids interference with digestion by stomach medication and instead attacks the disease at the real seat of infection, the air passages of the head, throat and lungs.

5.-The process involves the application of antiseptic and healing vapors direct to the internal linings of the air passages, by inhalation, with plenty of good fresh air.

6.-This loosens the phlegm, cleanses the mucous membrane and allays the inflammation.

The process also stimulates the organs by absorption into the skin of throat and chest, overlying the seat of the trouble.

The fever is reduced by elimination of the congestion, which is its cause.

In cases of croup, breathing becomes easier immediately and, in fifteen minutes, the case is relieved.

Similar excellent results are secured by using Vick's as a salve for various forms of diseases due to inflammation or congestion.

The price of Vick's Croup and Pneumonia Salve is 25c, 50c and $1.00 at druggists, or by mail.

A full sized jar will be sent free of charge to any practicing physician desiring to test the Vick treatment.

Dear Children and Friends:

1912 is recorded on the pages of history; and, as one has said: "What I have written. I have written." So are the records of last year. Now it is left for us to improve, where mistakes have been made so that during these same mistakes will not be recorded against us. He is the wise man who does not make the same mistake twice.

Nearly all the children are at home again from spending Christmas with kinspeople and report a good time. I am sure those who were here enjoyed themselves. And when we all get together again there will be sixty children and two other applications. So you see how rapidly the demands increase and how much we are going to need more room pretty soon.

With best wishes for a good year's work I am,

Cordially yours,
 Uncle Emory,

Dear Uncle Emory:

It seems strange not to write "Uncle Jim," but reckon we will get used to saying "Uncle Emory" and love you too if you are fond of little folks like "Uncle Jim" was while there at the orphanage.

I have seen "Uncle Jim," and heard him preach, and am in hopes shall hear you preach too.

Mother was in school with you and 'Aunt Lovie' so sends her best wishes to you and is in hopes you will like the work you have so kindly undertaken.

I am at grandpa's this morning and it is raining too much for me to get out doors.

Am in hopes "Old Santa" remembered all the orphans and cousins as he and friends remembered me.

I enclose twenty cents for dues for November and December.

Love to all from

Mabel Virginia Wells.

Yes I know the change seems strange, but I have heard it said that we are creatures of circumstances, and hope it will come all right. My! you ought to have seen the children receiving the gifts "Old Santa" brought. He certainly was kind to us.

MARRIED.

NEEDHAM-KEARNS.

On Sunday, December 15, 1912, Mr. E. Walker Needham and Miss Rose Kearns were united in matrimony at the bride's home by this writer. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Needham, and the bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Kearns, all of Montgomery County. The following were the attendants: Miss Laura Needham, sister of the groom, with Mr. Neal Kearns, brother of the bride, and Miss Esther Kearns, sister of the bride, with Mr. Charley Allen. After the marriage we were escorted into the dining room where a feast of good things awaited us. We wish for this young couple a long, happy, prosperous, and successful life.

J. F. Morgan.

Boroughs—Moffitt.

At the home of Benj. S. Moffitt, Dec. 8, 1912, Mr. Earl P. Boroughs and Miss Sallie Allene Moffitt were united in matrimony. The bride and groom represent two of the best families in the community of Shiloh Church, and have the best wishes of all for a long and happy married life.

T. E. White.

DAVIS-OWENS.

On Dec. 15, 1912, near Buffalo Junction, Va., this writer performed the ceremony that united Mr. George Davis and Miss Bessie Owens as husband and wife. A nice lot of valuable presents was received from those present to witness this union. After the ceremony the bridal party repaired to the home of the groom's parents to partake of a sumptuous supper. Heaven bless them.

Poole-Jones.

Dehrough Poole and Etta Jones at the Christian parsonage November 16th at 3 P. M. Rev. L. F. Johnson officiating.

Woodward-Woodard.

Frank Woodward and Lillian Woodard at the Christian parsonage, Raleigh, N. C., November 13, 8 P. M. Rev. L. F. Johnson officiating.

Andese—Bowman.

The Linville Christian church was the scene of a beautiful wedding December the 26th, at 1:30 P. M. when Rev. A. W. Andes, the pastor, led to the marriage altar Miss Minnie Effie Bowman.

The church was tastefully decorated with evergreens and potted plants. The contracting parties stood under a beautiful arch of evergreens, from which suspended two hearts, while the ceremony was performed by the writer.

Prof. J. Owen Long, of Lacey Spring, played Mendelsson's Wedding March as the bridal party entered the crowded church and "Hearts and Flowers" was played softly during the ceremony.

Mr. Owen W. Andes, a brother of the groom, was best man and Miss Mae Berthram, a cousin of the bride, was maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Misses. Ivie Andes, a sister of the groom, and Ollie Maphis. The groomsmen were Messrs. Walter Bertram, a cousin of the bride, and Edgar Chapman.

The bride was charmingly attired in white Viole trimmed in real lace, and carried a shower bouquet of Bride's Roses. The maid of honor was gowned in pink Messaline, trimmed in silver lace and carried white carnations.

The bridesmaids wore white batistate and carried ferns.

The groom, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Andes, is a graduate of Elon College, of the class of '06. Since that time, he has been preaching in the Valley, and serving as secretary of the Virginia Valley Central conference and is at present secretary of the Young People's Convention of the Southern Christian Convention. His strong preaching and untiring labors make him one of the most prominent young ministers in the Southern Christian Convention.

Mrs. Andes is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Bowman. She is organist of her home church and is an earnest worker. She will prove a helpmeet indeed to her husband in his arduous labors.

The large number of beautiful and useful presents, among which was a handsome set of silverware given by the Linville church, showed the high esteem in which the young couple is held.

A sumptuous wedding dinner was served at the home of the bride before the ceremony. Rev. and Mrs. Andes left on the afternoon train to spend their honeymoon in Washington and Baltimore.

The writer joins with their hosts of friends in wishing them a long and happy life.

Gooch-Clark.

On Thursday, November 28, 1912, at my home in Henderson, N. C., I married Mr. Terry Gooch and Miss Florence Clark.

The groom is an industrious farmer of the Epsom community and a member of Liberty church. The bride is the daughter of Mr. Sam Clark of Dabney, N. C., and a most excellent Christian lady.

After a short stay with Mr. Gooch's parents they will go to their new home near Dabney.

May heaven's blessings attend them through life.

C. E. Newman.

Wall-Tuck.

In the parlors of the Morgan Hotel, Danville, Va., on the 14th of December, 1912, I united in marriage Mr. W. B. Wall of Carmel, California, and Miss Myrtle Tuck of Virgilina, Va.

Mr. Wall has lived in California for a number of years where he is engaged in the mining business. Mrs. Wall is the daughter of the late J. R. Tuck of Virgilina, Va. She has for several years been active in the Christian church there, and in 1910 represented the church at the annual conference. At the time of her marriage she held an important position in Virgilina post office. Mr. Wall is to be congratulated on winning such an excellent Christian lady for a companion.

They will make their home for the present at Virgilina. My prayers are that blessings and happiness may attend them through life.

C. E. Newman.

Clayton-Fuller.

At my residence, Rowland St., Henderson, N. C., on December 25th, 1912, at 3 P. M., I united in marriage Mr. Eddie Clayton and Miss Zelma Fuller of Fuller's church community. A number of young friends were present to witness the ceremony.

Mr. Clayton is a young farmer and a popular young man. Mrs. Clayton is the daughter of Mr. James Fuller and an excellent young lady with a host of friends. May they be blest with happiness and prosperity.

C. E. Newman.

Lloyd-Eubanks.

The marriage of Miss Alice Burton Eubanks and Mr. Wm. Clarence Lloyd, both of Orange Co., N. C., was celebrated December 26, 1912, at 2 P. M., at the home of the bride, in the presence of many friends and relatives.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Thos. W. Stroud of Chapel Hill, N. C. They received many valuable presents. Immediately after the ceremony, the happy couple left on the Southern for Danville, Va., where they will spend a few days with relatives.

Upon their return they will make their home in Chapel Hill, N. C. The writer joins their many friends in wishing them a long and useful life.

T. W. Stroud.

Isley-Ward.

The marriage of Miss Media Ward, the adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Ward of Caswell Co., N. C., and Mr. Chas. H. Isley of Alamance Co., N. C., was celebrated December 25, 1912, at the home of the bride, in the presence of many friends and relatives.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Thos. W. Stroud, of Chapel Hill, N. C.

The popularity of this young couple was shown by the many presents received.

They have the best wishes of many friends and relatives for a long and happy life.

T. W. Stroud.

Duke-Frazier.

December 26th, 1912, near Epsom, N. C., I married Mr. Percy Duke and Miss Bessie Frazier. This is one of the most popular young couples of the community. Mr. Duke bears a good name for industry and integrity. Mrs. Duke is the daughter of Mr. Ira Frazier, and is a young lady of rare grace and attraction.

They will reside in the Epsom section, where the groom is engaged in farming. May their lives be blest with that happiness that comes as a reward for usefulness.

DIED.

BROWN.

Mrs. R. S. Brown who was before marriage Miss Oie Banks, daughter of the late lamented J. L. Banks, McCullers, N. C., died Tuesday night, Dec. 17, 1912, aged 48 years, five months, and two days.

She leaves to mourn their loss a husband, R. S. Brown three sons, Henry, Norman, and Brona; four brothers, and one sister. She was taken with typhoid fever in August which resulted in a rapid ease of tuberculosis, causing her death. She died in the triumph of faith in God and was buried at Wentworth, McCullers, N. C. Funeral by her pastor, Rev. Mr. Fisher, of the M. E. Church, South, of which church deceased was a loyal and devoted member. She was truly a good woman, and now rests from her labors and her works do follow her.

Friend.

Young.

Sunday morning Dec. 1, 1912 Brother W. T. Young attended Sunday school at his church as was his custom. Bro. Stephen Winston, the superintendent of the school, requested Bro. Young to lead in prayer. Bro. Young then offered a very tender and earnest petition for the school, the church, and the people of the town. At the conclusion of his prayer he arose from his knees, walked out of the church and thence to his home—about 200 yards away—went in and fell on his bed and died within a few minutes. Thus passed out from us one of the best men we have known. From his knees in his beloved house of worship on earth, and from his home below to his Father's house on high. What a blessed translation! How like Enoch of old who walked with God and was not, for God took him, "Absent from the body, present with the Lord."

For four years Bro. Young served in the civil war under Gen. R. E. Lee and was a true and valiant soldier. Soon after that terrible war he was married. He was fortunate in securing a most excellent companion, of whom it can be truly said, "She looketh well to the ways of her household and eateth not the bread of idleness." For nearly fifty years this man and his wife have lived most gently and happily together. Starting out with little of earthly substance by economy and frugality they accumulated a good estate, and at the same time gave liberally to all worthy causes, as they had opportunity.

I recall the names of M. C. Winston, W. K. Martin, Joseph Pierce, and W. T. Young who from my earliest recollection would attend the conference and the convention, from that section, now all are gone. How we miss them! Several of Bro. Young's former pastors were present at his funeral, Revs. J. W. Wellons, J. L. Foster, W. G. Clements, H. F. Wolf and this writer. A large number of relatives and friends gathered to show respect and honor the beloved dead. The Masons were there and placed the body in the grave with the usual honors.

W. S. Long.

Pritchette.

We, the members of the Berea Christian church, S. S. and Ladies' Aid Society, of all of which Sister Keren A. Pritchette was a member, bow in humble submission to the will of Him who is too good and wise to make a mistake. While it is sad to lose her from our church and community, we feel our loss is her gain.

She was an affectionate wife and mother, whom to know was to love, and we feel she will be greatly missed in our community.

May we all forget our sorrow and think of her joy, for we feel she is one more treasure in Heaven and the gate through which she has passed to peace and joy unspeakable as open to us.

Therefore resolved:

That we the members of Berea church, and Aid Society and S. S. try to follow the example she set before us, for we feel that though her spirit is in Heaven her work will still continue to grow and that the world will continue to feel the influence of so noble a life.

2nd. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, one spread upon the minutes of Berea church, also the Ladies' Aid Society and S. S. and one sent to The Christian Sun and Burlington News for publication.

Forbes.

Mrs. Theodosia Forbes died at her home on High St. Franklin, Va. Nov. 28, 1912, after an illness of more than a year. She leaves to mourn their loss, a disaster, Mr. and O. Forbes, and three sons, Owen, Edward, and Andrew, all of whom are in the service of the U. S. Army. She also leaves a daughter, Mrs. J. L. Foster, and a son, Mr. J. L. Foster, Jr., who is in the service of the U. S. Army. She was a member of the Berea Christian church, and was a devoted wife and mother.

Her pastor, the writer was in Florida, and the funeral services were conducted by Dr. N. G. Newman, of Holland, assisted by Dr. J. L. Layless, Holland, and the interment was in Poplar Spring cemetery. The bereaved ones have our sympathy in this dark hour.

C. H. Rowland.

Gay.

Calton Gay was born Dec. 15, 1888; died Nov. 25, 1912, being 23 years, 11 months and 26 days old. On the morning of Nov. 23, he left home early to work a peanut picker. In a short while he was found unconscious, near the engine that furnished power for the picker with his head badly crushed. It is supposed that he in some way fell upon the engine and thus received the wound that caused his death. He never regained consciousness and died two days later. He was married to Miss Fannie Haiford, Jan. 16, 1912. He leaves to mourn his sad death a loving wife, father, mother and three sisters, besides many friends. He had been a member of Mt. Carmel church for several years and was looked upon as a Christian young man.

May the comforts of the Christian religion sustain and keep the heart broken loved ones in this sad hour. In the absence of the pastor funeral services were conducted by the union, at Mt. Carmel Church, in the presence of a large gathering of sympathizing friends.

R. H. Peel.

Gerringer.

Sidney Washington Gerringer was born October 11th, 1894, and died December 9th 1912, sixty three years, one month and twenty eight days old.

He was a Christian about forty years of his life, holding his membership at Bethlehem, Alamance county, till a few years ago when he transferred to the First Church of Greensboro.

His funeral was conducted December 11th from Fair Grove Methodist church near Benaja, by Rev. A. F. Isley, assisted by the writer. It is a great comfort to the bereaved ones and all who attended the obsequies to believe that their loved one is among the blessed of the dead. Bro. Isley, who was a life-time and intimate friend of the deceased, and knew him as few others did, said, "His life was consistent with his profession and his influence was always for the moral uplift of his fellow-man. Bro. Gerringer leaves to mourn their loss his wife, who was Sallie B. Scott, six children, three others having preceded him to the grave, one brother, and one sister, and a large connection of relatives and friends.

His remains were interred in the family cemetery at Fair Grove to await the resurrection morn. H. E. Rountree.

Nelson.

Moses Fletcher Nelson was born in Caswell County, June 15, 1830, and died December 4, 1912, age 82 years, 5 months, and 19 days. (He) was married to Mrs. A. M. Nelson about the year 1867, and leaves behind a loving wife, and two living children, Mrs. J. M. Peggs and Mr. Walter Nelson. He professed religion about 36 years ago and united with the Christian church at Pleasant Ridge and remained a faithful member until his death. He was held in high esteem by the church and neighborhood. About 7 years ago he moved to Kernersville and made friends on every side. He was a loving husband, a devoted father, a most accommodating neighbor, a true and loyal citizen. Just before he died he pointed upward and told the writer he was pointing to his home above. Truly a good man has gone. Funeral by the writer at Pleasant Ridge in the presence of a large congregation. Rev. J. W. Pinix.

Raybone.

Mrs. Letitia, wife of Clem. Raybone, who died in 1866, died December 23rd, 1912. She was between ninety and one hundred years old. This is the nearest her age can be ascertained, and this is approximated upon her oft-made statement that she remembered well when the stars fell. That was February 1833.

In early life she was converted and united with the Christian church, Haynes' Chapel, where she remained until her latter days when she moved to Greensboro. She then placed her membership with the Baptist church where it remained till the Christian church was organized here. She then transferred again to her old much-loved faith. I am told, she was always devoted and loyal to the Christian church and was faithful to it till the end. Her character was always of the purest and most godly sort. She loved God and His Word and her highest delight was in His thoughts. She died triumphant having visions of heaven and her loved ones gone before, all dressed in white.

Sister Rayborne leaves to mourn their loss three children and twelve grand children, many relatives and friends. Her children are Jeff. D. Rayborne, of Cinn., Ohio; Mary Hodgkin with whom she lived just five miles in the country, and Mrs. Maggie Holder, of Proximity.

The funeral was conducted from Concord Friend's Church about eight miles from here and the body was interred in the cemetery at that place in the presence of a few relatives and friends.

SANCTIFIED TROUBLES.

Suffering is remedial when rightly received. Troubles are the tools by which God shapes us into beauty and usefulness. Sorrow is Mt. Sinai, where one may talk with God face to face if he will not be afraid of the thunder and lightning. The black threads in the loom are as essential to the perfection of the pattern as are the white. Trials are the rough file to rub the rust off our virtues; they are the sharp, whirling wheels that cut and polish the jewels of character; they are the fiery furnace purging away the dross that the gold may appear; they are the medicines, bitter but healing, that cure us of our moral maladies. Sanctified afflictions are spiritual promotions, are the shadows of God's wings. They show us our weakness and drive us to Christ. . . . God's blows are blessings; all his chastenings are caressings, all his privations and prohibitions are providences, all our grievances are godsend. "He loves his people when he strikes them as well as when he strokes them." We may be absolutely sure of this from many a plain message of Scriptures, as well as from multitudinous pages of personal experience. And the being sure that love divine is back of the blow is what robs it of all sting. The nearer we draw to him who handles the rod, the lighter falls the lash. "They who look upon God's face do not feel his hand," "do not in their prayer recall that they are chastised at all."—Rev. James Mudge, D. D.

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

SIN AND SERVITUDE.

Every one that committeth sin is the bondservant of sin. John 8:34. Golden-text for Sunday, Jan. 19.

It has been pithily pointed out that the two first chapters of the Bible deal with generation; the third with degeneration, and all the rest of the Bible with regeneration. At any rate the whole Bible is a monumental treatise whose central theme is Sin; of how man got into sin: and of how men may get out of the bondage of sin.

Be it said that many of the world's masterpieces of literature have been produced with Sin as their central theme: but nowhere in the realm of letters is there a more powerful and succinct setting forth of the origin of sin than in the third chapter of Genesis. Here we have a vivid picture of the beginning of sin in the world.

Satan, using the most subtle of all God's creatures, beguiles the woman by appealing first to her bodily sense. The tree had that which was good to eat, and then was beautiful to look upon. The aesthetic sense was appealed to. Added to this was the promise that she should be wise. Body, mind, and soul were to be soothed, appeased, pacified, elevated, edified.

And this is ever the persuasion and promise of sin. It makes one believe that body, mind, and soul will be benefited. It leads one to think that it will and can satisfy. Sin first persuades a person that, it is sweet, wholesome, elevating, gives liberty and sets free. And it persuades and promises the very opposite of what it is and does.

Adam and Eve were happy and were free, until they sinned. They then were neither happy nor free. The one iron-handed, cruel, heartless master in this world is sin. It puts its victims in bonds, and welds the chains of servitude mercilessly about the arms of its bending and bleeding slaves. It lays on the lash day and night and drives its suffering subjects to a more desperate and more deadly drudgery day by day. A sin stained life makes cowards and slaves of all whom it reaches and affects.

This is why we should dread and should hate sin so. It has no regard whatsoever for the high and pure and holy things, and evermore does the very opposite of what it persuades and promises. It would invade your home, and mind, and pluck the fairest flower therefrom and crush and trample it beneath unhalloved feet. It would sever every sweet and sacred tie on earth, and make of every happy home a veritable hell if it could.

It would lead your son to a drunkard's grave, and your daughter to a prostitute's hell if such comes within the reach of its subtle influence, its heartless reach.

Sin is the sole cause of man's bondage, of the world's suffering, of earth's agonies, of hell's groanings.

And the only escape therefrom is in Him who conquered sin and gave Himself a ransom for many.

THE MISSIONARY SITUATION.

Be it understood that no amount of censure we might feel disposed to place upon any one else will relieve us from doing our full duty in behalf of missions. The painful fact stares us in the face that we are now doing half our duty for missions, and as we see and feel it, God is not prospering us as a people as He would, on this very account. Systems and poor management and inefficiency in church work all rectify themselves after awhile; and it is exceedingly easy to justify our own failure to others and to other causes.

Granted then that our present system is cumbersome, inefficient and does not remove the main difficulty after all. Here is the monumental difficulty with us: We are not giving to missions, praying for missions, sacrificing for missions, studying missions as we ought. We are simply not interested in missions as we should be. If we were we would never have fallen into the deplorable situation which now confronts us. We have a depleted treasury, an increasing indebtedness, and fewer missionaries than we formerly had. Just face that stern and stubborn fact, brethren, till it saturates you, soul, mind and body.

Now if we were giving enough for missions, thinking and studying enough about missions, and sufficiently interested in missions that sort of thing would never have occurred.

The way out of the difficulty? We must do more for missions, give more to missions and learn more of missions. We are either a non-missionary or an indifferent missionary people; and God can't prosper such a people as he would like and keep His word. What shall we do?

AN EXPLANATION.

At any rate some of our beloved brethren are taking note of the "missionary situation." It is time. It has been time long since. We have had to strike some straight blows to get any notice taken of the matter. So we at last have the consolation of knowing that "somebody cares." Under a recent date we had a letter from Dr. O. W. Powers, Home Secretary of our Mission Board. The letter was personal, but the facts it contained seemed so much to the point, and the spirit of the letter was so generous and brotherly that we wrote Dr. Powers for permission to print his letter. Now that it may have the same publicity that was given our editorials on the subject we yield much of our editorial space and print the letter in full as, follows:—

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

My attention has been called to your editorial of December fourth on the missionary situation. I have read it with surprise and great perplexity. Will you pardon me for commenting on some of its statements.

In the article you seem to say in effect, first, that the mission receipts are not increasing, but decreasing; second, that no progress is being made on the foreign field; third, that nothing effective is being done about it; and fourth, that the Dayton "Officials" ought to resign. You are saying this, too, at the very beginning of the most important campaign for foreign mission funds we have ever made, and at a time when the men in charge need the confidence and co-operation of the entire brotherhood as much or more than they have ever needed it. I am at a loss to understand it. It is so unlike anything that either personal acquaintance or knowledge of your work as editor or officer would cause one to expect, that I hardly know how to say anything to you about it.

It would not be fair to you to assume that you made these statements without careful study, nor the demand for the resignation of the "Officials" without a full realization of what such a demand means. Yet upon the chance that some of the facts and considerations may have have escaped your notice and thought, I venture to try to set forth some things that may bear upon your statements and conclusions.

First, please compare the statement that the mission income is decreasing, with the following figures, taken from the published reports of our Mission Treasurer. They show the receipts for Home and Foreign Missions for the last six quadrenniums.

1890 to 1894	38,999.95
1894 to 1898	42,192.48
1898 to 1902	61,057.52
1906 to 1910	105,568.46

For the first half of the present quadrennium the receipts have been $66,106.50. If we can go to the close of the four years at the same rate it will give us over $130,000.00. Furthermore, a comparison of the home and foreign mission receipts for the last quadrennium and the first half of the present shows an approximate increase of the foreign receipts of over thirty per cent., of home receipts of over ten per cent, if we continue at the present rate.

Second, the statement concerning the foreign field—that our interests are growing less, is based upon the statement that we have no more missionaries than we had five years ago. But do you not think that account should be made of the fact that the native pastors (ordained) in Japan have been increasing in that period from six to thirteen? Should not more than fifty per cent. increase in church membership, and nearly or quite as much in Sunday school membership, count for something? Should no notice be taken of the fact that two schools have been maintained in Japan for most of the time mentioned, at a cost of about equal to that of two more missionaries? Should the acquisition of almost fourteen thousand dollars worth of property in Porto Rico, effecting an immense saving of rents, and giving our work permanence and possibility of future advance, not be counted as progress?

You say that nothing "effective" or "fetching" is being done about this deplorable situation. I suppose you know that during the past nine months the Foreign Mission Secretary has been holding consultations, either in person or by representatives with committees in nearly every Conference (except in New England and the South, where the matter was taken up with committees of the two Conventions); that he has secured the adoption of standards of foreign missionary giving in these Conferences for the most part far in advance of previous achievements with very many earnest pledges of definite attempts to realize these standards in the "March offering" or during the Conference year. You perhaps did not know that literature is prepared, ready to send out, as soon as the "Convention offering" is out of the way. (By direction of the Convention the public campaign for the March offering is limited to the three months previous to the offering) This campaign may not be "effective" or "fetching," but none has ever been more carefully planned, nor received more general approval. And I hope that I may be pardoned for suggesting that its effectiveness will not be helped by discrediting the "Officials" just as they are about to make their appeal.

And finally, my dear brother, who are these "Officials" who ought to "graciously give way"? Do you mean the entire Mission Board? Or do you mean the Foreign Missionary Secretary? Or should the Home Mission Secretary resign because the Foreign Mission work does not prosper?

It is possible that a change of "Officials" might produce a change in results. Whether the change would be for the better or not may not be quite clear. My personal conviction is that the steady increase in Foreign Mission receipts, and the constant growth in the foreign field which is exhibited by each annual report for the last five years, are largely due to the patient, persistent, effective work of Dr. M. T. Morrill. I might recount some of the difficulties which have confronted him, but these would not be of interest, except to show that whoever administers this work will have a difficult task. And honestly, I do not know who could have done better.

I beg that you will consider this matter a little further. And when you have done so, I feel sure that we will have, not your condemnation, but as in the past, your hearty co-operation.

O. W. Powers.

We are not in this affair to condemn, but to try to awaken, endeavor to arouse. So we will think over good Doctor Power's letter a week, and see if we may not find in it something to help. We want to be fair; but also do we want to see our mission interests making more progress than heretofore. But, Dr. Power's letter is worth considering somewhat.

THE PASTORS' CONFERENCE.

The Conference of ministers called at the recent session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference convened at Elon College last Tuesday, January 7th. Rev. J. W. Holt was chosen chairman, Rev. J. O. Cox, Secretary. A constitution and by-laws were adopted. The name agreed upon for the body was "The Ministers' Council of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference." The Council is composed not only of ministers of the conference named, but of those having work in the Conference or living contiguous thereto. It is to meet quarterly at Elon College on Tuesday after the first Sunday in January, April, July and November. The object of the Council is to discuss the best plans of doing efficient pastoral work and developing church work along all lines. The Council should prove wonderfully helpful and beneficial.

ELON COLLEGE LETTER.

The Protestant Church looks with pity at the priest-ridden Catholic layman, and he does deserve pity. But I am not sure that he and his fellows are so much worse or than we Protestants, who are specialist-mad. The priests may be corrupt but of all the tyrants known to history the modern skeptical specialist seems to be most odious and self-assertive.

I have recently been engaged in reading some of the books by some of these learned ones, and the complacency and finality with which they dismiss many of the cherished beliefs of the ages is astounding. One spoke of the inspiration of the Scriptures as a certainty, but in the next sentence declared it to be the same as the afflatus which moulded Shakespeare's phrases. They see more authority in a stone, supposed to have been graven by a man in some distant age, than they see in the Word, who made the universe.

Much learning has made these men mad. This is not to argue against learning, for without education we would soon relapse into ignorance, superstition, and barbarism. But it is to point out that mere learning, without a corresponding development of the spiritual life is an exceedingly undesirable thing. To accept the opinion of an intellectual specialist, who prates with authority in respect to spiritual matters, when his own spiritual life has been undeveloped, is to do as silly a deed, it seems to me, as to recognize the sovereignty of the priesthood or the infallibility of the Pope.

Education and learning are great forces, but they are blind leaders of the blind, unless the spiritual life of those who receive their benefits is also ripened and broadened in the process of their getting. That is the mistake of the modern system of State education. It has set its face in the direction of mere intellectual development, leaving the spiritual interests to take care of themselves. The result is that we are fast gravitating toward an age of agnosticism, infidelity, skepticism, and atheistic specialism, from which we can only be saved by giving strict heed to the vital issues involved and persistent support to the institutions of learning which are dedicated first to Christian character and secondarily to intellectual culture, for in these institutions and their product will be discovered the ripest, and most helpful form of specialism.

W. A. Harper.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell, Lakemont, N. Y., delivered a magnificent sermon, full of spiritual uplift Sunday morning, his theme being God's Free Gift in Christ. Sunday evening he spoke eloquently and convincingly on behalf of Christian Education. This week he is to deliver four lectures on the Reformation in England.

FAITHFULNESS.

The great virtue!

It is the virtue to which Jesus promises the crown of life: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life." Serving leads to ruling.

Did you ever notice that "being faithful unto death" at first covers a long period, but that it constantly changes its impression of the mind? At first, affliction seems heavy, and as if to continue a long time. Later, the affliction becomes "light" and but for a moment, as Paul says: "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment."

The whole of time, as compared with eternity, is but for a moment. And faithfulness results in a "for more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." And the weight, then, is not in the affliction, but in the glory; and it is eternal.

Time is a "moment." When the son is one year old, and the father is forty, the father is forty times as old as the son. But when the son is forty, the father is only twice as old. When Moses had spent forty years of his life in exile it seemed to him that half of his life had been so passed. But when he stood on Mount Pisgah, looking over the land of promise, it was only a third of his life that had been passed in exile. And when, thousands of years later, he met Jesus and Elijah on the mount of transfiguration, his previous exile of forty years must have seemed but "for a moment". What a joy then to him that he had been "faithful unto death"!

Every moment of a faithful life makes the period shorter. It is only one moment at a time that is required. And at any given moment, one may be nearly through; and on looking back it will all seem like a moment. What did Moses' faithfulness for 120 years seem like, when he appeared to Jesus on the mount, having been in glory for thousands of years? Earthly life is a "moment".

Faithfulness is the great virtue: for on it depends the victory of the general, the reward of the soldier, and the success of every good cause.

Faithfulness tests the reality of every other virtue.

CARELESSNESS.

There is not one who has ever given this subject any thought but what knows that it has reached many hearts and ruined many lives. We have always been hindered more or less in every undertaking in life by our carelessness. But it seems to me that there has never been a time in any age of the church when church people were so careless as they are now, about their duty. Think, dear brethren, as you read and see if you are not careless in many ways.

In the first place I want to speak of the carelessness of the preachers, especially in the Alabama Conference of which I am a member. Our church suffers to some extent from the carelessness of the pastors. In the first place we wait until the year is about gone to begin planning the work of the church. The carelessness of the members of the church robs the church of what belongs to it. We preach to members on Sunday—after they have stayed away on Saturday reaching out after the gain of this world, laying in the plea that they were in too much hurry to go to church on Saturday. Should we not class them with the outside world and preach to them repentance?

In the next place, if we would commence planning for the finances of our church in November instead of August, I believe that our churches would all come up with their apportionments.

In the next place, we have been very careless this time about writing for The Sun.

So you see that our preachers are careless, but let's see about the laity of the church.

Of course we want our church to have a good membership and come up to Conference with the apportionments paid, but we don't want to be put to much trouble or expense to do it. We want our church to have a good live Sunday school, but we want the other fellow to run it while we are visiting our kinfolks, or staying at home to entertain our company who don't go to Sunday school because we don't ask them to go.

I know of a church which before it had its house ceiled or had any heater in it had a good live Sunday school, summer and winter. Last Sunday, because of feeble health, I was unable to go to my appointment at Corinth, and in the afternoon I took my little children with some other little folks, and went to Sunday-school. We held Sunday school with one male member and three female members of that church, with one teacher present and no superintendent. I was made to think that carelessness was doing its hurtful work in this community, because in this church we have three deacons and neither of them was present. And on my way to church I saw men and women who had not bathed or put on any clean clothes for Sunday. This is not the only place, but I just mention this as an example. We have many places where they are just as careless, but it makes my heart ache to see the people so careless.

People of the Christian Church, let us wake up and go to work. May God help us to see that we are careless, and so mend our ways.

Yours in the Master's service,

J. D. Dollar.

PRAYER AND PAINS.

Don't you think, John, that the time has come to recognize the claims of Jesus Christ?" An old schoolmaster, looked into the bright, expectant face of his favorite pupil, asked the question earnestly, and then wisely left the lad to his own thoughts. The fierce battle, the rebellion, and the final yielding to the call of God's Spirit—no story has ever been written telling of these, but a few years later the lad, John Eliot, went out from the school-room to his mission to the American Indian. After his death, upon the fly-leaf of the Indian grammar which he had made, was found written: "Prayer and Pains through faith in Jesus Christ can do anything." The years passed—his work seemingly left unfinished.

"I do not seem to have found any corner. I—I do not believe God can use me!" And the fine, sensitive face of the young man quivered with disappointed pain as he spoke to his friend Jonathan Edwards. "I don't know about that, David," replied his friend. "Have you ever seen this little book?"—taking from a shelf John Eliot's Indian grammar in which was written, "Prayer and Pains through faith in Jesus Christ can do anything," and handing it to him. "Look it over, together with this copy of the Life of John Eliot, and let me know what you think of it." And after looking it over, David said to his friend: O, I know what I shall do; I'll take John Eliot's work where he left it." And David Brainerd became the successor of John Eliot. Two years he worked, and then fell sick and died; so well had he wrought that the great Jonathan Edwards cried in his grief: "I believe that God blundered when he let David Brainerd die."

But God had not blundered. Jonathan Edwards, with tender, sympathetic touch, told the story in the Life and Letters of David Brainerd, and one day a copy fell into the hands of the schoolmaster cobbler in England. The cobbler became oppressed with the darkness of heathenism the world over; he interested his neighbors; he became a preacher; and at last he, William Carey, became the founder of the modern missionary movement.

But the mission of the Life and Letters of David Brainerd did not end there. Another copy found its way into the hands of a godly young woman, and finding the book inspiring reading, she sent a copy to her brother at Cambridge. He opened the book in the early evening. It was two in the morning when he turned the last page. It was gray dawn when he rose from his knees. And Henry Martyn followed in the footsteps of William Carey.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

REPORT AND PLANS OF THE WOMAN'S BOARD OF N. C. & VA. CONFERENCE.

The Societies that have been organized in this Conference are—Pleasant Grove, Va. number of members 22. Amount of dues collected for the three quarters is $18.60.

Five dollars sent as a special gift by Mrs. Emily McDowell making in all 23.60 from this society.

List of officers for the past year were Mrs. N. T. Farmer, Pres. Mrs. R. D. Thompson, Vice Pres. Mrs. R. D. Farmer, Secretary Mrs. G. C. Talbert, Treasurer Mrs. M. F. Cook, Supt. of Literature.

The Society at Ingram, Va. has 10 members and has sent in $6. for 2 quarters since its organization.

The officers are Mrs. Charlie Dunn, Pres. Miss Mattie Adams, Secretary Miss Hester Kent, Treasurer.

I think there is an organization at the First Christian Church, Greensboro. but it has not been reported.

We regret that we have no better reports for 1912, and that we cannot compare very favorably with the work our good sisters of the Eastern Va. Conference have done.

But our churches are much more scattered and as Dr. Atkinson said, "one cannot instil into others what one hasn't and doesn't know." So I think your Woman's Board hasn't had the enthusiasm for the knowledge of missions to lead others, but we catch more of the spirit as the days go by and we hope for better results for the year 1913.

The Convention Board set as a goal $1,000 for the Southern women to raise this year and the proportional part of that for the N. C. and Va. Conference would be $150. We have fallen far short of this but we must put forth greater effort during the coming year.

We have tried to organize other Societies by writing to the pastors and some of the women of the different churches, but it seems they have not been quite ready.

We could think of no better plan to awaken an interest than to ask that a lady delegate or visitor from every church be present at Conference (and we ask the same for next year). We hope that every one who is present will get an inspiration that will cause them to go home to their respective churches, with a desire to organize the women for this greatest of all task, the evangelization of the world. The women of our church have been slow to undertake what women of other denominations have been busy about. Let us bestir ourselves and try to create a missionary atmosphere. Let each one of us, earnestly ask ourselves this question. Am I giving myself, my prayers, as well as my means to this cause?

How shall we plan for more effective work?

As the saying is, "it is hard to teach old heads new tricks," so let us first begin by organizing more cradle rolls and young people's societies, as the children are the hope of the future.

Let us teach them missions and to give to missions, that is, train them to a larger conception of the great plan of salvation than we have had.

2nd I think it would be inspirational to have a mid year convention of the women of the Conference. And let this include all the Superintendents of the young people's work—which should have an important place on the program.

3rd By interceding with the Father to move the hearts of men and women of the church who have not consecrated their purses to the enthronement of Jesus as King. God can move their hearts to give to this cause when our appeal fails.

4th By placing before the people, the facts that will prove the need and the marvelous openings in the home and foreign mission fields. Missionary literature is sadly needed, and often when had is not read, because interest is not aroused. The minds and the hearts of the people are not ready to receive it.

5th By instituting more mission study classes, so that we may realize our own obligation to the work, we are beginning for the men, women, and children of heathen lands, and to the missionaries who have given themselves to God for service. that we will say, by the help of God, we can do something and we will. Let us plan large things for God and expect great things of God and He will not fail us.

Minnie F. Cook,

Sec. of Woman's Board of N. C. and Va. Conference.

CONSCHOCKEN LETTER.

Yesterday was our first anniversary with the Gulph Church. Separated so far from our loved ones and from scenes and associations of former years, there is a sense in which it has been a trial to live and serve in this field, but the difficulty has not been with the field, for we have felt grateful for the opportunities and advantages found here for service and for the preaching of the gospel. The people have been exceedingly good and kind to us and if I remember correctly the church has granted thus far our every request for the work here. During the year there have been twenty-seven professions of faith, seven additions to membership, eleven candidates baptized including consecration of children, and eleven funerals. A year ago there was a decided deficit in the finance and today the general fund and pastor's fund combined are ahead possibly $250. with all bills paid. I have hesitated to report these items because some might conclude that I was calling attention to myself, but I do not take any credit myself in the little that has been accomplished, for as I review the field and its possibilities they grow larger with the passing days and I feel entirely unequal to the demands and indeed am unequal without the presence and power of the Spirit.

Prof. John Conrad, son of Rev. John Conrad a former pastor of the church for 23 years has taken charge of our Junior Choir and church music to the delight of the little folks and our people generally. Brother Conrad is a Journalist with the Philadelphia Press, a member of another denomination, and the pastor personally appreciates his unselfish and efficient services and cooperation.

Our Ladies' Aid Society which now has a membership of about seventy met recently in the Sunday school rooms of the church with about thirty present and an offering of about $14.00.

Our union revival services continue this week at the Holiness church which will close the series. There have been very few professions of faith since the services were carried from the Gulph church yet much good has been accomplished in other lines among which is the cultivation of a more friendly and brotherly spirit between the churches of the community. A goodly number worshipped with us yesterday and the Sunday school was normal with about twenty-five in my Bible class.

Sincerely,

Murdock W. Butler.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—The engagements spoken of in The Sun last week for Brother Fry, missionary at home on furlough from Japan, are all cancelled on account of sickness, writes I. W. Johnson of Suffolk, Va.

—"God news indeded is that in The Sun last week with reference to our Southern Christian Publishing Company. How I wish I were able to take a part of the additional stock in same," writes one of our faithful and loyal pastors.

—A letter from Rev. T. M. Stroud, Chapel Hill, brings the good news that our Christian church building there goes up rapidly and successfully. All the brick work is complete and the wood work is being prosecuted.

—Rev. J. W. Holt is a happy man in his labors and services with the loyal and devoted membership of Bethlehem and Union churches, Alamance, these congregations showing him constant marks of love and appreciation which greatly edify and encourage him in his work.

—Elon College and community are enjoying a great treat this week in the visit and public addresses of Dr. Martyn Summerbell of Lakewood, N. Y. His sermon last Sunday on "God's Free Gift Through Jesus Christ" was an utterance of beauty, logic, and gospel truth such as one seldom hears.

—The manager of the mechanical part of our new Publishing House, Mr. C. W. Montgomery, of Troy, Ohio, arrived with his good wife at Elon College Thursday last and is now getting busy ordering type and machinery and setting the House in order for business. Our hope is to begin operations, to some extent at least by February 1st.

—M. L. J. says a word appropos of our "Standing Committees," I wish we could abolish, in our churches, conferences and conventions that term "Standing Committees." It is too significant, too much to the point, reveals too cruelly the actual, stubborn fact. Our "Standing Committees" just stand.

—We are needing cash on the subscriptions to our Publishing Hiuse stock now so as to meet payments and discount bills. We sent out a letter to this effect last week, and in response thereto more than a thousand dollars came through the mails in three days. If all subscribers respond promptly in keeping with this lead we shall be able to effect great saving to the House in discounting bills for machinery and equipment.

—Our good missionary brother, Kitamo Takaya, of Sendai, Japan in making a plea for our Foreign Mission Secretary to come on a visit to Japan makes the strongest plea we can think of why that official should not go to Japan now, but should with the rest of us bestir himself to the limit of his power and ability to send out other missionaries and so strike "a new courage" into the hearts of those of our faithful, but dwindling few, who are there. We of the Christian church know well enough Japan's great need, if we would only rise to meet that need. Conditions there, we know, call for our help, but we are not rising to meet or remedy those conditions.

—That is a wholesome account indeed Dr. Staley gives in Suffolk Letter this week of our Dayton Publishing House. All rejoice that the House is making money and now has assets of more than a hundred thousand dollars. Now watch our Southern Publishing House soon to begin business, march along toward the goal already reached at Dayton. If we manage well and pull together there is no reason why it should not do on a small scale and pay as well to the amount of capital invested, what the Dayton House is doing on a large scale. At any rate the report from Dayton is most gratifying, and we rejoice at the great progress and development there.

—The present Directors of the Publishing House believe that it as an institution can serve the church best by first becoming a paying proposition. When it shall have a solid financial foundation, making money for itself and its share-holders then will it best be able to do greatest, most creditable, most efficient service. No institution with a depleted treasury or verging on bankruptcy can serve the great purpose whereunto it is created. For this reason, beloved, we shall stand and pull together to make the Southern Christian Publishing company a strong financial institution first of all. The best farm is the farm that pays; the best store is the store that pays; the best bank is the bank that pays. If this will not hold for a denominational publishing house we don't know.

—Our Publishing Company's building is a credit to the share holders at any rate, and makes another mile in our progress.

—Our friend, W. W. Elder, of Columbus, Ga., (his school mates at Elon knew him as Bud Elder) is now happily located as Secretary in Y. M. C. A. work, at Brooklyn, N. Y. He is in the Navy Y. M. C. A. there, having been promoted from the Navy Y. M. C. A. work at Norfolk, Va. Of his work in Brooklyn he writes, personally,

"I had been here only a short time when I had a chance to go to San Domingo. I went, and I lived aboard a war ship for ten weeks, visited many of the seaport towns but was in the harbor of San Domingo City the greater part of my time. This is a very quaint old city. The wall that at one time surrounded the city still stands. The tree to which Columbus tied his boat still stands. The castle that Diago built, in which he lived and which is also said to have rivaled the Royal Palace of Spain still stands and can easily be seen from the main gate into the city.

I visited the cathedral in which the bones of Columbus are buried. The American Government has offered the Dominican Government an enormous amount of money for these ashes but have not been able to get possession of them yet.

Everything is so odd and peculiar in these tropical towns. The people seem to do no work, and, there seems to be no particular need for it, clothes seem to be a luxury rather than a necessity, I believe if they had more more work to employ their minds and hands, they wouldn't have so much time to scrap among themselves.

It was quite an interesting experience to see how the islanders live. The whole trip was worth a great deal to me. I'm getting experiences in this great work that I could not possibly get anywhere or in any other position. I'm satisfied, contented and enjoying a good salary and this great city with its unlimited opportunity for Christian service."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I am on return trip from Dayton, Ohio, where Board of Trustees of the C. P. A held annual meeting 8th—10th of this week. This Board is composed of O. W. Whitelock, J. S. Halfaker, E. L. Goodwin, J. S. Frost, A. M. Heidelbaugh, A. M. Kerr, J. N. Dales, G. D. Lawrence, and W. W. Staley. All present except G. D. Lawrence.

The Board met in the C. P. A. chapel January 8th. At 11 o'clock the Board adjourned to pay respect to the departure of J. F. Burnett, D. D., Secretary of A. C. C., and his wife, for Porto Rico. They will remain in Porto Rico till the dedication of the new church at Ponce.

President O. W. Whitelock reported $348.35 had been received from Candace Witcher, Pawpaw, Michigan during the year; and that $485.00 had been received March 20, 1912, through Rev. G. D. Lawrence, from Mary A. Gensel. Also, that $225.00 had come to the Association by the will of J. J. Cook and that the interest on said $250.00 was to furnish the Herald of Gospel Liberty to superannuated and needy ministers. Enough interest had accumulated to send the Herald to thirteen this year.

The report of Treasurer, D. E. McCullough, showed balance from 1911 and receipts for 1912$47,895.19
Paid out for 1912$46,100.00

Cash Balance in Bank Jan. 1 1913. 1795.19

The House is now out of debt and the Board decided to set aside, hereafter 20 per cent. of the net gain each year, and thus create a Church Extension Fund to be loaned to town and city churches for building purposes at 3 per cent. per annum. The fund begins with the sum of the $348.35 from the Candace Witcher estate, and the $485.00 from the J. J. Cook will, which makes $833.35 now to the credit of the Church Extension Fund.

It was voted, also, to set aside 5 per cent. of the net gain of the House each year as an Emergency Fund and that both of these Funds be kept at interest and the interest earned be added to the respective Funds.

In view of the fact that a Memorial church is to be erected in Springfield, Ohio in honor of Rev. N. Summerbell, D. D., and in view of the fact that Dr. Summerbell at one time rescued the House from the Sheriff's hammer, and rendered invaluable service to the Association at other crises in its history, the Board voted a donation of $200.00 to be used in a memorial window or some other suitable memorial to Dr. N. Summerbell, in the Springfield church.

Agent Netum Rathbun's report showed net gain for the year, after extensive but necessary repairs, improvements, and donations, to be $4728.21.

The Board decided to donate the entire rent of rooms occupied by the Mission Secretaries, Mission Treasurer, and Secretary of the A. C. C., which sum will amount to about $500.00 a year. This includes light, heat, and janitor service. Heretofore only part of these rents were given.

I think it may be said that the policy of the Board is to aid the entire denomination in proportion to its own success. If the House makes money, the denomination will share in the benefits.

The year 1912 closed with the following

ASSETS:

Real Estate$101,075.75
Bills Receivable Stocks40,716.46

Total Assets Jan. 1, 1913...$141,792.21

Agent Netum Rathbun is fully in harness, manages the affairs in a business-like manner, and all the machinery seems to run without friction.

I took supper with Dr. J. P. Barrett and his good wife one evening and that seemed like home.

W. W. Staley.

NORFOLK LETTER.

Thank God for work.

Any sort, so it's honest.

Better still, if it's a job you love!

If it isn't, you had better keep on looking until you have found one that you can love. Otherwise, it's flat failure, or at best, mediocrity for yours.

Half-hearted effort never yet made a whole-soul man. No one was ever nerved to nobler achievement by the sight of duty perfunctorily done. Shoddy work is a shame.

One has traveled far along the road to Victory when he has become obsessed by the idea that he has simply "got to make good" after a clean, straight-up fashion; and that he has no alternative but to mix in the fight and add his quota to the day's battle for humanity. Such an one would be scandalized at the thought of putting less than his "dead level best" into his Task.

Don't worry about the Reward; only do the work and the reward will follow as the day and night. I have a sort of gnarled, knotty kink in my mental machine which makes me think that he who labors primarily for the Reward, will both miss the reward and botch the job. But, contrariwise, the reward has a habit of sneaking along after the fellow who is chiefly intent upon "delivering the goods."

I meet a man every day who, in the world's great mart may be classed as "unavailable" who, either through insufficient preparation, or want of earnest purpose, or both, have nothing to offer their fellows in exchange for place and preferment. These are the incompetents, the inefficients, the ne'er-do-wells, who complain that "luck" is against them. Their lives are passed in an effort to put as little as possible into existence while they seek to get as much as possible out of it.

We must give men something genuinely and solidly worth while before we may hope that they will give us much that is worth while. Certainly, this is fair. We must try to make them glad that such as we came into their midst, that we bore their sorrows and shared their joys. If for them we set examples of endurance, of fortitude, of patience and courage, thus the better nerving them for the bat-le they will hold out hands of gratitude to us.

Again, shoddy work is a shame.

Especially, if that work be religious work.

Slovenly methods and half-hearted effort have no more assurance of success in the church than in secular occupations, and are far more repugnant and reprehensible.

I have heard of churches that have made mighty and swift strides in growth by some strange, mysterious "short-cut" of human devising which seemed to exclude the need of much prayer, spiritual preparation and godly application of toil and prudence, but I have never seen, or been in any such churches.

It is better to be mistrustful of such reputed success. The Apostles had to work for their success. So did the Reformers. So did Wesley. And Moody. And Torrey. And so must we, if our success is to be solid and lasting. There are "wild-cat" methods in ecclesiastical, as in other realms, but these we should avoid as the pestilence.

Here's to a year of hard and sincere toil, may we be spared for its doing.

Henry Spencer Booth.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES

The Ministers' Council of the N. C. and Va. Conference met in the Y. M. C. A. Hall on Tuesday morning of last week. It was not a largely attended session, but it was hopeful and helpful. A constitution was adopted and the second meeting appointed here in April.

The formal opening of the new graded school building for the Elon special tax district on Monday evening last was a notable event for the town and community. The county Board of Education was present, all of whom with many of our own citizens made appropriate addresses. The building is one of which any community may well be proud.

Rev. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., whose gifts in revivalistic services for young people are well known, is to begin the annual series of meetings on Monday following the fourth Sunday. There is a fine opportunity for a great meeting and every indication points in that direction.

Prof. F. S. Blair, Guilford College, N. C., addressed the students Wednesday morning on behalf of the N. C. Inter-Collegiate Peace Contest to be held in Raleigh in March. Elon will hold her local contest in February.

Dr. Amick has organized a class in Public Speaking of fifty-two members.

THE CALL OF THE WORLD.

December the third, at night, West Market Street Methodist church, listening to mission lectures by Mr. Doughty. The same subject is before us, "The Call of the World;" it is fine. This is the most charming privilege of my life. If every church and Sunday school worker would attend these discussions and think over them, we all would be enthusiastic. I am waking up, I think. If not, I am having wonderful dreams.

To-night we are considering the factors that determine a nation's place among the nations. Sunday night we considered the "Wilderness" of the field, last night we considered the "Unfinished Task," and to-night "A nation's Place in the Task." Our prayer is that some glimpse of larger truth be given us to-day. As the prayer, we all unite in one petition that the Lord God may lay hold of the city of Salisbury where the Laymen's Missionary Movement is now in annual session.

In determining a nation's place among the nations of the following principles apply: accessibility, character of the people, character of religion, climate, natural resources, acquired resources, education, size, number of people, government, location and geographical features. Looking at the list and then at the map we put the determining features of the nation to be "Location" and "geography." All great nations are in one zone,—North Temperate called "The Belt, of Power." No great power is out of this zone. By "great nations," is meant, those countries which have political and commercial interests in other countries. In the second place the greatest nations are those which have the most of accessible seacoast, harbors, etc. and navigable rivers. Besides this, greatness has followed in the wake of Christianity.

Now passing hurriedly, "What is America's place on the map?" In the first place it is the only continent facing both the Atlantic and Pacific. On either coast it has several splendid harbors which may be called "world harbors." Opening her great rivers to free trade in the east, getting rid of Alsba, of France, in the Mississippi valley, and reserving the great strata of her great territory for a free people is the greatest thing of the world. It locates the United States to-day nearest to all parts of the world and from its splendid harbors it can reach all parts of the world with ease. Besides Christianity has always traveled westward, and the United States is in its path, in the direct firing line of Christ. There are evidences of this in the fossil history of China which tells a story that she in ages past was a great nation and a powerful government. Again the United States has rail road mileage enough to duplicate all the mileage of the world and then belt the planet three times. These facilities offer the United States most prized opportunities for conveying the Gospel to the world. Therefore, lumping it all together, the matter may be summed up in the following: Location, Resources, Character of the people, and vision and consecration are the real determining factors. The United States and North America is in the lead of all the world, for commerce, for power, and for Christ, and she will keep her place of leadership only as she can keep her vision and consecration. We believe she will keep it, because God has never intended that a community should be so strategic as ours and then fail to take its place among the nations. Her vision must be, "Not America for America's sake, but America for the world's sake." Can she furnish the men and the money adequate with the vision and consecration required? If so the problem is solved. "Men we've got the biggest opportunity of all the world." Religion and missions is her superior task.

H. E. Rountree.

IS IT RIGHT?

I wish again to call the attention of the Sun's readers to a few facts on which they are to be permitted to sit in judgment.

We have recently sent out statements of amts. due the Christian Sun aggregating more than fifteen hundred dollars—these amts. are due from those who are more than one year in arrears. The law says these must be stopped and we are left without choice in the matter; but aside from what the law says, should the publisher be kept out of what is justly his, when he so much needs it? Again does not the interest of the church, in some measure hang on this very matter?

He who injures his church paper injures his church. He who injures his church injures himself on the spiritual side.

Thus you see that these matters become interlocked.

Now, my dear readers, not to attempt to tire you with a long article, is it right for you thus to treat your church paper? Brethren take the case.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PRINCIPLES.

The exercise for Christian Endeavor Day, 1913, is now ready for delivery. It is in harmony with the Christian Endeavor topic for the day, "Christian Endeavor Principles," and it is prepared by Rev. R. P. Anderson, who has prepared all of the recent Christian Endeavor Day programmes.

It is exceedingly interesting and instructive. It has parts of the Juniors, Intermediates, and older Endeavorers, as well as for the former members. It contains responsive reading for the audience, and a number of attractive songs, with music. Best of all, it gives brisk and forcible summary of the principles at the basis of the Christian Endeavor Society which have made it so remarkably successful. A sample copy is sent by the United Society for five cents; 25 copies, 50 cents; 50 copies, $1.00; 100 copies, $1.50.

THE C. E. World.

Subscriptions to the Christian Endeavor World may be sent to the editor of this department. New subscriptions, $1.05. Renewed, $1.30. This is quite a saving from the regular price. The World is indispensable in a well conducted C. E. Society.

CLASSES ENTERTAINED

The Baraca class of the First Christian Church, Greensboro, was the host of the Philathia class of the same church after the regular business meeting Tuesday night of this week. There were more than 100 people present and the evening was greatly enjoyed.

S. S. PLATFORM HELPS.

Jan 19. "Man's First Sin." Gen. 3: 1-12; 22-24.

Place. In and outside the Garden of Eden. Persons. God, Adam, Eve, the Serpent. Golden Text—"Everyone that committeth sin is the bond servant of sin."

Leading Thought—"The wages of sin is death."

Note the things the first three lessons of the year deal with

- 1—World
- 2—Man
- 3—Sin

Into the world that God created and pronounced good, there came that which was not good. Under the test that developed character in righteousness, our first parents were tempted to disobey God's word. They yielded, broke the divine command, and became dead in trespass and sin. No sooner had man fallen than in forgiving love, God came to his rescue with a promise of a way of salvation.

"This passage is a picture into which every man may look and see himself, and shudder at the terrible cost of sin. It is the greatest sermon ever preached to man as a warning against sin; a sermon which will never cease to be read so long as man is man and God is God. But there is also here a promise—a production of time when light will once more take the place of night; peace, the place of war; life—eternal life—the place of death; the seed of the woman shall eventually gain the victory."

The account of this first tragedy in human history and of this first foreshadowing of the plan of redemption, we stud to-day.

The Golden Text.

Bond servant meaning slave, is the outstanding word in the text. God wants men to have the dignity, the privileges, the liberty, the hopes of children, his heirs to inherit eternal blessedness. The devil tempts men to believe that they are being deprived of their rights and not allowed proper freedom.

To commit sin is to insist on exercising larger personal liberty than is consistent with the good of the individual and the peace and happiness of the family. The one who thus violates the sanctities of home and seeks his fortune where he has been told there are no restrictions to personal gratification, always, sooner or later, discovers that he has been deceived. When he reaches the tempter's promised land, he is robbed of every right, disgraced, chained hand and foot, a slave to sin, doomed to death.

Lesson Contrasts.

In Lesson 2 we saw man fair and innocent as he came from the hand of God; in Lesson 3 we must see him become foul and sinful as he turns away from his heavenly Father. In that lesson he was fearless; in this he is fearful. In that he was in harmony with all creation, and all the lower animals came obediently under his guidance; in this he is out of harmony with God and his word and fancies that both have turned against him. In that lesson he felt at home with God, enjoyed living companionship with his heavenly Father; in this he feels afraid of God and tries to hide from him.

Lesson Hymns.

"Yield not to Temptation"; "My Soul be on thy Guard"; "Sweet Hour of Prayer"; "I Need Thee every Hour"; "Come Ye Disconsolate"; "Father of Mercies, in Thy Word."

Lesson Announcement.

For three weeks we have been studying about the beginning of history. Genesis is the story of the beginnings. Next Sunday's lesson is about the first offerings, the first murder, the first death. It shows what led to this murder, away back at the beginning. The same thing to-day causes a larger portion of all the murders committed. Think a little this week of a reason that leads boys and girls and older people to wish to hurt and harm others. These reasons will help us understand next Sunday's story.—Hageman.

BETTER C. E. MEETINGS.

Notes on Topic for Jan. 19—Matt. 18: 18-20.

This meeting is to be led by the prayer-meeting committee—you will sit at the front—and each one have a definite well prepared part. You are to show the others how to do. Make it an ideal meeting—no part long, singing, interesting, entertaining.

All Christian Endeavor meetings should include periods of sentence prayers. Nothing better trains the members to Christian activity, and nothing furnishes a higher spiritual tone for the meetings. If the leader does not call for them, let the president or some other member.

A meeting that begins in a rut is likely to continue in a rut, and through novelty is not to be sought for its own sake, yet a novel mode of beginning the meeting contributes much of its freshness and interest. Do not always start with singing; begin sometimes with prayer or with Bi-

FROM JAPAN.

Ishinowaki,
Oct. 27, 1912.

Dear Bro. Morrill:

My days are all Sundays and events crowd into one another so fast I find it difficult to keep track of myself.

For two nights Bro. Isokawa and I went 7½ miles to Iinogawa. There were seven young men waiting to be baptized, nearly all of them having some official position in the towns and all of them drawing salaries. As all wanted to be immersed, we went to the river and as the young men were particular about the place we got into a big boat and were polled out about a couple of hundred yards to a shallow place and in the beautiful moonlight they were baptized by Isakawa. They now have a working church of eleven of whom two are women and teachers in the school. One of the two is a graduate of the Ulsénonaga Girl's school and she presides at the organ beautifully. The young converts have ideas of their own, they call their church "the church of Love." Each member has pledged himself to win some one else to Christ. They also contribute a penny a month each for buying books for a circulating library. They meet once a week for Mutual Bible study. They bought out all the Testaments we had to sell and wanted more. It was an uplift to be with them. They have material there of which good preachers are made.

While there I addressed the advanced students on "The Higher Patriotisms" which consists of a developed mind and heart adapted to making men live good lives for the sake of their country, and avoid all practice and business which tends to break down society and destroy manhood. After our last meeting in which the communion was celebrated with joy, we went to bed late, but started back to Ishinimaki as soon as we could and reached there at noon.

How would you like to have a pair of dog boots? Sleeping in Japanese beds with covers too short and yourself sticking out at both ends is no picnic in the winter time. Even when the bed is lengthened, I begin to freeze up at the feet and it is not a pleasant experience to pass the nights that way. When I sleep with all my clothes on, the rest of my body keeps fairly warm, but for my feet I finally conceived the idea of dog boots. What are they like? They are made out of the hide of a yellow dog tanned with the hair on and the boots which are six inches high are made with the hair inside. As the weather gets colder, I shall appreciate them more not only when I sleep, but also when I sit in the Japanese cold homes, trying to keep comfortable while we have conversation about the great things of God. The only objection to the boots is that you are likely to leave yellow dog hairs around where you do not want them. Still they are not so disconcerting as fleas.

Now for a day in Isinowaki and I will bring this letter to a close. Yesterday the 27th of October was the day for opening the new railway line from Ishinowaki to Kogota about 20 miles and the day was a gala-day for the whole country round about. But we went at our morning service at the church as usual and were joined in our worship by delegations of young men and women from Iinogawa and Hisobuchi who had walked, some of them three hours to come to church and some of them four, the latter walking ten miles. I preached them a sermon on "The blood of Jesus," emphasizing the need of obedience to and devotion to Jesus in all things as a small return for His great love and sacrifice for us. After the sermon five women received baptism, three of them being kindergarten teachers. After this we had the Lord's supper together.

While Bro. Isokawa was busy with the candidates for baptism, I stood up and went closer to the baptistry to see and then a strange thing happened. An old man eighty one years of age (I spoke of him in a former letter), came forward, seized one of my hands, bent his head before me and put the hand he had seized upon it as if expecting that I had some miraculous power to bestow upon him. What is to come of his efforts to be saved in some other way than that which Jesus appointed remains to be seen. We are insisting with him on an absolute surrender to Jesus as the only way.

In the afternoon assisted by three young men, we opened a street meeting, sold all the Bibles Miss True had, and some Gospels. This meeting by taking turns in the speaking we kept up for two hours when weary throats and the lateness of the afternoon caused us to desist. But while the rest of us conducted the meeting Miss True distributed all the tracts she had. We regarded the meeting as in view of the crowds listened and the Testaments they bought as very successful. One of the boys wants to be a Bible student. (Not specially a theological student.) It would be very easy to gather up a company of students for Bible study and from the promising young men whom I have learned to love as I have met with them and prayed with them on this trip.

In the evening Bro. Isokawa and the young men opened a second street meeting while I preached again at the church. Later Bro. Isokawa came and preached a second sermon. The subject I discussed was that of the danger which so many people fall into of trying to see how little they can do for Jesus and still be saved. I tried to urge the importance of giving to Jesus such a whole hearted, loving service so that no question can come up either from the standpoint of one's own conscience or the criticism of others as to whether one is trying to do the will of Jesus. There is a path which is entirely safe and it certainly is a danger when one acts on the principle of trying to see how far he can wander away from it and not get lost.

For next Sunday other candidates have reported themselves as ready for baptism. On the whole it seems like the Lord gave special blessing to the church for that day and made it a banner day to His glory.

Sincerely yours in Christ,

A. D. Woodworth.

CONSHOHOCKEN LETTER.

Last Sunday was marked by unusually interesting incidents at the Gulph Mills church. Attendance at the regular services and Sunday school was up to normal. In the afternoon a Men's meeting was held at three o'clock in response to a call by the pastor and a few outside men of the community. It was strictly a men's meeting and the audience was estimated at two hundred, but a conservative estimate would place it at one hundred and fifty. For a country place it seemed good to us, and some of the old residents and church members said it was the largest audience of men they ever saw at the Gulph Church. The meeting was opened by singing, "Onward Christian Soldiers" and prayer.

By request of the pastor Mr. J. A. McFarland was made chairman with Prof. Conrad of the Philadelphia Press secretary and Mr. Jere Duncan Treasurer. Mr. McFarland presided with grace and dignity and showed ability to handle well the meeting. He stated the object of the meeting to be, the consideration of some plan by which to bring the men of the community together often for their mutual helpfulness and development in connection with a Bible Class movement. The Men's Bible Class of the M.E. Church furnished a male choir for the occasion which was not only entertaining but inspirational. Short and informal addresses were made by Mr. Parker S. Williams and Mr. L. J. Palmer, attorneys of Philadelphia and residents of this community, and Dr. J. Rufus Barr, teacher of the men's Bible Class of Conshohocken M. E. Church. They emphasized the importance of Bible study for men, its value to the community, the cultivation of social and friendly relations. A splendid spirit pervaded the entire audience from the start and the meeting was characterized by harmony, seriousness, enthusiasm, and fellowship. There are men present who had never been in the church here before. Rev. Dr. Hetherington of the Methodist church came during the exercises with an armful of books for his male choir and made a happy little speech. After the addresses the chairman again stated the object of the meeting and had cards passed through the audience for the signatures of those who desired to unite with the Class and in a few minutes fifty eight cards were returned signed, and many have been signed since. The temporary officers were made permanent officers until the organization is completed. Mr. L. J. Palmer was elected teacher of the class. Mr. Palmer is not only a strong lawyer but a teacher of experience and also has had experience as a Bible Class teacher. After the election, Brothers F. V. Pineheart and Ambrose Hyde rendered effectively a duet. While the closing hymn was being sung the newly elected teacher was conducted by the pastor of the church to the Sunday school room into which the members of the new class filed and were individually introduced to the teacher and a hearty handshake was enjoyed. For whatever was accomplished in the Sunday afternoon meeting much credit is due Mr. Parker S. Williams, Mr. J. A. McFarland, Dr. Rufus Barr, and Mr. L. J. Palmer. The writer feels personally indebted to these gentlemen for their kindly cooperation and valuable services, and also to Dr. Hetherington and his splendid singers for their contribution to the occasion.

Many hours of hard work had been given to bring to pass the meeting with its happy incidents, and now to carry forward to completion and fruition the work commenced new avenues are opened new responsibilities created and calls for more and greater sacrifices and a still more strenuous efforts are made. The new clan will meet next Sunday morning in connection with the regular school to complete the organization and outline work for the new year.

The Square Deal Bible Class of which mention has previously been made is composed almost entirely of women with the pastor as teacher. The new movement will not disturb any work we already have but will possibly lend inspiration and help.

Our Sunday school recently held a business session and elected officers for next year. I have occasion to express my appreciation of kindness at the hands of Mr. Isaac Griffith, Mr. Clyde Lobb, brothers Jas. Wolfong and Thos. Pearson.

Prof. John Conard, Miss Edith Krayner and Mrs. Butler are daily drilling the children in their Christmas Cantata to be given possibly on Christmas-eve. Since my last we have received three young ladies into church fellowship. Cottage prayer meetings are held every week since the revival and they are proving interesting and fruitful.

Sincerely,
Murdoch W. Butler.

WINCHESTER LETTER.

We began our revival services in Winchester the first Sunday in December. Rev. A. W. Andes was with us after the first week and won a warm place in the hearts of our people by his earnest preaching and good singing. The meeting lasted nineteen days and resulted in seven conversions and six accessions. The congregations were good throughout the series and many people were instructed in our work, who had not previously been in our congregations.

Our Sunday school held its Rally Day Service the 24th of November. There were 158 present and the offering, which was applied on the church debt, was $22.27. We have 217 enrolled in our Sunday school and the average attendance for the last two months has been 120.

The Sunday schools at both Winchester and Timber River rendered excellent Christmas programs to large audiences. The pastor's heart was made glad at the former by being presented with a fur lap robe from his Sunday school class and at the latter by a five dollar bill from the Christian Endeavor Society. We are deeply grateful for these tokens of friendship from the people with whom we labor.

KEPT IN HARNESS.

It should be the desire of every person to be kept busy in life. Especially is this true of the minister. As some have expressed it, he should take a pleasure in being "Kept in harness."

While it is a pleasure to the minister to be kept actively in the harness for life's work, it has been recently the pleasure of the writer to be kept in harness in a little different sense.

On December eighth, after preaching at Union, Southampton, when I came out to get my horse to leave the church, I found that he was dressed up in a nice new set of harness. I took a second look to be sure it was my horse. Then the people who were stationed in groups on the church ground watching me, as I then learned, gathered around me and I was informed that the harness was a gift from the church and Sunday school. Sister Maggie Kitchen also presented me with $1.75 in cash which was collected over the cost of the harness.

It was a complete surprise, but one that was very thankfully received. Words cannot express the heart's feelings, but we can say that we are indeed thankful for this deed of kindness. The last time I was at the same church, a good brother presented me with a bucket of lard. We are thankful for all these deeds of kindness. I am sure too if "Dan" could realize the true meaning of the act, he would be thankful to each one who had part in dressing him in this new set of harness.

Dear Children and Friends:

I must say the weather for the last few days has not seemed so much like mid-winter, tho the children rather like that for they play outside and have a great time. "Old Santa" brought a foot-ball to some of the boys and I would not be surprised if some team or other has a challenge for a game. The boys think they are "getting on to their job."

There was an item, in connection with the donation for the Burlington church, that of a cash offering of Mrs. J. H. Brook's S. S. Class which in some way was overlooked. The whole amount was reported correctly but I wish to mention this that it may be a suggestion to others. As a result of faithful efforts this class gave, in money $21.00 to the orphanage. I am planning to get in touch with every Sunday school in our churches with the offering of money. We need money on the year, and if the schools would give regularly it would be so much better for our institutions. We want to work all during seasons and equipped buildings with water and sewerage. There are about thirty-five schools entered in the big for monthly offering and, there are yet a great number who have not undertaken this, and we trust will very soon.

Yes, my dear friends, and you don't know how much we are enjoying the results of this plan and the generosity of the good people of Pleasant Grove.

That syrup tasted nice. I told the children they would not like this and I would get to eat it myself, but I had all of them like it. So you see, we know a good thing when we see it. Why not some body else do us that way.

Love and best wishes to all from,
Uncle Emory.

Wakefield, Va. Jan. 5, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I am a little girl almost four years old. I cannot write for myself so I get sister to write for me. I want to be one of the first to write to you.

Hope Santa Claus come to see all the little cousins. He came to see me, and brought me lots of pretty things.

I am the baby at home, I have two brothers and one sister. My nick-name is Blue-Eyes. I send my dime.

Your little niece,
Rebecca M. Anderson.

I think that is so nice, Rebecca, for you to remember the cousins when you have lots of good things. Come again.

Sanford, N. C. Jan. 6 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I will write my letter and send my dime for you. I had a fine time Christmas, my sister from High Point, N. C. came to see us, and my Uncle and Aunt from Carthage. I hope you and your cousins had a nice Christmas.

Our school begins Monday, Jan. 6th. I'm in the 6th grade. My sister was married and she lives at Colon. Well I close for now.

Your niece,
Annie Pearl Way.

I know it was fine to have all those kinsfolks visit you Christmas; it added much to the pleasure. My! if you had been here and seen how our little folks enjoyed themselves. Nothing lacking. About twenty-five started to school the 6th.

Crewe, Va., Jan. 7, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I'm ashamed of myself for being so far behind but for some reason mother neglected to write. I hope soon to be able to write for myself. I was seven years old the 17th of last October, and am in the second grade.

We are glad to see your picture in the Sun and anxious to see you in person. I think we are three months behind on dues. I enclose fifty cents. If that is not right will send the rest next time.

Your children,
Helen S. Foster,
Thomas C. Foster.

Yes; it is bad to get behind. Hope you will do better in the future. I think you are real smart in school; and it will be so fine when you are able to do your own writing. Then you can help mother.

AN ONLY DAUGHTER BELIEVED OF CONSUMPTION

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. THE MARTYR HERO.

By ROBERT OWSLEY SMITH.

Not only at the battle's front
Do heroes find their place,
Nor mid the stifling smoke of war
Is seen the bravest face;
Not where the red mouthed cannon roar
From throats of lurid flame,
But he who brooks his country's frown.
Ere he will share her shame.

He who cares not for fame but truth,
Who courts an honest grave
Ere he will seek a gilded throne,
And rule a gilded knave.
He who will dare to die for right,
Though die alone he must
And spurns the victor's wreath to yield
A martyr's sacred dust,

For such a hero earth may raise
A monument of gold,
Though on its gleaming shaft no hand
His courage can unfold;
Then let his great heart sweetly rest
Beneath a nameless stone,
And angels carve his epitaph,
A hero, though unknown.

MURDER.

Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer. 1 John 3: 15. (Golden text for Sunday, Jan. 26.)

The lessons this year so far have been giving us "beginnings." That is well, for knowing the origin of things helps us to understand the nature of things. In the three lessons of this quarter we have had the beginning of the world, the beginning of man, and the beginning of sin. We have today the beginning of murder, which is the natural order, for murder always grows out of sin. Now a little study of the beginning of murder will reveal the truth and the meaning of the golden text. Murder grows out of hate. Cain first came to hate his brother; then he killed him. What was this hatred all about? Look and you shall see.

Now do not say that Abel was religious and Cain was not. Such was not the case. Both were religious. Both went up to worship: both believed in God; both carried their sacrifices and made their offerings. But there was this difference: Cain's religion was one of form and did not go deep enough. Abel's religion was one of righteousness and went all the way to the heart. Cain's curse came, and God's wrath fell upon him, not from a lack of religion, but from a lack of righteousness. Cain's heart was not in his sacrifice, his service, his worship. And so he came away from his worship with a scowl upon his face, with wrath and anger in his heart.

Abel, on the other hand, came from his sacrifice and worship with a great peace upon his heart and a great light, even the light and joy and satisfaction, beaming from his countenance. Now this peace and joy on Abel's part was the source of jealousy, then of hatred on Cain's part. Our happiness, our joy, our contentment sting to the core, burn to the bottom of the heart, our enemies. The success of a foe makes the antagonist furious, desperate, murderous. Cain could not endure Abel's wonderful success, and boundless joy in sacrificing to, and serving God. The only possible escape was to remove his rival. Cain lifts his murderous hand and when the once beaming and joyous face of Abel lay still and stiff in death before him he knew then he would never again be stirred to uncontrollable wrath and anger by this man. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer. When we hate our brother or any one, we would murder him but for fear of being apprehended, called to account for our crime. In short, hatred in the heart is murder; save only it is not outwardly accomplished. Things without restrain, and so prevent the outward expression of what the heart feels and desires. And God looks not upon that which is without, but within. The man who hates is a murderer.

LET US MAGNIFY.

What a tendency we have to pull things down to a common, natural dead-level. We seem to think it is little in us to heighten and exalt things. I suppose this is why God loves children better than He does grown people; and makes them typical of his Kingdom. They magnify everything they touch, and invest it with some high and holy meaning. A child can take a bundle of rags, call it a doll and magnify it into a living child or a woman. A boy can get astride of a six foot stick and magnify it into a horse, and play with it as such. The tendency of the child is to magnify, to ennoble, to exalt.

So I suppose this is the reason God loves children better than He does grown-ups. This is God's work and He knows it is a great world. His presence is in it and His voice speaks through it. He wants us to magnify it. The sun set is glorious. Brilliant and magnificent color schemes and fancy shapes flow in the western skies. Why can't we see God's beauty and recognize His glory there?

Again and again and again David the Psalmist sings out "Oh! come let us magnify the name of the Lord." God's world is great. It is not little in us, but a sign of largeness to exalt, Him, magnify the people and things and theories around about us. Have you a great neighbor? Say so. Treat him as such, We neither make ourselves small, nor others either by honoring, exalting, magnify the many good and great people and institutions and things round about us.

OUR PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Many who subscribed for stock in our Southern Christian Publishing Company have sent in both payments and have received their bonds. This is well and helps greatly. There is a great saving in discounting bills for machinery and type and printing material. And if all would strain a point to do as very many have done it would enable us to keep on discounting bills, as we have done so far. We are now purchasing and installing stock and equipment. We are exceedingly hopeful that we may begin operation in our new house by Feb. 1. We are certainly installing a plant that the brotherhood generally and the share holders in particular will be proud of. Our plant will not be as extensive as some for we did not need this; but what we have is equal to any, and is sufficient to do the very nicest and best work of all that we undertake.

Our manager, Mr. Montgomery is here and is making such selections as suits his judgment and taste.

We have received highest recommendations of Mr. Montgomery as an all round printer and manager, among the letters received being one from our Publishing Agent, Dayton Ohio, Mr. Netum Rathbun who, as many know, is an exceedingly careful man as to the kind of printing he has done and sends out. Brother Rathbun says among other things in his letter "We consider Mr. Montgomery a gentleman in every respect, absolutely honest and thoroughly reliable. He has always been exceedingly careful with his work, and we do not know where you could get a man better fitted, or that would please your patronage more than Mr. Montgomery. On account of his painstaking, prompt and careful work he never had to solicit business, but was compelled to turn considerable of it away because he could not handle it." We are hoping to give Mr. Montgomery all the work he and his force with his splendid up-to-date equipment can turn out: and if success does not crown his efforts the fault shall not rest with us. We believe this institution can best serve its church and constituency by making it efficient and profitable: and to this end we shall bend every effort.

OUR WOMEN AND MISSIONS.

Just a little more than one year ago our good women of the Southern Convention began to move in the matter of forming Woman's Missionary Societies in the Conferences and in the local churches. A Convention Board was appointed and has had the general oversight of the work. This Board consists of Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., Chairman, Mrs. W. H. Carrall, Burlington, N. C. Recording Secretary, Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. W. T. Walters, Winchester, Va., Treasurer, Mrs. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga., Mrs. L. A. Johnson, Raleigh, N. C., Miss Bettie Stephenson, Roanoke, Ala., the Board thus being composed of one member from each of our seven Conferences.

This Board held its annual session in Raleigh early last spring and planned the work for the year. A Board for each Conference has been elected or appointed, and there are now many local Societies in the churches, and considerable work has been done during the time since active work first began.

Now, here is the object of this writing: The Convention Board as given above adjourned from the Raleigh session a year ago to meet in annual session at Elon College in May 1913.

Our suggestion is that this Board, instead of meeting in annual session merely, call a mass meeting or a convention, of the women interested in missions throughout the Convention.

This Convention or mass meeting could be composed of delegates from the local societies, or where there is no Woman's Missionary Society in a church, let the church select a woman who would attend a Woman's Missionary Convention and send her. Our conviction is that if our good women would come together once, and talk the matter over about Woman's Missionary Societies, How to organize them, and How to Conduct Them, Societies would quickly spring up, and there would be a general quickening of the work. We know that there are women in every church who would love to see a Society in their church, but how to start one and keep one going is the problem.

We believe a Woman's Missionary Convention with at least one delegate from every local Society, or one woman representative from each church would work wonders in missionary interest and enthusiasm among the women. What say the members of the Convention Board? The columns of the Sun are open for suggestions.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

This scribe feels honored—highly, because last week many of his notes were adopted as personals by the gifted and versatile editor, which shows that practice in writing makes perfection and kindles hope in a correspondent's breast that he may yet be a wise and influential editor. (The compliment is all ours, for we wrote every word of our "Notes" and are flattered all over to think that a great college President, versatile, eloquent, and learned, is willing to claim that our writing looks like his in print.—Ed.)

Dr. Martyn Summerbell's course of lectures on the Reformation in England instructed the intellects and gripped the hearts of his hearers. He has always held large space in our affections, but now more so.

Rev. W. G. Clements preached at the 11 o'clock hour Sunday as substitute for Dr. Newman, who was sick. Bro. Clements preached of Christ as the giver of life and delighted his congregation.

Dr. and Mrs. P. H. Fleming, High Point, N. C., have this week visited their daughter, Miss Nellie, who has been slightly indisposed.

Prof. R. A. Campbell spent the weekend visiting friends in Mebane, N. C.

Mrs. Rose J. Machen, housekeeper of West Dormitory, is sick of pleurisy, but expects to be at her accustomed post shortly.

Rev. Rufus King, familiarly known as Uncle Rufus, visited the College and Orphanage Saturday.

Mr. H. A. Wilson, Mebane, N. C., and Mr. A. G. Anderson, Gibsonville, N. C., visited their children, who are members of the student body, Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. W. T. Herndon is convalescent from an attack of grip.

The Third Church of Norfolk has decided to publish a monthly bulletin of its deeds, plans, and aspirations. Its title is The Park Place Christian Herald. The first number makes interesting reading and presages success for the enterprise.

The Executive Board of Trustees of the College meets Tuesday evening at 7 P. M. in the President's Office.

Miss Essie Houchins, who has been stenographer in the President's Office becomes book-keeper and stenographer for the new Publishing House and is succeeded by Mr. Perley C. White, Marion, S. C., known to former Elonites as thoroughly imbued with the Elon spirit.

Great interest is centering in the series of revivalistic services to begin the fourth Sunday, with Rev. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, as preacher. Daily prayer meetings are being held this week preparatory to what is hoped will be the most helpful meeting ever held here.

Miss Cora Lawrence, Springfield, S. C., is visiting her cousin, Prof. W. P. Lawrence.

Capt. J. A. Turrentine, Burlington, N. C., visited the College Saturday. We are always glad to have him come.

Parcels Post.

The Government has again moved forward in the matter of benefitting the people directly. Parcels post lifts us out of the clutches of the express companies, and anything that does that is a blessing. Express companies are the corporations that grind to the limit, and the Government has dealt a solar plexus in this instance. Of course the express companies will now reduce their rates to meet the competition, and will still make millions.

Almost all articles may be sent in parcels post except intoxicating liquors, poisons, poisonous animals, insects and reptiles, explosives, disease germs, live or dead animals.

And the parcels will be handled with care and in haste. More and more the government becomes the beneficiary of the people.

AN ENCHANTING SCENE.

I hope not to forget the profound and lasting impression made upon my mind while standing beside a beautiful field of corn which had rustled in the summer breezes until it was loaded with fine ears of splendid grain. It was a calm, lovely morning in October last, and the air was crisp and breathed pure with morning nature, and thinking of the greatness and goodness of God, the attention was directed to the morning glories, pink, white and blue, blooming in rich profusion thickly set all over the field, seeming to decorate the ground with the departing glory and beauty of the Summer, and to welcome the falling yellow leaves of autumn. The sky with soft ethereal blue, and the bright sunlight gave a natural touch to the whole scene which no painter's brush could draw, nor the most gifted and brilliant pen could half describe. It was so incomparably beautiful and extremely lovely to look upon the flowers which were reflecting the smiles of God. For some time the mind was perfectly satisfied, and the soul intensely happy, looking after and searching for God through those beautiful flowers sprayed with morning dew. Then, too, to look at the leaves which had trembled in the gales and storms of summer, changing into every hue of the rainbow colors was a scene painted and suspended everywhere in the most inviting manner, and appeared to be blazing with the fire of the midday sun.

Such stupendous scenes and feelings will lift you nearer God and heaven until with a thrill of transport the imagination hears a convoy of angels, clothed in white robes with palms of victory, singing the new, everlasting song. Then a great multitude, which no one can number, of the heavenly harpers join in the happy refrain of this glad new song, until heaven seems to come down and fill the earth with glory and the world with praise.

This was an enchanting vision and a happy experience. To be able to write these thoughts and to feel this thrill of gladness is worth more than millions would be without the ability to do so.

Such elevating scenes and feelings ought to constitute the best part of our lives, and fill our hearts with inexpressible gladness. It is so delightfully pleasant to commune with God while passing through His wonderful works, observing the laws by which they are developed, governed, and perpetuated.

ELON COLLEGE LETTER.

The Summerbell Lectures for 1912-1913 delighted the College and this delight was not of the trivial sort, which results from being amused, but that deeper sort, which takes its origin from being instructed in intellectual matters. Dr. Martyn Summerbell compliments his audience by presuming that they are intellectually inclined and by dealing with them on that plane.

The audiences were six in number this year and the nature of the utterances was varied, but ever the speaker struck a note of high intellectual key and played consistently upon it, producing a rare harmony and melody that won.

His first audience heard a sermon from Romans 8:32, the theme of which was Confidence in God's Gift, and which produced a profound impression not only for its scholarship, but especially for its spirituality. He maintained that the gift of the Father in Christ should embolden us to expect great things of God and that the Church would come into its own only when it should have utmost confidence in the Father's willingness to give, as well as in his ability to do so.

The second audience listened to an address upon the theme of Religious Education, at request. Two years ago Dr. Summerbell during an informal Chapel Talk gave expression to two or three striking opinions upon this theme that had whetted our appetites for a complete unfolding of his position relative thereto. Nor were we disappointed. He assailed the foibles and mistaken notions and specious theories now so prevalently current in respect to education with a master's grasp. The College authorities thought they themselves were speaking their own sentiments as he unfolded the matter. It was the educational gospel. We refrain from further comment, since the Sun is to publish the address in full, which courtesy it fully deserves.

The real work of the course however, centered in four lectures, characterized by erudition and simplicity, treating of the Reformation in England. If these lectures, with those of the three previous years treating of the same general theme in other countries and of the next year which will treat of it in France, are not published in book form, the world will be much poorer by reason of their lack. We have never read history so entertaining as this gives to us in these marvelous deliverances of this scholarly Christian gentleman, who each year honors the college with a course of inspiring lectures in his role of non-resident professor of Church History and Biblical Literature.

WHY THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY SECRETARY SHOULD COME TO JAPAN.

The Foreign Mission Department of the Christian church in America and Canada has had its missionaries in Japan during the last twenty-five years, seeking to bring the Gospel light into our dark land. During this interval our country has fought with both China and Russia and by her victories she has become known throughout the world as a strong and powerful country, and many people think she is sufficiently civilized as to no longer need so many foreign missionaries; that the Japanese people ought to support and carry on its own work of Christian evangelization.

I also would like to be able to say that Japan is civilized and powerful, but I am ashamed to admit that it is not the case.

Our civilization is but a transplanted one, taken over from foreign countries, rather than developed from within; consequently great and rapid progress has been made in the development of our architecture, furniture, dress, and our military ornament. But all this touches only the external appearance of things; it is not deep and fundamental, transforming and purifying character. Such spiritual civilization can never be acquired during the brief period of twenty or thirty years. It needs rather the strenuous efforts of a century.

I am exceedingly anxious that the Foreign Mission Secretary should visit Japan in connection with our twenty-fifth year celebration for the following reasons:

First, that coming into touch with Japanese pastors and members he may know to what extent we are fitted for the work, and the manner in which we are trying to do it.

Second—that he may see to what extent the seed has been sown by the united efforts of the missionaries and Japanese workers and the fruit which has grown out of it.

Third—that he may, by visiting the different parts of Japan, see for himself how much we Japanese need your help yet for the future; that he may see how that, to a very large extent, the country villages scattered every where have never heard about Jesus.

Fourth—that he may bring to us a new courage, stirring both workers and lay members to renewed earnestness in the preaching of the Gospel, that the day may the more speedily come when Japan too may know the joys of the life that is in Jesus Christ.

Kitano Zakaya.

MARCH 9, 1913,

is the date fixed by the American Christian Convention for the Annual Foreign Mission Offering; and by authority of the Convention this call is laid before the whole brotherhood inviting and urging that every member of the brotherhood and every church and every organization within each church, prepare and bring before the Lord on the day mentioned, or the most convenient Sunday near thereto, a willing and liberal offering for the Foreign Missions being maintained by the brotherhood in foreign lands. It is hoped that abundant use will be made of the leaflets and collection devices furnished from the Mission Rooms in Dayton; that thousands of our people may be quickened by inspiration from the educational campaign growing out of the centenary observance of David Livingstone's birth, the Quarter-Century Celebration of our Mission and Conference in Japan, and the efforts inaugurated last summer and fall in most of the Conferences to greatly increase the total foreign offerings from the various churches throughout the denomination.

We invite pastors and Sunday school superintendents and all church workers to heartily co-operate and make the coming Foreign Mission Offering the most worthy effort of our denominational existence. Let our motto be, "Prompt, willing, liberal."

Yours for success,

M. T. Morrill,

Foreign Mission Sec.

THE MINISTER AND BUSINESS.

Should a minister have a business training was the question under consideration recently between this writer and some other ministerial students. We affirm and give our reason in brief as follows:

The minister is a leader, a man whom the people regard as a type. His duties are numerous. To preach is not all the minister is called upon to do, or has to do, to make a living. He is often (and too often) very poorly paid and he must plan other ways for a living although he should not. The ministry is one work of life that the world watches and criticises on every hand. Because a man is ignorant of some fundamental business law he is often taken as being ignorant of his work. Every letter the minister writes and every article he prepares for publication passes the eye of the most severe critic.

Not only are these things true, but the minister whose duty and lot it is to mix and mingle with all classes of people, and a man of some business qualifications can move about among the people better than the man who knows only one thing. We would not have you believe that a ministerial student should go to a business college, for too many of these are fakes and shams; but every man preparing for a leader of a common people should know well a few essential things of business life.

HOW TO INTRODUCE A MISSIONARY THOUGHT INTO A SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The first secret of introducing any thought into the Sunday school is "Everybody quiet and listening." Few people know how to obtain this, but it may be had in a very simple way. Let the superintendent rise and say, "I have a pin in my hand, (Holding it up) let everybody get still and keep still till they hear it drop." The school has something to do expect and invariably the pin can be heard drop almost in any auditorium. Then the superintendent may say, "Let us sing No.—but before we sing (Just an instance) I want to tell you about a man in Africa who heard in the jungles "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name." (He will then give the story of the conversion of a man hearing this song etc., a story which may be found in the little book called "Five Minutes Missionary talks." This book has hundreds of other similar stories to be used in the same way and may be had for 50cts. It is a treasure for any superintendent who will care to introduce missionary thought in the Sunday school. After the story is told the leader may then add, "Now we can sing this song better than we ever did before."

We want our Sunday school to feel that missions is a natural and normal thing to be planned for fifty two Sundays to the year. The superintendent must have it in his heart and then in his program. All the teachers must have it in their hearts and teach it in that interesting way which is possible to all who will take a little time to inform themselves. Some people think that missions is a bore. I know some people who will not go to the Sunday school or to the church if they understand that somebody is going to speak on missions. Such ideas are born in misconception. Missions if properly introduced is the liveliest and the most interesting subject ever considered by any body of people. I will turn to this later.

I think most of our schools are neglecting mission study because they don't know, and they don't know because they haven't been willing to put themselves to the trouble and the niggardly experience of finding out. There are others who do not believe in it because they do not know and fancy they do their duty toward the present generation in carrying their school through the regular International lessons and on mission Sunday take up a collection which probably will amount to two or three dollars. And yet are we to pass along with the responsibility of the salvation of the world upon our shoulders and never feel any responsibility or desire to study other people and listen to God's call to look to the other half of the world? Are we to carry the light of the Bible in our own hearts, serving in our own little school circle and never feel the command "Let your light shine,"? Never feel that God expects us to carry that light to those in darkness and distress? If God is dependent upon His followers to evangelize the world, (and that means that the next generation as well as the present, for we must soon pass off the stage ourselves), how is the present generation, whom we seek to instruct in the Bible, going to get the idea of missionary life and its needs? How are our boys and girls going to get the idea that missions is a part of the whole Christian life? It is possible only by the superintendent and the teaching force of the school to have something systematic to do with teaching missions.

STANDING COMMITTEES AGAIN.

Many young people are wondering what has been done by the various standing committees of the Young Peoples' Gen'l Convention in the one year and nine months that are now behind us; also, what is going to be done in the short time yet remaining before the next session.

For my part, I have never been approached in any way, shape or fashion by the chairman of the particular committee of which I am a member. And, strange to say, this seems to be about the way with all standing committees of whatever body. They simply stand year in and year out. That is all.

In addition to this experience with the Y. P. C., I speak also advisedly concerning a certain annual conference report the one to which my name has been attached for several years past. Each year, right in the thick of Conference business and Conference speeches, the report has been submitted to me by the chairman (suppose he wrote it after coming to Conference) with the hurried statement—"It will be called now in a few minutes. Read, and sign if you approve." I have always signed but never read. Hereafter, under like circumstances, I shall do neither. Would you?

NEWPORT NEWS LETTER.

As usual, many good "New Year" Resolutions have recently been made. And before these lines are read, doubtless, many of these will have been broken. "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." Some have become discouraged, it may be, because they have failed. But why should they thus be?

Some of the most useful, strongest and happy Christians have had their seasons of doubt and disappointment. But with the disposition and attitude of the apostle Paul they have arisen from this low plain" forgotten the things that are behind and pressing forward to the things before," and thus gaining the assurance of the prize and of God's ability to keep all that they have committed to Him against "that day." New Year resolutions have no doubt been helpful, because with these the Lord has been allowed to come into the life and to save from the evils of the world and the habits of sin.

But without Him our resolutions will sooner or later bring disappointment. In these first lines to the Sun, in the New Year, we want to wish for all success in the things pertaining to our highest good, and in the building up of the work entrusted to us as a people. Surely, in spite of all our mistakes and seeming failures, we have much to be thankful for, and to really encourage us.

We find it so in our work here at Newport News. Our pastorate here, of a little over a year, has been pleasant. The opening up of the four large Sunday school rooms, that we have built during the year, has lent encouragement to this department of the work. We had a helpful series of meetings the last of November. Rev. D. A. Keys, was with us and worked faithfully and preached some good, plain gospel sermons. Six members were received into the church on confession of faith, making seventeen members received since we took charge of the work. Our Ladies Home and Foreign Missionary Society, now numbering twenty-five, is not as enthusiastic as we would love to see, but a good beginning has been made and we are hoping for better things along this line. We have a teacher training class but we have not been "working at it" very hard lately. Our Christmas entertainment was given by the Sunday school, Monday night, December 23. The weather was un-

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Work on our much improved and remodeled church building, Raleigh, N. C., goes along well. The roof is now being put upon the Sunday school annex, and other work is progressing nicely. Our Raleigh brethren deserve great credit for the noble work they are doing, and the sacrifice they are making.

—Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, who is leading in the great work of building a handsome and commodious house of worship at the State University, was a welcome visitor here last Sunday. He reports the work at Chapel Hill in fine shape, the walls up and the slate roof being about completed.

—Our High Point Letter, which should have appeared last week but was crowded out, sounds like business and we congratulate Pastor Fleming on these signs of progress in the work there. We wish the newly organized church all the prosperity and development that its faithful membership deserve. High Point is a growing town and the new organization will likely possess the spirit of its surroundings.

—On Tuesday night, Jan. 14th, the Baraca Class of the First Christian Church, Greensboro, entertained the Philatheas socially. The male quartette of the church provided the music to the delight of all. Messrs. John R. Foster, the teacher of the Baracas, C. A. Hines, superintendent of the school, and D. Jennings Sipe were the speakers of the evening. Refreshments were served, about seventy-five persons being present and all enjoying highly the exercises.

—Dr. Staley in Suffolk Letter this week says more to the point on the "Missionary Situation," and covers more ground in one column than we have been able to say in a half dozen editorials of twice that length. But if we could always say in twelve columns what Dr. Staley says in one we would count ourselves happy indeed. And we are happy; for to be able to write in such wise as to provoke such comment from so powerful a pen as Dr. Staley's is worth while.

—A daughter of the late Robt. Ingersoll, Miss Maud Ingersoll, was married in New York recently to an Ohio man, using what they choose to call an "agnostic ceremony." A private citizen united the two according to the law, using the words, "I now pronounce two holy names as sacred and holy as can be spoken by lips of man. I pronounce you to be husband and wife." But if agnostic, how came sacred and holy? Nothing is sacred, or can be holy where God is ruled out and all recognition and worship of Him abolished.

—Just bear with us, beloved. We are yielding editorial space and condensing matter and manipulating the best we can to get in copy which has accumulated to an unusual extent since before Christmas. We had no issue Christmas week, and more copy has come in than usual. This explains why some of the matter the brethren are complaining about has not appeared and why editorials have been brief and not many of late. We will get back tonormal shortly, no doubt. We trust Bro. Kendall will pardon the continued delay of his Burlington Letter.

—We note from the Charlotte papers that Mr. De Roy Fonville, one of Elon's high honor graduates and now a successful practitioner, was the orator of Lee-Jackson Day at Charlotte Jan. 18th and delivered a magnificent, patriotic address which The News prints in full, and further comments on the same saying that Mr. Fonville's speech was a gem of oratory at once attractive and impressive: that his thoughts were clothed in words well chosen and his address was a splendid expression of the spirit of the exercises. Mr. Fonville is making for him a splendid reputation as attorney and orator, and will be heard from in the State's future.

—You have no idea, Dear Mary, how many ministers in writing to The Christian Sun use the vulgar word "crowd" when they should use the more elegant and refined word "audience" or "congregation." We have just read and approved an otherwise elegant manuscript, save that the writer, a pastor, says the "crowd" was so large last Sunday evening that we had to bring in chairs. Of course he meant "congregation," and should have said so, and should not have been so disrespectful of those who came to hear him as to think of them as a mere crowd. Our Savior always had compassion on the multitude and often spoke of them as sheep without a shepherd; never did he speak sneeringly or disrespectfully of them as being a "crowd."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The recent letters, editorials, explanations, comments, and conversations on the "Mission Situation" must have awakened new interest on the subject in some minds and increased interest in all minds. The "Budget" plan, which proposes a fixed sum for Conferences and Conventions to raise for the "Foreign" work, seems to be wise and to meet with favor. The sum apportioned to the "Southern Christian Convention" under this plan, is $2,500.00 per year; and it seems now that the full sum will be raised in 1913. The apportionment of the Southern Convention to the Conferences, for Foreign Missions, is $1,350.00; the sum which the Woman's Board has undertaken to raise is $1,000; the Memorial Christian Temple in Norfolk makes a specialty on Foreign Missions which has never run less than $500; and some other churches take special offerings for this cause. The Convention sent up $1,500.00 in 1911 and same amt. in 1912. From these estimates and facts it seems clear that the Southern Convention will send up to the Mission Board in 1913, from all sources, at least $2,500.00, the sum apportioned by the Budget plan.

If other Conventions and Conferences do as well, in proportion, the sum requested by the Board, through the Budget plan, ought to be forthcoming. Upon the assumption that this plan will succeed, the next important and essential step is wise administration of the Mission Board. It ought to be a very simple matter to keep the financial end of such administration in such a simple manner that no doubt or misunderstanding could arise in the mind of the people. This would inspire confidence in the Mission Board, the conduct of the mission work, the missionaries, and the cause itself. Anything that reduces public confidence lessens offerings, and embarrasses the situation.

There are two other points of paramount importance. The first is that no enthusiasm, no temporary provision, as the Troy offering, can relieve a permanent condition. Relief must come through systematic and continuous support. Agitation should result in a settled conviction on the part of the whole church to meet the issue and the obligation with yearly offerings of increasing liberality. The pressure of religious obligation upon the church to support missions must rest so heavily that nothing but discharge of duty can give relief to the members or the situation. "The alarming lethargy and indifference" of which Dr. Atkinson writes so pleadingly ought to arouse our Southern constituency and inspire the ministers to more faithful instruction of congregations. The other thing is a "plan" that will secure larger results in a systematic way. It is easier to find fault than to correct evil. What our church needs is some simple plan that will meet the approval of willing ones, that will secure more money, prayers, thought and interest in missions. The present apportionment plan has done more than any other yet tried to bring results, and these results have increased as the claims have been wisely pressed upon the churches. By all means let all the churches in all the Conferences bring up to the next annual Conference the full amount for missions.

W. W. Staley.

NORFOLK LETTER.

"Look 'a heah, chile," thundered an old negro "Mammy" to a playful little pick-aninny, who was wickedly trying to tip over the comfortable arm-chair in which she had been taking a nap, "Youse done got me so disawganized dat I hain't hawdly able to influence mahself."

This afternoon I feel very much like "Mammy." I am so "disawganized" by this sultry, spring-like weather in mid-winter that I can scarcely "influence" myself to do much. However, with coal going at $8.50 the ton, I have no complaint to make, for, without doubt many a poor family would suffer dreadfully should the thermometer fall suddenly to zero, or below.

At the Third church we have been regularly smashing all previous records for attendance for the past three or four weeks, each Sunday showing a substantial gain in attendance both at Sunday-school and in the congregation over the preceding Sabbath. Our new Sunday-school rooms are ready for occupancy and we hope to have these filled to their capacity before the summer is over.

By the removal of Miss Susie Turpin to the Pacific coast, where she goes to do rescue work in Sacramento, Cal., we lose one of our best and most faithful workers. However, our loss is another's gain, and we wish for her every success and blessing.

I hear from some of his people very encouraging reports of the work of Brother Roberts the newly-installed pastor of the First Christian Church in Berkeley. Owing to the illness of Brother Bryant, the former pastor, the pulpit had been vacant for some time before the coming of Brother Roberts, but the plucky congregation had held together nobly and are now starting off with renewed zeal. May all success be theirs in that important field.

Tomorrow evening, at the beautiful home of Brother Jas. A. Eley, of the Third Church, our Men's Bible Class gives its regular annual banquet. That we will have a splendid and profitable time goes without saying. Wish the editor could be with us and partake of the good cheer and fellowship which would greet him.

I note with much interest the encouraging outlook for the Publishing House. Than this enterprise there could be none scarcely more worthy of hearty support. It will be an immense factor in the development and growth of the Christian Church in the South.

HIGH POINT.

High Point, N. C. According to previous announcements a congregational meeting was held Jan. 5th, in the Industrial Club Room, Commerce St., for the purpose of organizing a Christian Church.

After preaching the meeting was called to order and the following motion was made and carried unanimously: "That we proceed to the organization of a Christian church in the city of High Point, North Carolina, the same to be known as the ————Christin church, High Point, N. C.; and that those who have given their names for membership be enrolled as charter members; and that a committee of three be appointed to see others who may desire to become charter members and secure their names for membership; and that the first Sunday in February be set for the completion of said organization."

The Church Covenant or Agreement was read and adopted, and thirty names were presented for membership. The following are appointed as membership committee: Mrs. J. M. Matthews, D. V. Cassady and A. V. Driver. The following officers were elected, W. J. Allen, Treas.; D. V. Cassady, collector; Miss Bertie Hall, organist; J. L. Powell and H. Jennings Fleming, Ushers; J. M. Matthews, sexton. The election of secretary and of deacons was post-poned till the first Sunday in Feb. A choir of twelve voices was organized with Miss Myrtle Hall as director.

The following were chosen as a committee on site for church location, the pastor being an ex-officio member, W. J. Allen, D. V. Cassady, J. M. Matthews, R. C. Boyd and J. L. Powell.

The pastor reported the result of some investigations that he had been making since about the middle of Nov. 1912 regarding, a Portable Steel Church Building. He read a letter from Dr. Lightbourne, one from the builders and exhibited blue prints of buildings.

On motion the church voted unanimously to ask the Home Mission Board of Conference to consider at once the advisability of purchasing such a structure for Conference Home Mission work and to request said Conference, if such purchase is made, for use of the building in the High Point church work. We want this church to be a Missionary church from the very beginning, for therein is life, power, service and blessings.

The service, the attendance and the work of the day was one of the best days that we have had with the High Point work.

To God belong and to Him we give all the honor and praise for whatever has been or may be accomplished in this work.

ADVERTISING GOD'S BUSINESS.

It is Sunday night, we are waiting for a train in the city of Greensboro. A matter of importance caused me to be here and to pass through the main business section of the city twice. Electric signs, as in other cities, are on the streets and sidewalks flashing in many colors to advertise business. Advertising business on the Sabbath day? Yes, on the day of God. Does it cost the business men money to do this? The question is too plain to answer.

But this is not what we want to discuss here, but to make plain the fact that almost everything is boosted and magnified except the business of the Master. If we should see a sign on the streets of some of our cities reminding men of the greatness and goodness of God, it would astonish us. Should we see a church directory on the streets in glowing display it would be unusual. The business man advertises all the time — day and night. The church is left to do the best it can in any way it can. I don't believe in church feasts and festivals to get people out to church; I believe in the love of God. But I do believe in letting men know as they pass by living in a hurry that there is a God. Shall we throw such an important thing out of the daily toils and tasks of life?

DIED.

Griffin.

On Dec. 27, 1912, at her home near Burdette, Va. Mrs. Hattie Beale Griffin died, being in her twenty-first year. She leaves, a husband, Mr. Livy Griffin, an infant, father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Beale, one sister and two brothers and an aged grandmother, Mrs. Isaac Jones.

We do not know why our friends and loved ones are taken when they are so much needed, but we shall know after awhile. Our Father knows what is best, and we can trust Him with our all.

The deceased was a member of Bethany church for six years, and died full in the faith. The funeral services were conducted at the home of the late Isaac Jones, South Quay, Va., and the interment was in the family burying-ground.

Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor.

This department under the direction of Young People's General Convention. Frequent news items from Sunday schools, organized classes, and C. E. societies are desired. If you are interested in either or about to organize, address the department's editor,

CHARLES A. HINES, Editor and Cor. Sec.,

Greensboro, N. C.

TO OFFICERS AND TEACHERS.

The editor of this department is a Sunday school superintendent. He is not satisfied with the work he is doing but he is constantly endeavoring to do better. The suggestions made here are intended especially for superintendents and teachers. Some of them may not be practical in every school but others are. In this department clippings and original articles are constantly offered with the hope that some of them will be put into practice.

I want every superintendent and teacher to resolve:

First. To constantly try to make the opening and closing exercises more attractive and the music better. To this end use suggestions contained here weekly. They come from the best Sunday school authorities.

Second. To attract more people. To this end welcome contests, innovations and plans that are not objectionable for some real reason. Don't expect to succeed without being criticised. The church has never got anything new that was worth while within the particular thing having to run the gauntlet of criticism that perennially flows from people who like "the old-time" ways.

Third. Magnify the school. Praise every effort that does good and every person that honestly tries to help. Talk the school; show folks that you believe in it and it will encourage their faith and efforts. Do not apologize for the school; if you apologize let the excuse be on account of the little you are doing.

TALK ABOUT THE MUSIC.

Music is certainly one of the chief essentials of the Sunday school program; yet many pupils do not realize this fact.

Every pupil who attends a day school regards music as a part of the school work. Should this not be true also of the Sunday school?

How much does the average boy or girl know about the hymn sung every Sunday? Can he or she tell when and by whom they were written? I think not. Can he or she tell anything about the music to which the hymns are set? I think not. Would they be interested in the stories of those hymns and that music? I am certain they would, because I know a teacher who interested a class of very rough boys in morning hymn singing by telling them something about the hymn she wished them to sing.

Make the hymn and songs of praise something vital to the child. Give a new interpretation to the term "sacred music." I believe the result will repay the effort "an hundred fold."

Recruiting Squads.

Recruiting squads may be appointed by the superintendent. By means of the duplicator, or "amateur printing press," invitations may be prepared which members of each squad may distribute to their friends. The "recruit" is to sign his name to each invitation before presenting it. Members of the squad should act as a reception committee, and note how many acceptances there may have been to the individual invitations. They should wear a special badge to distinguish them from others.

"CAIN AND ABEL."

Why Not Make the Sunday school lesson for Next Sunday More Attractive?

S. S. Topic Jan. 26 "Cain and Abel." Scripture. Genesis 4:1-15.

Time.—When the first crime was committed.

Place.—Outside of the Garden of Eden.

Persons.—God, Adam, Eve, Cain, Abel.

Golden Text.—Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer.—1 John 3:15.

Leading Thought.—Hatred is sin.

Introduction To The Lesson.

To-day we have a lesson regarding the first family.

Probably Cain was born soon after the expulsion from the Garden of Eden, and probably there were many years between the birth of Cain and Abel, during which time other children, of whom we have no record, were born. After Abel was born time enough elapsed before the event of our lesson, for him to become a man. A settlement of human beings was being developed.

Cain and Abel are the two of Adam and Eve's children here specially noted because they represented the types of moral character that are necessarily prominent in this history.

Joys there were, in those early years, and sorrows, great, sin-caused, and so unnecessary. In these respects the earliest and the latest years of human history are just alike.

Object Lessons.

A glass of clear water. Put a drop of ink into it and show how the whole glassful is spoiled by just one drop. So there is a certain sin which discolors all our thoughts and actions. It makes us unable to see clearly or act kindly. It is the sin of envy. It made Cain murder his own brother. It will cause all sorts of crimes. Never let it creep into your own life.

A match and a few papers. This match is a tiny object compared with the size of this church, yet with the match we can start a fire that will completely destroy the church. A feeling of anger and envy may seem a small thing, but it may grow into an act which may ruin your life. We can prevent fire by not lighting the match. We can prevent the sinful act by overcoming the hateful thoughts.—Hageman.

Question Review.

1. Who was the first of Adam's family to die?
2. How did he die?
3. Who was Cain?
4. Why was Cain envious of Abel?
5. How could Cain have had his gift accepted by God?
6. What did envy cause to grow in Cain's heart?
7. And to what did hate drive him?
8. When, then, does one begin to be a murderer? (G. T.)—Leonard.

Lesson Announcement.

Almost every person in this room has had, during childhood, a little wooden toy called Noah's Ark. For generations children have delighted in this toy. But it is more than a toy. It is a witness of the wonderful old story of God's love. It is a story, too, of choosing right in spite of bad surroundings. Be sure to come next Sunday to see what we can learn from this old story of Noah's Ark to help in our own everyday lives.—Hageman.

NOTES ON C. E. TOPIC JAN. 26.

Subject.—"Evangelism and Missions." Acts 13: 14-44.

To make this meeting more attractive, it is suggested: 1. Bring your Bibles. 2. Have the Juniors furnish special music. 3. Prepare by studying and prayer. 4. Keep to the theme. 5. Try to find something to say that nobody else will have and that will be new for the hearers. 6. Have some suggestion for definite missionary work by the society.

What is meant by Evangelism and what is the distinction between it and Missions? We are given too much to repeating the same thing at our missionary meetings. Can we not make this one difference.

Soul Winning Thoughts.

The greatest soul-winning power in the world today, aside from the Bible, is a beautiful, useful, consecrated, Christian life.

A prerequisite to our being soul-winners is that we ourselves live the saved life. How can we give peace when we have no peace? Or give life, when there is in us no life divine?

The Bible declares the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. Given the gospel preached and lived by the preacher in any community, and the garnering of souls for Christ there is as sure as the ripening of grain under summer suns.

Securing the attendance of our friends in the consecutive service of the Lord's house is a very successful method of soul-winning. And when the pilot hears the friend's voice at the confessional, in his heart is a joy as intense as that thrilling the preacher's.

The angels gaze silently while farmers bring corn, and sailors shells, and miners gems, and travelers curios, and poets songs, and painters pictures, and place them on God's altars; but every harp is struck and every voice is resonant with praise when one brings a soul saved from the world, and lays it trembling there.

When we directly win a leader of men to the Master, let us rejoice in the assurance that indirectly we have won a host. Andrew brought his masterly brother Simon to Jesus, and there was salvation in the look He gave him. And who ever's converts will not reflect a peculiar glory on Andrew's crown of rejoicing?

will say that the multitude of Simon Peter was favorable but we had a good crowd and the program was well rendered.

We begin the work of the New Year with our faces toward the future and our trust in Him, without whose help we shall fail.

I was about to forget to say, but did not mean to, that the Fergerson Music Company, of this city, made us a present of a nice organ for our new Sunday school department. This came as a pleasant surprise and added immensely to our already encouraged feeling because of having the new rooms for the use of the school.

Faithfully,

HOW WE CAN HELP THE MISSIONARY SITUATION.

While some of our leaders are becoming alarmed over the condition of our missionary interests why cannot we get busy, as women of our church, and try to relieve some of the pressure by organizing missionary societies in the many churches among us needing them?

We use the term "needing them," hence we fear that we need them worse than we realize. What is the object for which we organize Missionary Societies? We turn to our Constitution and read as follows: "The object shall be to study missionary needs, to gain information on missionary subjects, and raise money for prosecuting work." Was there ever a people that needed these three things, in a greater degree, than we? We think not.

We do not give of our money because we have not studied missionary needs and have not been informed concerning missionary subjects, and if there is any organization that has this as its object, it would be well for us all; more, women and children to be hurrying to get into it. The purpose is lofty enough to engage us all.

Then, too, other denominations, already much stronger in zeal and good works than we, are redoubling their efforts, and if we do not arouse ourselves, we will be pushed aside, and justly so, by others who will take the place in the ranks which might have been ours. For we read that the talent of the one who would not use it was given to another more worthy. Does such a fate await us as a denomination? If we do not hasten ourselves it will be but a just recompense.

The Christmas holidays are now over, we are settling down to our everyday tasks. Don't put off organizing that Missionary Society any longer in your church, my sister, and by so doing you may help to revive the languishing cause of missions among us.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-eight years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 100 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

Lindley Peach Trees

Insure Profitable Orchardng--- Hardy Growth, Long Life and Abundant Yields of Sound, Luscious Fruit

For three generations the Lindleys have studied how to increase the yield of fruit trees. We have chosen scions from the kinds that bear the biggest crops, and, through scientific propagation, have made them bear more. If you intend to go into the orchard business either on a larger commercial basis or on a small scale, you should plant Lindley trees. Good fruit always has a ready market and brings high prices. Even a few Lindley trees will net you a nice profit each year, or will keep your table well supplied with beautiful fresh fruit.

Pay a Trifle More—But Plant the Very Best

What difference does a few cents make in the price of trees when it means several dollars increase in production each year? Lindley trees cost just a little more than ordinary trees, but there is a vast difference in the quantity and quality of the yields. They are good trees and produce results. Poor trees cannot produce their equal.

Don't Fool With Wood Shingles

Buy STEEL Shingles

They Cost Less, Last Longer,
Are Easier to Put On and Are Fireproof

Too much bother to put on. Rot out in a few years. And they multiply by 10 the danger of fire. Thoughtful men are nailing STEEL Shingles right over their old wooden roofs. And those putting up new buildings are likewise careful to choose STEEL SHINGLES.

Edwards STEEL Shingles come in big sheets of 100 shingles or more. Don't have to put them on one at a time like wood shingles. Just nail the whole sheet right over old roof or on sheathing. No extras, no painting, no tools needed. And money can't buy a more handsome roof.

Absolutely Rust-Proof

Don't judge Edwards Steel Shingles by common galvanized iron roofing—the kind that rusts. We have invented a method that absolutely prevents rust from getting a foothold, as 100,000 delighted owners of Edwards Roofs have found. It's the famous Edwards Tightcote Process.

Protection From Fire

Don't take chances of fire from defective chimneys, flying sparks and lightning. Roof your buildings with these STEEL Shingles and make them safe. Remember, nine out of every ten fires start with the roof. We specifically guarantee every Edwards Steel Shingle Roof against lightning. This guaranty is by a $10,000 Cash Bond.

Write for Special Factory Prices—Freight Prepaid

We sell direct from factory to user, thus saving you 40%. And our business is so big that we cut our profit—no sale to about half the maker's usual profit. And we pay the freight. Amazing as it may seem, these STEEL Shingles actually cost LESS than wood shingles.

Send postal at once for our latest Roofing Book No. 1371 and Special Factory Prices. Give size of roof, if you can.

THE EDWARDS MANUFACTURING CO.

Henderson.

The Christmas holidays are over and the preacher, along with other men, finds himself again engaged in regular routine of duties. It is essential for all to take a rest at times and exceedingly helpful to combine pleasure with it, but after all, man is never so well contented as when endeavoring to discharge the duties upon him in connection with his regular vocation.

I am serving this year six churches. Four of these are in the Eastern, and two in the N. C. and Va. Conference. Pope's and Mt. Auburn in the Eastern N. C. Conference, I am serving for the first year. The others I have been pastor of from two to eight years.

UNION (Virgilina)—We held our quarterly meeting the 1st Saturday in January. The regular routine of business was taken up. Officers were elected for present year. The attendance was some better than usual. One brother came 35 miles to attend his church meeting. This was encouraging to the pastor and other members near by who did not attend. With me it is a problem to induce members to attend the regular business meeting. At one of my country churches I am experimenting this year by holding the business meeting at night, and if it proves successful I will let Sun readers know. Here at Virgilina I have given the largest service and I feel done my best work. A branch church has been organized out of the membership of this church that is doing almost as much as the old church and yet Union is stronger numerically and financially than before she gave some of her best members to establish the new church.

LIBERTY (Halifax Co., Va.) This church has forty-nine members, is two years old, has a splendid house of worship worth twelve hundred dollars. An active Sunday school, C. E. prayer-meeting, raises all finances with no very great effort and contributes to all the general enterprises of the church.

MT. AUBURN:—I have filled two appointments. Rev. James L. Foster, my predecessor served this church fifteen years. I have never been with a congregation that held their pastor in higher esteem than these people held Bro. Foster. The severing of relations as pastor and people was made necessary by Bro. Foster's removal to another state. He had to give up the people. They never would have given him up, but I am the fortunate successor of Bro. Foster. The members have received me kindly and already am I beginning to feel that I am among my own people. A new house of worship had been planned and funds largely provided for the same last year. The work of construction began this month and will be pushed forward. The building is 50 by 32, eighteen feet pitch with large tower on front and recess pulpit in rear. Material and workmanship to be first class. When completed it will be one of the best houses of worship in that section of the community and the Christian denomination.

LIBERTY (Vance):—Here is an evergreen S. S. and C. E. prayer-meeting. The ladies have a missionary society. The thanksgiving offering to the Orphanage was the best yet made by the church. The S. S. had a Christmas treat on Thursday of the holidays. The pastor was present and made a talk to the children and shared in the festivities of the occasion.

FULLERS.—This is my seventh year here. They are a good people and have been kind to me. The present house of worship is not sufficient for our present needs and we hope to have a new and larger house of worship that will in every point be more in keeping with the progressive spirit of the community. Bro. Fuller Coghill, so well known at the annual conference, largely built the church and has always been the leading worker and most liberal supporter. He has seen the church grow till it has a substantial membership able to assist him in building the second church.

Popes.—This is my first year here. I have filled two appointments and find the people loyal to their church and its enterprises. Rev. J. W. Patton was the former pastor and did a good work and had the confidence and high esteem of his people. I feel encouraged in a new pastorate to hear my predecessor well spoken of. The 4th Sunday in December a Ladies' Missionary society was started. I am looking forward to a pleasant and a profitable year at this church.

Myself and family have recently been remembered by friends at Liberty (Vance) in the gift of a box of substantial for the pantry and confectionery for the children.

One good sister over at Virgilina and two brethren together with their good wives at Mt. Auburn have sent sausage, potatoes and canned fruit. For all which we are grateful.

I began the new year with the resolution to make this the best year of my ministry. To do this I realize I must seek the guidance of my Heavenly Father and endeavor to discharge every duty.

C. E. Newman,

Defiance, Ohio.

Notwithstanding the chilling work and ice and snow, which makes me dream of the "Fair South," my stay in Ohio has been very pleasant. I do not believe I ever spent a more profitable or pleasant period of my life than the fall term here at the Christian Biblical Institute. The spirit of the school is fine. The professors are strong and experienced teachers, and especially is president McReynolds a great man for the young to be thrown in contact with. I feel that there ought to be more hearty co-operation on the part of our colleges in sending their graduates here for this seminary course.

Besides my school work, I am preaching at West Manchester. We closed our special meetings there Sunday evening, Jan. 12th. There were nine accessions and some others that spoke too about uniting next Sunday, at our regular appointment. Bro. A. G. Ardiance was with us most of the time and did the preaching. He is a very enthusiastic young man, putting his whole soul into the work. Bro. H. J. Copp, a music instructor, directed the singing. The people manifested much interest. The attendance was good. The evening we closed congregation was so large we had to open the Sunday school department and seat with chairs in the aisles.

The work in general there is moving on well. We have a good Sunday school, C. E. and Junior Societies. We organized a young men's class Sunday morning, with eight members who had not been attending Sunday school.

I think we indeed have a splendid people. H. E. Truitt.

Burlington.

A happy and most prosperous New Year to you, Mr. Editor.

As I write these words the dying echoes of the Christmas bells are losing themselves as they mingle with the joyous melody of the approaching Happy New Year chimes.

Truly it has been a Merry Christmas for the writer and spite of the number of sick in the Burlington church and Sunday school a very joyous Christmas to them.

We closed our special meetings on the evening of the 11th. The Spirit of the Lord was with us during those two weeks and one-half. The church was much revived and eighteen were added to its fellowship on confession of faith. There are others will unite later. These meetings put our hearts in tune for Christmas and its joys. Believing that the true Spirit of Christmas is altruistic instead of egoistic and feeling that one of the great needs of the times is the development of this spirit, on Sunday evening of the 22nd we had a "Giving Christmas" when each class from the primary up to the oldest Bible class in the Sunday school contributed its part in the program and made its gifts to our Orphanage.

I will not take the space to give the program nor to describe it for I feel that I could not do justice to it.

The list of gifts will, I presume, appear in the Orphanage list so I will not duplicate them here. Everyone coming to the entertainment was charged for admission an apple, an orange or potato. Quite a nice little offering was received in this way. Over thirty-three dollars in cash was contributed for the Orphanage mostly by the Ladies Philathea Class and ten dollars and seventy-six cents was contributed for local charity.

Several of the old members of the church remarked, "This is the finest thing ever held in the church." The officers of the Sunday school have voted to make it a permanent annual affair.

On Thursday evening we opened our "Country Store" for our Christmas treat to the Sunday school. It did a rushing business.

The church has been very kind to the pastor and his wife during this Christmas season, giving them a very much appreciated gift of fifty dollars in cash, besides many smaller gifts, and dining them until they have been filled not only with prime roast turkey and delicious Southern ham and all the other good things Southern housewives know so well how to prepare but also with wonder and amazement at the power of the human system to take care of all of this and still keep well and strong.

Come to think about it I do not think that mention was ever made through the columns of this paper about the parsonage at Burlington being broken into while the pastor and his good wife were at Conference, but such was the case.

When we returned to our quiet home, we were amazed to find its sacred precincts had been invaded.

Circumstantial evidence pointed so strongly to the invaders that there was no difficulty whatever in convicting them.

There was no possibility of questioning the circumstance and we possessed the evidence in the marks of a very severe pounding.

But we have caught the invaders and locked them all in the deepest recesses of our hearts and we intend to keep them there forever and a day.

We have re-organized our Christian Endeavor society and now have three good working societies.

The Senior society has a membership of thirty-six and the pastor is temporary president until the society is fully organized.

An Intermediate society with a membership of twenty-two and Miss Bessie I. Holt as Superintendent.

A Junior Society having a membership of twenty-nine with Mrs. W. H. Carroll Superintendent.

Pastor and people in the Burlington Christian church are looking eagerly to the New Year determined by God's help to make it the best year in its history.

We have set as part of our objective an attendance of seventy-five at the weekly prayer-meeting and one hundred added to the church roll during the Conference year.

A. B. Kendall.

Wakefield.

Christmas has past and we are hard at work with the duties of the new year. We were kindly remembered by many of our good people before and during Christmas. Yes, Brother and Sister W. L. Anderson, gave us a nice fat turkey, two lbs. of butter and a large fruit cake. Brother and Sister H. H. Bell, gave us a fine turkey, Brother L. B. Faison, an old ham, and Brother J. S. Drewery, a quantity of fresh meat, Mrs. Tine Wagner a nice tie and gloves and Prof. J. J. Lincoln, one-half gallon of the finest oysters we have seen in a long time. We wish to thank all these good people for the many nice things we have enjoyed this Winter. Burton's Grove Church, Union, and New Lebanon, had Christmas trees and exercises for the children and all the entertainments were very good and every thing passed off fine. Wakefield Church had a Christmas tree, music and a most excellent address concerning Porto Rican work, by Rev. J. W. Harrell, of Portsmouth, Va. A collection was taken after the address and the proceeds went to the Porto Rico work. The writer and his family spent fifth Sunday and the following week at Holland, Va., with his parents. Father and mother are getting old and need our love and care. The week passed very much too fast, but such is life. The older a man gets the faster the time seems to pass. Realizing this it seems that every man and woman should strive to make this the 1913 year the best of all their years. May the Sun readers stop, think and pray that as the days pass by they will do something for the Master and speak a kind word to some brother that he feel the power of Christ's love.

C. C. Jones.

Greensboro.

Last Sunday, Rev. Faddoul Moghabghab (Mohabgad), of Lebanon Palestine, was with me and preached his famous sermon on the 23rd Psalm. It was the greatest sermon I have ever listened to and my people think about the same of it. I had read expositions on the Psalm, have heard sermons on it or a part of it have tried myself to preach its teachings, but must say that I have never understood it in such light before. It has more meaning to me now, and I can tell the truth myself with more meaning to those to whom I may happen to speak than hitherto.

Bro. Moghabghab is a native Syrian and shepherd himself understanding thoroughly oriental ways both in custom and language, being enabled thereby to put himself in the place of the shepherd boy and apply the Psalm as the psalmist intended it should be. Our "Syrian Guest" is a Christian, the son of a Roman Catholic priest (Such a thing being possible by special dispensation in the holy land) and filled with the Holy Ghost. He was dressed in Oriental shepherd's costume and illustrated the Psalm by the use of the rod, staff, flute, sling, songs, calls, lamp, horn, and other things, all of which are the original. It was beautiful.

I also heard this distinguished and eloquent speaker at the Y. M. C. A. in the afternoon on "The Ten Virgins." Here he was dressed in an Oriental Bridegroom and his discourse had its setting in the Mohammedan Marriage Feast customs, describing these in detail as they are followed from early betrothal till the marriage feast comes off when the bride has made herself ready and the groom has assayed to claim his own. Last Sunday, to me, was the richest in biblical instruction I have ever had and it was that instruction which at the same time made adoration and communion sweet.

MARRIED.

BRANCH-FREEMAN. BRITTLE-FREEMAN.

Dec. 26, 1912. At the home of Mrs. Rosa Freeman, of near Wakefield, Va., Miss Lizzie D. Freeman, and Mr. F. E. Branch, Miss Minnie B. Freeman, and Mr. C. E. Brittle, were united in marriage in one ceremony, in the presence of a large company of friends. These young couples are popular and the young men are successful farmers near Wakefield. We wish for them a prosperous and happy life.

RALEIGH LETTER.

Dear Friends:

We are delighted with the progress on our building. The winter so far has been very mild in the South. Our workmen have lost practically no time at all. It is very hard for us to keep the money matters up with the work, but we have managed to do so up to date, and it is our purpose to continue in this way until the work shall have been completed. Please send all your contributions and thus enable us to pay as we go.

Antioch.

On December 25, 1912, at 12 o'clock our Christmas exercises began at Antioch. After several Christmas songs an address was delivered by the pastor on the subject, "Why we Celebrate Christmas." Near the close of the address Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus and their little daughter came to visit the Sunday school. The Christmas tree was a beautiful one and contained a vast number of presents.

Poplar Branch.

At 7:30 P. M. the program for the Christmas tree began at Poplar Branch. This program consisted of recitations, drills, dialogues, a solo, duet, quartette, and other Christmas songs. Uncle Santa Claus visited the Sunday school, and the children all appreciated his visit. The Christmas tree here was very beautiful and contained many pretty presents.

Nansemond Notes.

Among the resolutions for the New Year I put down this to my credit: "To write more for the Sun." If I can carry out this purpose, I hope it may be for the pleasure and profit of Sun readers. The past year brought many hours of anxiety to me. The hand of affliction was heavily laid upon my wife, and for many months her life seemed to hang by a slender thread. But I thank Our Father for His answer to prayer and for the improved condition of my wife. During this affliction my churches were patient, forbearing, kind and considerate. I was forced to neglect much of my pastoral work but the churches maintained their usual efficiency, and made progress in the work of the Master. I shall never be able to give full expression to my feelings of gratitude for all the kindness shown to me during the past year. Irejoice to be at home again, and I am looking forward to the present year with increased faith and larger hope.

The Christmas season brought to us many tokens of kind hearted friends. We are grateful to Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Rawls, Mr. and Mrs. R. Emmett Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Peel, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Fulgham, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bryant, Mr. C. E. Byrd, Mr. G. B. Robertson, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Harrell, Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Griffin, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Harrell, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Norfleet, Mrs. T. R. Gaskins, Ladies Aid Society of Berea, Nansemond, Hobson Sunday School, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Copeland, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parker, Mr. and Mrs. Joel T. Pierce and Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Truitt for special favors during the past few weeks. We wish to thank all these friends for their kindness.

Berea, Nansemond, church building was much improved during the past year. All the interior woodwork was repainted, a new carpet put down, chair platform installed, handsome new pulpit furniture purchased and several other improvements made. The greater part of this work was done through the Ladies Aid Society. These additions add to the beauty of the building and are much appreciated by pastor and people. The people are always ready to respond to any appeal for better things. They are really progresive. It is a pleasure to see the work go forward.

Liberty Spring church has an interesting young men's prayer meeting. This meeting is for men only. It is conducted for the most part by young men who have not been accustomed to take public part in devotional meetings. It is helping the young men to cultivate the devotional spirit. I am praying that we may discover another young man who will go forth to preach the Word. This church is the mother of four living preachers. Let us pray that the Father may send forth other laborers into the harvest.

Some of the Important Events of both Home Missions and Foreign Missions are also included, together with Suggestions For Junior Leaders.

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

THE WAGES OF SIN.

The wages of sin is death; but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord. Romans 6:23. Golden Text for Sunday, February 2.

Because sin is so tempting, so deceitful, so alluring, and so inviting men and women will not believe that for them its wages is death. It is death; they read in the Bible it is death; they hear others say it is death; and they say themselves it is death; but they will not believe that for themselves it is death. We believe a great many rules and theories and things in a general way which we will not apply to our own case. But God applies them whether we will or not.

The Los Angeles (Cal.) Times relates that in many chemical works men are strictly forbidden to enter the cyanide room alone. The white beautiful crystals of cyanide exercise a strange fascination, and though every one who enters knows that the stuff is deadly, yet a horrible longing to put some of it into the mouth seizes one. Many, many cases are known of men who were unable to resist this awful longing, happy, prosperous young men, found dead in the laboratory beside a glittering white heap of cyanide crystals. The temptation was too strong and the men dallied with the instrument of death—and the penalty was sure. Some unexpected day final doom comes to every man who dallies with sin. Their payment may be postponed, but nevertheless, "the wages of sin is death."

The golden text has a most marked and potent example in the lesson of the day. Men sinned and sinned and sinned, until their foul deeds smelled to high heaven. God's sense of decency and order and purity was offended. In their revelry and lust and bebauchery men forgot God or insulted and dishonored Him. Wickedness ran rampant every where. The earth itself became a pest house of passion and a place of unbridled lust. Men because of so much sin were unfit to live and God saw it was best to destroy them and create a new race. In the flood sin reaped a universal harvest and wickedness was washed from the face of the earth by the out pouring of heaven's abundant waters. And this is typical of God's dealing with sin. He has provided a way of abundant escape. His free gift is full, free and abundant. There is a way of escape from the curse of sin. That is the way of the Cross. In God's infinite love and through free grace in Jesus Christ heaven's windows are opened, and the cleansing flood pours forth to wash away the sin of those who accept Him, and yield their hearts to Him to obey and serve Him. Even back yonder in the time of the flood God's love appeared and for the first time in the Bible appears the word "grace." "But Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord." That sentence takes away the overwhelming power of cruelty and judgment connected with the flood and paints a streak of glorious day-dawn across the dark waters. "Grace," signifies that heaven's windows are open and God's love is sufficient.

THE KING'S BUSINESS.

Mark the fact, in passing, beloved, that the constituency which The Sun represents is engaged these days most actively in the King's business.

Rev. W. T. Walters, the young, able and consecrated pastor at Winchester, Va., is heels over head in infinite labors and undertakings for the costly and superb church edifice he and his loyal band of faithfuls have already erected and are paying for.

Rev. J. W. Harrell of Portsmouth occupies a magnificent building on Sundays, a sanctuary that would do credit to a congregation worth millions, which devotion to duty and pride in the Lord's work have made possible. Bro. Harrell preaches much, prays more, plans all the time and works forever. He and his congregation, by their Christian zeal and persistent labors under God's good guidance, will get that great building paid for in due season.

Mt. Auburn church, in Warren Co., N. C., one of our oldest and most active congregations, Rev. C. E. Newman pastor, is tearing down the old house, whose size and usefulness have been out grown, and building a larger and better. In this congregation are some of the best people and most loyal souls that live on this earth.

Rev. L. F. Johnson, D. D., and our Raleigh brethren have grown restless and impatient of their cramped and meager quarters, and are tearing away and building a bigger and better house—one modern in equipment, beautiful in appearance and ample in proportions.

At the University of this State, in Chapel Hill, a handsome Christian church grows rapidly into material proportions, and our brother, Rev. W. G. Clements, his conference agent and appointed pastor, who leads the work rejoices in the near-vision of a complete house of worship for our Christian numbers there. Our Chapel Hill brethren are building wisely and well and their efforts are to prove an honor to the cause which they have at heart.

Rev. H. W. Elder's letter this week tells of the things going on in our Christian ranks and activities in the far South.

At Elon College a beautiful two-story gray pressed brick front building, the Southern Christian Publishing Company's plant, stands even now a monument to the concerted action, the Christian loyalty, activity and faith of those amongst us who know and realize that a larger day looms up ahead and a better future invites us onward and upward. The brethren and friends have put, and are putting, their money into this great enterprise because they know it is needed, realize that it will be useful and understand well enough that it will pay.

On the College campus at Elon a fifth brick building, large, spacious, ample and costly looms up and the work shows it will soon be ready to meet the growing demands of a rapidly increasing student body at the college. Why, it is even noised around that President Harper is getting to be a busy man, and writes an occasional letter and does a little work at odd times and off intervals to increase the efficiency and the patronage of Elon.

Yes, beloved, there is activity amongst us and a regular bee-hive swarms with daily energy to carry forward the King's business entrusted to our Christian name and keep.

THE MISSIONARY PUZZLE.

The missionary situation, about which all of us are concerned, and in whose betterment all of us are interested, seems more of a puzzle now than ever. According to the article of Secretary Powers appearing in The Sun two weeks ago there seems to be growth, development, and progress. Evidently our mission Secretaries think and believe there is all this; and that we as a people should be satisfied with this, save that we ought to do more and give more for missions. If we are not doing well, and making progress, and developing along right lines, then our Mission Secretaries have not discovered it. And as said before we do not question their absolute sincerity, their thorough honesty, and their whole-hearted integrity. We have never believed, never had occasion to suspect even, that one penny of the mission funds has been spent covertly or without being fully accounted for.

But now comes the illuminating article from good Dr. Barrett's pen in The Herald of Gospel Liberty, January 16 saying that "after paying the debt in full and the annual deficit of $2,000, we have $861.54 of the special fund for 1910-11 left, and yet on December 31, 1911, the debt was still $7,233.60, and now, one year later, the debt is $10,937.37."

So there you are. The debt grows, missionaries on the field decrease in numbers, some remain home on furlough a long time, and no new missionaries are sent out for five years or more.

And yet our good brethren in charge of the mission funds believe with all their mind and heart that we are making progress. And we hope with all our heart and soul we are, for a people who go backwards in the matter of missions ultimately go backward in all things else. God cannot prosper a non-missionary people and keep his word.

We are grateful to Editor Barrett for his answer to our questions, and presume that his reply is sufficient. We wish we knew how to unravel the mystery and solve the puzzle of it all, but we are not. This we know: Dr. Barrett is interested in missions and Dr. Morrill is interested in missions and the Editor of The Sun is trying to learn something about missions so he can be interested, neither one of us would utter the first word, if we know it, to hurt a great and good cause that all want to see prosper and develop.

PASSED BEYOND.

So our great and good brother, Rev. Thomas Holmes, D. D., L. L. D., tired of earth and worn with much care went up higher, Sunday, January 19th, at 3 P. M. of the clock, at the Aged Christian Ministers' Home, Lakemont, New York. This wonderful man wrought with a master's hand for 95 years, one month and twenty-five days, and because all things above were ready, and the mansion which he was to inhabit had been fully prepared his Father called him home.

Elsewhere we present the salient features of this life written by himself and mailed to us on December 30, 1912. His was indeed a remarkable and inspiring life. We hope every young man into whose hands this week's Sun falls will read the sketch of Dr. Holmes. We have on our table now awaiting review a volume on Theology recently issued by Dr. Holmes, the man who was born in a cabin, cradled in a trough, reared between the plow handles, inspired by the first train he ever saw to seek an education, and came to be one of the ripest scholars and deepest thinker of his time.

In a personal letter from Dr. Holmes written not thirty days since are these sunny and cheerful words "I want to put something useful into every letter I write, so I have delayed writing you. On August 28th I was smitten down by a stroke of paralysis. I am now lifted from my bed into a chair in the morning; spend the day at my desk, writing with one hand, reading the daily papers, and meditating on the goodness of God and the kindness of my friends of whom God has given me so many, and singing silently in my soul, 'Content whatever lot I see, Since 'tis God's hand that leadeth me.'" This good man ran with patience and great fortitude the race set before him and in a ripe age has been gathered to his fathers. God rest his noble soul.

FOR WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

The highest tribute ever paid the Sunday school is that by those who excuse themselves from attending by saying, "The Sunday school is for women and children." If there ever was a good reason why men and boys should seek to attend Sunday school, there it is; "it is a place fit for women and children." A woman was the mother of Jesus, and a child was declared by Him to be the very type of those who inhabit the Kingdom. If the Sunday school is a fit place for the best of earth to go to, then heaven knows the rest of us need to go to it constantly and faithfully.

That which was said to discredit the school is certainly its highest praise and commendation. If it is fit for women and children it is without question fit for men and boys. And the men and boys who do not attend it stay out of the best and most wholesome company ever to be found on this earth.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Several of the young men of the College and four members of the Faculty attended the Convention of the Y. M. C. A. for the Carolinas in Greensboro from Friday to Sunday. Governor Mann of Virginia was guest of honor and made the principal address at the banquet on Friday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Kernodle, Durham, N. C. were agreeable and happy visitors to the College Monday. Mr. Kernodle is an undertaker and deserves that the Lord should prosper his business.

Word has reached the College of the critical illness of Mrs. Sallie Mc Cauley Cole, of Chapel Hill, N. C. Her many friends will pray for her recovery.

Mrs. Hugh McAllister, Lumberton, N. C. but "Miss Ramsey" at Elon now and always, has been a pleasant visitor this week.

Mr. Jas. N. Benton, Rock Hill, S. C. one of Elon's best friends, has been elected Secretary of the Board of Trade of that city. He is also on the editorial staff of the largest newspapers of his home town.

The good word has gone the rounds that the Christian Publishing House here will be ready to begin by Feb. 10. So mote it be. Amen.

The Executive Board of Trustees of the College voted to fit up one-half the first or basement floor of the new building as a Chemical and Physical Laboratory, and to equip it after the most approved modern standards for such purposes. This decision will meet a long-felt need. Unless a modern College has ample laboratory facilities, it will lose the rank as an educational force.

Sunday afternoon the ladies of the community and local Church organized a Missionary Society with seventeen charter members. The following are the officers: President, Mrs. J. W. Patton; Vice president, Mrs. J. H. Farmer; Secretary, Mrs. W. A. Harper; Treasurer, Mrs. W. P. Lawrence. The Society will hold monthly meetings and gives evidence of large usefulness. The meeting was very enthusiastic.

Mr. J. A. Dickey, Jr., Class of 1912, of Alamance County, was a welcome caller Sunday. Mr. Dickey is busily engaged in lumbering and grist-milling at this time.

The enrollment to date for all departments is as follows: graduate students 33; normal students, April and May 1912 Term, 17; Collegiate and Preparatory, 302; total, 352. We are very grateful to our friends and shall need their hearty assistance and cooperation to maintain this high-water mark. There be those who predict a still higher rising of the waters, and such a thing is entirely reasonable and natural, but the friends themselves will make it so, not we at Elon. No College has so many great, good friends as our own Elon.

On January 6th $5,000 was sent to the Farmers' Bank of Nausemond to be applied to the principal of the indebtedness for which the special Fund of $50,000 was raised—the largest single draft ever drawn by the President of the College and the happiest. That means that one-half the $10,000 for 1912-1913 has been paid in by our sacrificing friends on their subscriptions, and every day others are sending in other remittances. As we agreed with the subscribers to the special fund every dollar paid in goes to pay the principal the College itself paying the interest. We believe every one who subscribed to the fund did it as a religious duty and high privilege of serving the Kingdom and we also believe that every one will pay his subscription to the full. Elon will try to show its appreciation by serving the Church faithfully.

Dr. Atkinson on Sunday morning preached a powerful sermon on "Life but a Beginning," which will serve as a fitting introductory discourse to the revivalistic series which began Monday evening with Rev. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va. as preacher in charge. Brother Rowland is a general favorite with

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

In this day of experimentation and unrest in every line of living, there are divergent, conflicting notions of the manner, method, content, end, and aim of education. Some for example imagine that in order to secure an education one has merely to spend so many years in school, college and university, and that when the student has been drinking for all this time at the Pierian fount, and emerges at last the happy possessor of a sheepskin and some sort of an honorable degree, that of course he is educated. In such case it is granted that he may carry some of the earmarks of an education, and yet it is not always that such are educated. For with some there is fundamental and self-evident lack. Some in spite of a college degree are inefficient, unsuccessful and incompetent. I have known men whose names are on the alumni lists of some of our great universities, who have found their vocation in driving a trolley car, and you may have know instances to match. Now, of what use were all those years spent at the university? Nothing is to be said against the business of driving a trolley car, but there are trolley car drivers in plenty who are experts at their job, who never saw inside of a university. Say of a man like that not that he is educated, but but that he had a good chance for an education and missed his chance.

Again it is sometimes supposed that a man who has been at a college or a university is educated, if he has a fair command of certain subjects that the universities teach;—if he has some critical knowledge of one or more languages; if he be a mine of information on the Greek digamma, or the prehistoric voyages of the Norsemen to America, or the relics of the moundbuilders of Ohio. But again I submit that a man might possess a fund of information on such topics and yet be far from having a real education. He might recite you off-hand the list of English sovereigns from William the Conqueror to George V. without an error and name the years of their accession and decease; he might recite you the speeches of Demosthenes, or tell you of the debate between Cicero and Caesar over the prospective fate of Cataline, and yet for all that, when he comes to practical affairs be erratic, vain and full of ineptitude and helplessness. No! getting an education is something more than hearing college lectures, or than loading the mind with an undigested mass of facts, theories and opinions, no matter how well grounded these particular facts, theories and opinions may be in

What then, I am asked, is it, this education, which so many are in pursuit of; which so many conspicuously fail to acquire, and which some are fortunate enough to actually obtain?

To this it may be answered that one mark of the really educated man is a general knowledge of the topics which are discussed by intelligent people; topics historical, scientific, literary or political, and which renders him an associate on equal terms with people of culture and refinement. Be the place what it may, the commercial office, the parlor or the men's room in a Pullman car, whatever the subject of discussion the educated man is able to bear his part, modestly and yet fearlessly, because he has thought for himself on all these matters, and has something to say that will add to the general fund of interest. It is at such a time that ignorance has hung its head in humiliation and silence, because it recognizes its own incompetence in a difficult situation. Education at such a moment enjoys its share of fellowship and feels the uplift of courage and conscious power.

Another benefit of a real education is the general training of the mental faculties so that they work together easily and without strain, whenever required, and produce prompt and correct judgment of men and measures. This coordination of all mental forces and powers comes only through years of culture and practice. It produces ability to concentrate attention even under the most adverse circumstances. The really educated man is master of his moods, and when difficulty confronts him, the more troublesome they are the more he pulls himself together to overcome them. He can think by himself in the solitude of his library and under the inspiration of the great men, whose books line his shelves; or like Lincoln he can write a classic that is to endure through the generations on scraps of paper in all the rush and bustle of an express train. Control like this of one's mental, material and spiritual possessions, so that whatever the occasion, the man is sure of himself, and that he can meet the demand of the hour, is one of the ends for which boys are put to school, and which when it is obtained is well worth all the years of struggle and preparation. If such control of his own thought powers is achieved, it matters little to a man whether he has so far neglected some field in the broad domain of knowledge, for he can traverse it whenever necessary and win all its treasures for his own use. Whatever his need he can summon all his active, and all his potential energies to the affair in hand and so can look forward confidently to a measurable success.

Taking this view of a real education, the making of a man the peer of his associates who possess culture and refinement, and the giving him a control and concentration of all his mental powers, we may perceive something of the value to a community like this of a college which purposes to give its young people training of precisely this kind.

There is commercial value in it at the start. Other things being equal, the trained mind has the advantage over the untrained mind in any purpose or occupation in which they happen to compete. The trained man has the prompt initiative; he decides while the other is debating. He has the better method, for he puts his wits to achieve his result in the simplest way, while the other sticks to the rut which his father traveled before him. And he applies to his task any helpful principle that his reading supplies, while the other follows the rule of thumb, often to his serious detriment.

Or, put this point in another way. We frequently meet with men of little or no culture who have attained great success. They have enjoyed few advantages, but with persistence and energy they have made the best of their resources, and won out, while others with better opportunities apparently have accomplished little or nothing. Such men deserve great credit for their valiant struggle against an unfavorable handicap; and yet how much more the same men might have achieved had they enjoyed proper training. How many mistakes they might have been saved! How many misjudgments they might have turned to benefits! How many ventures that brought losses might have been avoided! The whole question resolves into the relative value of a tool that is fit, and the other that is almost fit. Imagine a man chopping at a tree with an axe that is right in all respects but the one of having a dull edge. No doubt, if you will give him time he will get the tree down. If you are his friend you will go to him and tell him that he will save time, if he will but stop twenty minutes and grind his axe. There is the difference in a nutshell. The untrained mind is the dull axe. Of course, one can work with it, but the task is slow and painful. The trained mind is possibly the same axe, but with a keen cutting edge and the way it makes the chips fly is a delight.

If such is the difference between individuals in the matter of training, the principle is the same when you compare one community with another. The community which trains its children wisely soon takes the lead of the other that neglects education, or that gives education of the wrong sort. The citizens of the former surpass those of the latter in initiative, in enterprise, in progress and in wealth. Every schoolboy knows that Athens outranked every city of the ancient world in all that counts for excellent greatness, but can he tell why that town of but moderate population, and with outlying territory of less acreage than some of our western counties, still holds that pre-eminence in the eyes of the nations? The answer is simple enough. Athens led the world because she had more men of cultivation to the square rod than any city of her own age, or of any subsequent age in the world's history. The education of her citizens gave Athens power, wealth, ascendancy.

How shall we account for the influence of New England in the development of our own nationality? New York State, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, California, Alabama, all have cities and towns which trace much of their prosperity to the thrift and enterprises of colonists who came from New England and brought with them the training for which New England has been famous from the day of the Pilgrim Fathers. The idea in New England was to educate the children, all the children, and the result of that idea blossomed out in progress in New England herself and in every community to which she has given her sons and daughters.

But so far we have been noting the effect of education on a community in its commercial and social applications. One of the latter, one of the social applications, is deserving more attention in detail.

One purpose of education is to constitute leaders for the people, leaders who are capable of inspiring confidence, and whose calmness and accuracy of judgment will render them trustworthy when they are given positions of responsibility.

In a social democracy like ours it makes vast difference to the public weal who hold the reins of influence and power. We have the right to demand the faithfullest and the best; but if trained men are wanting, then the others, less able and often less worthy, will certainly forge to the front. In case any community fails to exercise its privilege of training its young people, of necessity it will fall behind the other community which educates and keeps on educating.

But it is understood that this real training of the faculties of the man, this real education, includes of necessity the training of the religious faculties. Religion is the true philosophy of life,—the basis of all correct conduct,—the norm from which all moral and social obligation is to be measured. Ethical systems have been invented, which seek to establish moral right upon the pleasure which it confers upon the individual, or upon the advantage to society in the mass to be derived when its terms are generally accepted. But all such systems break down in the serious struggle and temptations which men must face. They lack a cogent imperative, that imperative which is experienced only in God. Ethics without religion is a crutch of straw which collapses instantly when subjected to severe moral strain. If today any of you are questioning why there are so many public men who have bartered their soul's honor for a mess of political potage;—why so many homes are destroyed by forgetfulness of the marriage vow;—why so many custodians of trust funds have betrayed their trust to the impoverishment of the widow and the orphan;—why so many men and women, old and young, rich and poor end their lives with the poison or pistol of suicide, find the answer in the fact that they have forgotten God, or that they know Him only as one might any by name. He has been no substantial factor in their scheme of being. They have gone their own gait, whether or pleasure, or excess or of open sin, precisely as if God had withdrawn Himself from the universe, or as if there were never anywhere any God at all. The remedy for all current looseness and extravagance of conduct is in realizing God; in comprehending something of His majesty and His intimate connection with all things that exist; in knowing that all our acts and even our most secret thoughts come under His scrutiny, and perceiving with all this that only as our thoughts and acts are shaped into conformity with His holy laws, can our individual peace, or the prosperity of the community be assured.

And so it may be regarded as established that an education which lacks training in religion is defective. In fact it is better for a community or a nation to have a weak religion, or one that has some elements of falsehood, than to have no religion at all. For, insomuch as the weak religion, or the religion that is partly false, can stimulate the religious sense, it will impel to some moral acts, and impose some moral restraints. But no-religion is all falsehood, and it imposes no moral restraint whatever. I would not willingly go to a nation that has discarded religion, for nothing in such a region could be safe for a moment; not houses, not persons, not property. Once we knew of a land that had cast away its religion;—it was the land of the daily proscription and the guillotine. Yes. Education to be sound must include training in religion, and this training must be carried on continuously for a long period of years, so that it becomes the man's second nature; so that it is as spontaneous in its response as any of his mental furnishings. Let us have our young people educated like that and we may trust them anywhere. They will meet their temptations and trample them under foot. And the future of society and the nation will be secure in their enlightened hands.

It is legitimate now to inquire how religious education of the better type, such as we have been discussing, can best be promoted. Right here it is that we strike one of the most serious problems of the time. For it is a conspicuous fact that by far the largest part of our American youth, both boys and girls; young men and young women, are given a purely secular education; and education in literature, in the arts and sciences, and the rest of it, but withal an education from which religion as such is absolutely eliminated. Under the general system of public schools, from the primary school up to the State College and University, the teacher must not teach religion. In some states of the union the teacher when he opens school must not read from the Bible, and must not recite the Lord's prayer.

But passing these extreme instances of misguided deference to subterranean poli-

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—One of our busiest of busy pastors is Rev. J. W. Patton who besides serving to good acceptance a circuit of churches acts also in capacity of State Lecturer in the Masonic Fraternity in which latter capacity also he is held in highest esteem and cultivates a wide acquaintance among the many good people of the State.

—We are glad to follow, with our visits every week through The Sun, Miss Losie Turpin to 1510 Third St., Sacramento, Cal., whither Miss Turpin has recently gone from Third Church, Norfolk, Va., to do Rescue Mission work. Miss Turpin is known as a fine and effectual and consecrated church worker and we have no doubt she will render great service in the Master's name in her newly chosen field.

—Just please, beloved, do you, every one of you, read Bro. H. W. Elder's Richland, Ga., letter this week, and take courage therefrom and press forward. Of all the men among us to bring things to pass commend us to Bro. Elder. His letter is optimistic, full of real church news, tell of cheerful sacrifices, and stirs the soul to read it. Read and see what one preacher with his soul aflame for the cause can do, and is doing.

—Rev. B. F. Vaughan, Centerville, Ohio, is making praiseworthy effort to place in many homes that splendid volume The Life and Writings of Rev. H. Y. Rush, D. D. It is a valuable and readable book and Bro. Vaughan should have much encouragement and many orders for the book from among Christian Sun readers. Dr. Rush was, almost to the time of his decease, a frequent and valuable contributor to the columns of The Sun and we are sure many Sun readers remember his delightful articles.

—It was not Superintendent Carter's fault that our Orphanage Department was left out last week. Neither was it the editor's. The Department matter was all in on good time, set up and read in the proofs. But when it came to print The Sun, of the vast multitude of matter in type that had to be left out this happened to be in the bunch. That was all. Since December we have had enough in type and in copy in the office to get out two papers, and so much has been left over from week to week. Don't grow impatient, beloved, we will catch up after awhile.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It seems that almost all questions, in these days, are considered in terms of money. When men talk of the change of administration from Republican to Democratic hands, they put a big question mark after business. How will the change affect the business of the country? Legislatures deal largely with questions of revenue, commerce, political supremacy. Even religious bodies concern themselves, in great measure, with raising money. One hears more about mission money than missionaries. How to raise more money, how to increase equipment, how to secure larger results, engage the most far-seeing minds, the soundest judgment, the wisest statesmen and churchmen.

You rarely hear one inquire what moral effect will be ushered in with the new national administration. What does this all mean? Does it not mean that the age is under the dominion of the spirit of material interests? Does it not enter into all men and all movements? Does not public sentiment regard with disfavor purely moral and benevolent advocates? Is not the "simple life" a book affair? How many are willing to exchange money for manhood? Do not investigations from public lands to postage stamps show that the financial barometer is disturbed from the Atlantic to Pacific? The atmosphere is metallic. The highest social asset seems to be coin. The religious life is a contribution. The inventory of character is financial ability. A faded dress is exclusive. Style admits one. Simplicity meets the question mark or the exclamation point. Society is punctuated as well as sentences. Now, no one must imagine that wealth is useless or that it is contrary to human interests. God packed the earth full of material riches and possibilities, and evidently intended that man should dress it and keep it; but from creation it appears that the crown of all was man. He was very good, and everything should be measured in terms of manhood and not in terms of money. The absence of possessions should not discount manhood and womanhood. Jesus "had not where to lay His head," yet "never man spake like this man"; and never man lived like this man. He presented a new type of man—a great poor man—a poor wise man—a benefactor without means—a Savior, Himself crucified.

My hope is that the new administration will introduce a new factor into our civilization, a new spirit into our times, a new hope into the American heart. The character of the President and Vice President-elect both devoted church members, furnishes ground for such hope. If this come to pass, other questions will be solved by the wisdom, patience, and persistence of right motives and faith. Christian civilization needs the touch of a vital spiritual force to check dishonest greed, selfish ambition, social unrest, and commercial tyranny. There is room for all, work for all, reward for all, and hope for all when the spirit of Jesus fills all.

WHY THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IS NOT GROWING IN THE MISSION CAUSE.

Mr. Editor:

Your editorial on the Missionary Situation of December 4 in which you ask Dr. Barrett to tell the cause of such a situation existing in our church today has been read with interest. I have not the ability to explain great questions like Dr. Barrett and I hope you will not for once think I could go into the details of this subject. As a layman only, I shall not undertake to write a long article on the subject of missions. I shall offer one criticism and only one. The pastors of the Christian church have not brought the great question before the Church as they should have brought it. I have for 30 years been a member of the Christian church and if memory serves me right I have heard but one minister present this cause to the church and make an effort to raise means to forward the mission cause. This minister was Rev. P. T. Klapp. On the other hand I have known an occasion when a certain Christian church had raised by public collection a mission fund for Conference and when the year was closed, and the church lacked perhaps eight dollars of having the pastor's salary paid, he told the church they must take the money they had for this purpose and settle with him; that his salary came first. The missionary cause has never grown any at this church since his ministry. I have heard ministers, in regard to the Conference assessments, tell the church, "I think your assessment is too much. Pay my salary and pay as much on the conference assessment is too much." I ask, will we as a church ever with such pastors, grow to be a great mission church. I say this Bro. Atkinson with the best of feeling to our preachers; but if this is not the real cause of our lack of progress I am fooled and I hope our pastors will make a stronger effort this year than ever for this cause. The Christian church has a loyal set of members and if the leaders or pastors will present the missionary cause as it should be you will see a great increase in funds to go up to conference in 1913.

RICHLAND, GA.

Dear Brother:

I want to give to The Sun some items from this conference, and especially from my field of work. I am serving six churches and have several regular appointments at mission points. On Friday night before the first Sunday I will preach just above Tifton, Ga., where we have about 15 members located. I will write more of this point later. I go from there to Enigma and preach Saturday and Sunday. Sunday afternoon I go out to Martin's school house and preach. The work at Enigma is in very good condition and prospects are good for a successful year's work. I go from Enigma to Cordell and preach Monday night. We have some members here and it is a good town of about eight thousand people. On the 2nd Sunday I go to Kite. I have arranged to stop over at Adrain about 15 miles of Kite and preach on Friday night. I preach Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night at Kite. On Sunday afternoon, I go to a station named Tour and preach at three. The work at Kite is in good condition and prospects fine. On the 3rd Sunday I go to Oak Grove where I organized 16 years ago, and have preached ever since. We have a strong committee of seven men who are raising money to build a new church house. Our present building is too small for our regular congregations and we want a better house. We have nearly 300 members and a splendid community. We want our building about 40 by 60 with 2 Sunday school rooms, tower in front, bay for pulpit, covered with metal shingles. We hope to begin work about the 1st of April. I go from Oak Grove on Sunday afternoon 18 miles through the country to La Nett and preach at night. Our church here is doing fine. The house was full last night and nearly 100 in Sunday school in the morning. Rev. J. A. Denham, a member of this church and a licensed preacher, preaches here every 3rd Sunday. A committee of twelve are appointed to look after some needed improvements on church building. We hope to hold a revival here about the 5th Sunday in March. On the fourth Sunday I preach at Richland and Randall's Crossing. The work at Randall's Crossing has suffered from removals. Several of our members have moved out of the community, but still hold their membership there and are loyal in helping to support the church. We miss their presence in our regular services. Our work at Richland is doing very well. Sunday school and Christian Endeavor are both interesting. We are hoping to make this a good year in our work here. It is only a question of a short time when we must rebuild here. The town is growing, and the other churches are putting up nice brick buildings and it becomes necessary for us to soon rebuild to hold our prestige.

So far as I know the other churches of our conference are all doing well. They have good pastors and there is no visible reason why this should not be a great year with our churches. I am going to try and write more for The Sun than in the past. I have been so busy that I have excused myself from writing, but will try and do better.

Since I built the church in Columbus I have been in a financial strain. I assumed all the debts on the property when we dedicated it and in the last 3 years have paid out $850.00 of my money and it has kept me in a hard pull to meet payments. I have $600.00 yet in two payments of $300 each. I hope to get this off so I can prepare for my church at Richland. This church is destined to be a power for good in our Conference. Bro. Wells is hustling in this field. More anon.

NORFOLK LETTER.

Just across the way from my room they are tearing down an old house.

They say that it is, maybe, an hundred years old. Probably it isn't all of that, but anyhow, it is certainly very, very old.

When first built, and for a long time afterwards this now antiquated old structure must have been regarded as very impressive and palatial in design. Standing upon Granby street in the then most aristocratic section of Norfolk, it was a house of prominence.

Thank you, it was the proud residence of the distinguished and wealthy Judge or Colonel Somebody-or-Other, I have now forgotten who. So, let me whisper it softly, kind reader, but I, a newcomer and a plebeian, never even heard his name. Such is fame.

Around the old house I linger, fascinated, as the workmen tear it down, wondering whether, despite its former splendor those who abode there were really happy, or were they, like many others who live in mansions sick and miserable at heart?

What scenes of joy and gladness or of agony and anguish have those spacious, high-ceilinged rooms and broad corridors witnessed?

First, comes a vision of the youthful husband, wife and the wee little tots, gathered some evening either around the hearthstone or the cheerful board. Life is before them all and old age seems afar off. It does not occur to them that some day they will be old; that the children will drift away and that the cozy little home-circle will be broken.

The vision changes. The old mansion is all astir, and forth upon the breeze is borne the mingled fragrance of magnolias and orange-blossoms. A momentary hush, the music peals out and adown the broad colossal stairway come the bride and groom. There is a murmuring of vows; hearty good wishes from friends who know not whether to laugh or cry, and soon husband and wife go forth into the broad world and the gate of the old home shuts forever behind them. As the vision fades I see Mother stealing away to some upper chamber of the now lonely and silent house to let flow freely the tears that would no longer be denied.

For awhile, how long I cannot tell, the scene is blurred; I know not what other things the old house is witnessing. And then, yet once again the vision comes and once again are the people gathered, now in more sombre garb. Again the doors of the old house are thrown wide, and a black casket is being borne through the portals. This time it is Mother herself who is going upon that long journey which awaits us all. And over the old mansion the funeral pall rests as naturally and as easily as the bridal veil.

Thus all who first lived in the house are now probably lying in some "silent city" of the dead, remembered by only a few, if remembered at all.

And you too, old home, that was once so splendid, you too are going. Your little day is done. But 'ere you go I wish to salute you. I suspect that in the midst of the great buildings about you, and notwithstanding the throngs that daily pass you, you have been lonely for a long time. I suspect that really and truly you want to go.

Who shall blame you? The truth is you are out of place, and when one is out of place there is but one thing one can do, and that is; GO. So farewell, old home, an affectionate farewell.

Henry Spencer Booth.

—Turkey and the Balkan allies are having rough sailing in the matter of their peace negotiations which have been carried on of late in London, and it now seems that the war will be resumed and fought out to the finish. This is doubtful however, for the unspeakable Turk even knows when he has enough; and the Allies have given him nearly enough already.

—The Mississippi River is again on the rampage and is causing much loss of property. The levees are broken in several places, and great danger is threatened. The gravest dangers seem to be not far distant from Greenville, Miss.

Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor.

This department under the direction of Young People's General Convention. Frequent news items from Sunday schools, organized classes, and C. E. societies are desired. If you are interested in either or about to organize, address the department's editor,

CHARLES A. HINES, Editor and Cor. Sec.,

Greensboro, N. C.

ARE YOU IN THE COMPANY?

President-elect Woodrow Wilson is a Sunday school man and has held practically every office in the school. The late President McKinley was for many years a Bible class teacher. Benjamin Harrison and his grandfather, President William Henry Harrison, were Sunday school men and had classes. President Roosevelt while at Harvard taught a class, and Lincoln and many other presidents have been active in the school.

Governor Craig of North Carolina was teaching a large Baraca class at Asheville, when he was called to the governor's chair. Governor Mann of Virginia is an ardent Sunday school and Young Men's Christian Association supporter. The great Generals Lee and Jackson were teachers in Sunday schools at one time or another. Among others are the following:

Justice John M. Harlan, of the United States Supreme Court, a Bible class teacher in New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C.; Justice David J. Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, a Bible class teacher in the First Congregational Church, Washington, D. C.; Judge Stanton J. Pelle, of the United States Court of Claims, a Bible class teacher in the Church of the Covenant, Presbyterian, of Washington, D. C.

HOW TO USE THE CHOIR.

Entertain a child ever so well—according to your own ideas—with picture or toy or a bit of property from your pocket, yet he is never satisfied till he has put his hands on the article. Take a child to an entertainment given by children and, much as he may enjoy looking on, he shall want to be “in it.”

So with singing even. Have the best sort of a choir to sing to the school and there is a void. Every normal child who has the least love for music finds fullest enjoyment in the singing when he or she takes part. The more truly the child can be “in it,” the more truly he enjoys it.

The best use is made of a selected choir, not when it sings to the school, but when it helps the whole school sing. It is not necessary that all the singing be done in this way. A place should be made for special selections by those who take pains to meet and practice. This, in itself, is a stimulus to those who are not yet old enough to enter; it can also serve as a model of good singing. On the whole, however, the choir should mean better singing in the school. Its part will be to lead off on new songs, teach them to those who learn by hearing. Again such a body of singers can make possible a great deal of variety by means of responsive singing—verse and chorus and alternate verse, call and answers. When the verse and chorus method is used, the children naturally will be inspired to swell the chorus with “a joyful noise.”

BIRTHDAY MEETING.

Notes on C. E. Topic for Feb. 2, Endeavor's 32 Anniversary.

Christian Endeavor was founded by Dr. Clark on Feb. 2, 1881, and this year the 2nd comes on Sunday also. (Have someone tell in the meeting how many Christian Endeavor birthdays have come on Sunday.) Speak of the splendid growth since then, multiplying the first society by some eight thousand, and the first few numbers, that could get into a parsonage parlor, by so many hundred thousand as to bring the total membership to more than three millions, and multiplying the one first denomination by more than eighty, and the one country in which it started by the number of countries in all the world! What is the cause of this glorious growth? The fact that our society is based upon the right principles. There can be no other cause. Dr. Clark and his handful of helpers at the United Society headquarters could not accomplish these results. The society has had God's favor because He approved the principles on which the society is built. It is worth while to spend an evening with principles that have been so highly honored.

Some Short Address.

1. “Let the earnestness of the man who has presented his whole body, differentiate from the man who is “fashioning his life according to this world.” This will “prove” him to be a man of God and others seeing his zeal and earnestness will be won to the service of God. Nothing will so brighten one's light that others may see it as earnestness. Earnestness causes friction, and friction both removes dust and corrosion and generates heat, and heat makes light.”

2. “God has dealt to each man a measure of faith. So there is that at which and over which one can and has a right to grow enthusiastic. A man who can not master the multiplication table would not be expected to warm up over mathematics. But with “gifts differing according to the grace that was given us,” we are to use these earnestly. A Daniel in steadfastness, a Jeremiah in earnestness, a John in devotion, a Paul in zeal, a Malachi in righteousness and an Apollos in teaching.

3. “Scripture teems with examples of those who while laborious in the duties of their station, most exact in the duties which they owe to God. Leaving the greatest of all, look at Joseph, Moses, David and Daniel. And like examples the church has in all ages. Xavier among the churchmen; Sir Matthew Hall among the judges; Wilberforce and Buxton among statesmen; Gardner and Havelock among soldiers—have all left records that prayer never spoiled work.

FOR THE SUPERINTENDENT.

Sunday School Lesson Feb. 2—“The Flood.” Gen 6:9 to 7:24.

Time.—The end of the antediluvian world.

Place.—Unknown.

Persons.—God, Noah and his family, the corrupt world of humanity.

Golden Text.—The wages of sin is death; but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord.—Rom. 6:23.

Leading Thought.—Eternal life is God's free gift.

Between the events of which we studied last Sunday and those that we study to-day there are many centuries. As the land in which the former events took place is unknown, so the land in which the latter events transpired is unknown. The most that can be said is that there is a somewhat general opinion that the interior of southwestern Asia was the cradle of the race. The geography and chronology of the antediluvian world are very indefinite.

We have learned of the first transgression and of the first crime. As the children of men multiplied, things went from bad to worse. The wickedness of man was great, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. The earth was corrupt and filled with violence. Every opportunity for man to repent and do right was given. Infinite patience and never-ending love were exercised, but the time came when there was no possibility that men would ever want to do better. Sin ripened its harvest of death, and God, grieved of heart, sent the Flood.

There were some exceptions to the prevailing iniquity. Enoch was an example of the one who walked with God. Noah was a just man. Out of the final, awful wreckage of the world of humanity God rescued all who did not irrevocably choose death.

Unmistakable references to the Deluge have been found in the extant races of the Babylonians and the races of India, the Egyptians, the Phoenicians and the Syrians, the Greeks, the Etruscans and the Romans, the Celts, the Scandinavians, the native tribes of North America, and the inhabitants of America south of the Isthmus of Panama, the Chinese, the Japanese, and the natives of Boraus.

Question Review.

1. How many of you ever knew it to rain all day?
2. How many have seen it rain two days? Three days? Four days? (Continue until no hands are raised.)
3. How many days did it rain in the story of our lesson?
4. How did this long rain effect the rivers and seas? (Burst their bounds and overflowed the land.)
5. How deep did the water get?
6. What became of men and animals?
7. Who alone are saved?
8. Where was Noah's family during the Flood?
9. How came they to have an ark to find refuge in?

Just think how everybody must have laughed at Noah all the 120 years he was building the ark! I suspect they called it "Noah's folly."

10. Did it pay Noah to stand the jeers and follow God's advice?

11. Does it pay one today to stand being laughed at for the sake of doing what God wants us to do?

Lesson Announcement.

Today we learn of the great flood coming after the many years Noah had been preparing for it. Next Sunday we are to have the story of what happened when the storm was over. I wish the boys and girls would think this week what sort of a world it would be if we had no more winter, no more summer, no more day clouds or rainbows. Then see if you can find in next Sunday's lesson any assurance that we shall always have these blessings.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas; Miss Susie Turpin is a highly esteemed and valued member of the Third Christian Church, of Park Place, Norfolk, Virginia, and,

Whereas; Her faithful service for the Master and splendid Christian character, together with her lovable and womanly qualities have endeared her to the entire congregation of the Third Church and,

Whereas; Miss Turpin feels called, in the providence of the Master to labor in another and more distant field, thus making vacant for a time her place in our midst,

Therefore be it Resolved, by the congregation of the Third Christian Church, of Park Place, Norfolk, Va., in regular service assembled:

That though we deeply regret the loss of this faithful and efficient co-laborer from our ranks we yet rejoice that she is not lost to the great cause dear to all our hearts, but goes to be a faithful witness for the Master in other parts, enriching other lives and thus fitly representing the spirit of the Third Church.

Resolved Further; That we have implicit confidence in Miss Turpin's fitness for the work which she goes to do, and heartily commend her to any among whom her lot may be cast as a sincere, devoted and consecrated woman.

Resolved Further; That a copy of these Resolutions be presented to Miss Turpin, and that one copy each be furnished to The Christian Sun, of Elon College, N. C., and the Herald of Gospel Liberty, of Dayton, Ohio, for publication as a token of our further esteem and appreciation.

Young.

It has pleased our Heavenly Father in his wisdom and unfathomable love to remove from our midst one of our most beloved members of our church and Sunday school, Brother W. T. Young.

Resolved, therefore, by the officers and members of the Christian Church and Sunday school:

1st—That the church and Sunday school has lost one of its best members and workers:

2nd—That the wisdom and ability which he has exercised in the aid of our church and Sunday school by his untiring service, contributions, counsel and most beautiful Christian example will be forever held in grateful remembrance.

Resolved 3rd—That the removal of such a life from our midst leaves a vacancy which will be deeply felt and realized by all the members of the church and Sunday school:

Resolved 4th—That in deep sympathy with the bereaved of the deceased brother we express our hope that even so great a loss to us may be overruled for good by "Him who doeth all things well and while we shall ever miss him in church and in Sunday school, we feel and are confident that he has been called home to the Saints everlasting rest." "Blessed are they who die in the Lord from henceforth, says the spirit; yea, they shall rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Resolved 5th—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to the church and Sunday school, and also a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Foister.

Mrs. Adeline Foister, of Chapel Hill, N. C., departed this life December 22nd, 1912 at the age of 84 years.

She was the wife of the late W. M. Foister, and a member of Hank's Chapel, Chatam Co., N. C. She died in full assurance of a rest that is, "prepared for the people of God."

She was converted at a protracted meeting at Haywood, fifty years ago. This meeting was conducted by Rev. Joe Martin.

In the absence of any Christian minister Rev. Geo. S. Bearden of the M. E. church conducted the burial service.

While we mourn her departure, we know she awaits us in glory.

Members of the Board.

 Mrs. L. F. Johnson, Raleigh, N. C., Vice President.
 Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., Secretary.
 Mrs. W. T. Walters, Winchester, Va. Treasurer.
 Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C. Corresponding Secretary.
 Miss Bettie Stephenson, Boone, N. C., Superintendent Young Peoples' Societies and Cradle Roll.
 Mrs. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga.

This Department is edited by Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., assisted by the other members of the Board, to whom all items of missionary interest and matter for the Department should be sent.

RAISING THE STANDARD FOR 1913.

A meeting of the Woman's Missionary Board of the Eastern Virginia Conference was held at the Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., January 14, to plan work for the new conference year. The three members of the Board were present, and Mrs. W. H. Denison, who had been asked to meet with them.

Mrs. W. H. Dick reported that the amount of $179.00 had been sent to the treasurer of the S. C. C. Board for the 1st. quarter of the conference year; of this, $150.00 was for dues from Women's Societies and Children's Societies, $29.00, a quarterly payment for Mrs. Watanabe's support.

Encouraging news was given regarding the work of Mrs. Watanabe who has been supported during the past year by four societies of the conference. All present agreed in recommending that every missionary society choose a similar special work in addition to the regular work.

As many churches find it almost impossible to hold regular missionary society meetings, on account of scattered membership, the Board thought it an excellent plan to distribute mite boxes and literature in these churches, and have superintendents of Literature and Mite Boxes appointed to make quarterly reports to the Conference treasurer, and to arrange interesting programs to be used when the books are opened. Bethany has already adopted the Mite Box plan. This suggestion was also recommended for churches that have missionary societies for raising Conference Mission apportionments, but not contribute to the funds of the Woman's Board. In the representative membership of Conference Boards, recommended at the October meeting of the E. Va. Board, these Literature and Mite Box Superintendents would be entitled to membership as would presidents of missionary societies.

A suitable name for the Children's Missionary Societies of the Southern Convention was discussed. It was finally decided that as constitutions had been printed for the Southern Convention in the name "Willing Workers," it would be best to adopt this name in all of our churches.

The Board also expressed earnest desire that the interest of young people be enlisted in missions either in the organization of societies or in whatever way most adaptable to each church.

The list of churches not having any force of organization in them was divided among the Board, and an effort will be made to enlist the women of every church in the work. What has been accomplished by a small part of our women is but an earnest of what can be done with all our women at work.

A suggestion that Southern Missionary Societies have a share in purchasing a lot for the Memorial Church in Japan, was heartily approved by the Board.

These and other topics of missionary interest were discussed with enthusiasm; and when the meeting was adjourned, those present felt a re-kindling of determination to work for missions, and a deepened desire to attain their ambition: a Missionary Society in every church, and every woman in every church a member.

the student body and is especially powerful in touching the religious motive in the young. We anticipate a glorious baptism of the Spirit.

Uncle Wellons has been quite feeble the past few days, but was able with assistance to attend preaching Sunday and to administer the Lord's Supper. He spoke with tenderness of his declining days and with joy over the thought of his approaching translation. Few men have served their day and generation as acceptably as he and none will be more sincerely missed than he, when the final summons comes. It is a benediction to have him near. The communion was peculiarly tender and impressive by reason of his feeble conditions.

Dr. Amick's class in Public Speaking has become so large that it has to be conducted in two divisions. It is an exceedingly popular course and the pupils in it are enthusiastic over it.

Mrs. Long's art class continues to assume still larger proportions. It has almost outgrown its accommodations. The other special departments are also on a boom.

Mrs. F. L. Fuller, Germantown, Pa., is on a visit to her daughter, Miss Ester, a member of the student body.

Rev. E. M. Carter Supt. of the Christian Orphanage, has gone to Chipley, Ga. whence he will arrive Tuesday with his good wife and children. Brother C. will then feel at home in his present high station, and Elon will certainly welcome her former student, Miss Lovie, now become "Aunt Lovie." Truly is the College training workers for every department of our Zion and its work.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-eight years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 100 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

Dear Children and Friends:

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees last Friday, the 10, inst, it was decided that our room was just about all taken. Now the regrettable feature of this is, there are other deserving ones who ought to be accepted, but for lack of room our hands are tied. There were three applications presented at this meeting and only one of them accepted. And, since that time we have had three or four enquiries, and not to be able to encourage an application made my heart ache.

At this same meeting it was decided that the time had come when the water and sewage system is an actual necessity, and it was orded that the Superintendent solicit funds and begin the work as early as there is enough means in hand to justify this. I wonder if the pastors will not help me in this, and if we may not have the endorsement of some of them in a public way.

I am very glad to say that our sick ones are getting well again, and, that we want to express our appreciation to Dr. G. S. Watson for his faithful assistance during our troubles. Also to Dr. J. W. Page of Burlington who rendered fruitful service. It is through the good and true friends of the institution that this and other troubles are borne. Mary Webster, the one who has had pneumonia, is not able to sit up yet, but is getting on nicely. The Lord is good and has smiled graciously upon us, for which we want to be the more able to serve Him.

Yours in the interest of the institution,

Uncle Emory.

tical influence, let us turn our thought toward the general system of public instruction, and particularly to the great State Universities, in all of which, while art, and science, and history, and mathematics are freely taught, religion is unmentioned. This is not to say that all teachers in the schools, and all professors in the State Universities, are hostile to religion; for many of them are sincere Christians. But for all of their faith in Christ, they are not permitted to give instruction in religion in their classrooms. Right here then is the main question, what is to be the inevitable result upon our impressionable American youth of instructing them for a course of years in history, and science, and literature and the rest of it, with religion during all that time absolutely ignored and unmentioned. Is it not inevitable that they will grow to be interested in the subjects which are impressed on their minds from day to day, and that they will lose interest in the subject that is unmentioned, and that presently they will come to regard it as a by gone fad, and quite out of date in this live and progressive age? Does it not seem to you that religion in these State Universities is getting the freeze out? I am sure that I would not willingly subject any young person under my care to an influence of that character, where all other subjects are made impressive by constant repetition and reiteration, and where the main subject of life is shut up in a dark closet, unseen and unheard of. It would be easy to cite specific instances of young people who have been educated in this manner,—trained in the culture and refinement of the schools, and who have emerged with many laurels of scholarship, and yet whose faith in the Gospel, and whose moral nature, have suffered utter shipwreck and loss. Where the professor has abandoned religion for the golf-stick, the beer mug and the Sunday auto-car, where will the less sophisticated student appear? The wise parent needs to discriminate as to the brand of education which he furnishes his child, and the time for discrimination is beforehand and not afterward. Let him realize that an education which relegates religion to the background is in some ways worse than no religion at all. The polish of culture to the man who lacks the mainstay of principle makes him the more unmitigated scoundrel. In the days of struggle at the birth of this nation, one man who lost his faith was ready to sell his country for British guineas and a pair of golden epaulets, and we remember him, Benedict Arnold, with universal execration. Later another with all the polish of a man of the world was unprincipled enough to outrage every law of hospitality by besmirching the chastity of the wife or daughter of any friend, and we know him as Aaron Burr. Just now in New York they have been trying a gang of men for murdering another in the open street, attacking him cowardly four to one. It is said of some of these men that they could shine in polite society. But they had no principle, and their hands bear the murder stain, which no water, cold or hot, can ever wash away. We cannot afford to train up thugs and murderers. We cannot afford to manufacture Aaron Burrs and Benedict Arnolds. And so we cannot afford to place our children under a system of education, no matter how popular, from which instruction and practice in religion is systematically excluded.

Whither then shall the wise parent turn when he reaches the time when he is to send his child to College, and wishes him to get his literary and scientific training under auspices which shall not undermine his religion? Evidently enough he will look to the smaller college, which is free to develop its own courses of instruction, and which can exercise a potential influence in favor of the religious life as the happiest and best for any young man or woman.

Speaking thus of the smaller colleges, we are to remember that all the earlier colleges of America were established on the religious foundation. Such were Harvard, and Yale and Princeton, and King's College, now Columbia University, in New York City. Such were Dartmouth in New Hampshire, Williams in Massachusetts and Wesleyan in Connecticut. Several of these indeed had their main object to train men for the Christian ministry, and all of them had clergymen for their first presidents, and the major part of their early professors were of the same cloth. Without any manner of question, the earlier advanced education in this country was under religious auspices. In urging the claim of the smaller Colleges with its insistence on the cultivation of the religious principle, we are simply reverting to the original American tradition, and standing fast to the higher American ideal.

And it is from such colleges that the best educational product has come. A great complaint has lately been lifted by some of the largest and most popular universities themselves that they are not arousing the scholastic impulse in their students to the extent that should be expected,—that the influence of their great teachers is lost, dissipated among the thousands of students, who are too numerous to know their own classmates, or to feel the educative touch of their learned instructors. And so some are adopting a new plan, which is no less than to break up the great school into a number of smaller ones,—to set groups of students, reduced to a number small enough to insure mutual acquaintance,—small enough to respond to the personal influence of the teacher who is specially set over the particular group. But do you realize what a proposition like that signifies? It is nothing short of an acknowledgment of the supreme mistake of putting thousands of students into one vollege;—nothing short of the admission by the large that the smaller college is better for the student, better for his mental culture and vastly better for his culture in morals. And experience is proving the value of the smaller college in these very respects. If you start inquiry as to the men of mark in the nation, you will be surprised at the numbers who have come from the smaller colleges. Our beloved Longfellow was trained at Bowdoin College, a small college in Brunswick, Me. President Garfield was trained at Williams, a small college in the north-western corner of Massachusetts. Secretary Root was one of the ablest men in President Taft's cabinet. He was trained at Hamilton, a small college in the hills of central New York. We might continue that list indefinitely, but the few examples suffice.

"Ex pede Herculem." From his foot we know Hercules.

In the smaller colleges every professor knows every student by his name. Acquaintance is mutual and it is intimate. The best traits of the teachers are impressed upon the student's habit of thought irradicably. And the regular result is plain living, high thinking and lofty ideals, which the students cherish as the standard for all their lives.

SKETCHES OF THE LIFE OF THOMAS HOLMES.

Written by Himself.

Thomas Holmes was the oldest son of Burroughs and Polly Dennison Holmes. He was born Nov. 24, 1817, in the town of Royalton, Niagara County, New York.

Incidents of Childhood.

The log cabin in which he was born, (and cradled in a sap-trough) was situated on the road between the territories occupied by the Tonawanda and Tuscarora Indians; and the incident that left the earliest impression on his mind was the passing of a company by the cabin. There were some six or eight in the company, and the two oldest and most able bodied among them were riding ponies; the rest including some women carrying their infants on their backs by means of straps across their foreheads, were on foot. The inconsistency of strong men riding and women with infants walking seemed to impress him even then.

When he was in his fourth year, in 1821, his father, returned with his family to the home of his childhood in Albany County; the old farm having fallen to him in the settlement of his father's estate.

While living there an incident occurred that probably determined the ultimate life-work of Thomas, when he was less than ten years of age. Elders Daniel Call, Edward Peavy and—Teats held a General Meeting in the neighborhood and were entertained by his parents, who were also members of the Christian Church. One day they were sitting around the fireplace conversing, and Thomas was standing in the back part of the room listening, when one of them lifted his hand in the air, and bringing it down emphatically upon his knee said, "To stand upon my feet." Whatever he may have meant by it, the listening lad thought he meant "Wo is me if I preach not the gospel," and from that moment felt that he should be a preacher.

Education.

Thomas had the advantages afforded to the common schools at that time for a few years, but as soon as he became able to keep a plow right end up in sandy soil that became his summer work, and he went to school only during the winter term. When about fourteen years of age an incident occurred that left a lasting and moulding influence on his mind and life. One day, from the field in which he was plowing, he saw a rail-road train, (a very small affair compared with the trains we see today) drawn by an engine that was said to weigh seven tons, speeding along its track, half a mile distant, at the astonishing rate of twelve miles an hour. It was something new in those days, and a wonderful wonder to everybody. He stopped his team to gaze and admire. Musing as he gazed, he said to himself, This is what learning can do; I will have an education. He knew nothing about a College, but he knew some men were more learned than others, and he determined to have learning. To this end he devoted every moment when not at work. While baiting his team at noon, he always had a text-book of some kind to read. One book that he read at such times, and that interested him greatly, was Mrs. Blake's Philosophy. That enabled him to account for many things that had been mysterious to him, and delighted him wonderfully.

The winter of 1833-4 was his last term of district school; and having completed common arithmetic the previous winter, he spent this winter in Algebra. 1834-5 attended Select school at Saratoga Springs, boarding at home, and walking two miles and a half every morning and night and not losing a minute of school-time. His chief study was surveying.

house on Sunday morning, took part as usual. After meeting, stranger said "I want you to come and hold meetings in my neighborhood." I replied "If you want some prayer-meetings, I will come and help you. Said he, "I want you to come and preach to us." After some preliminary talk, an appointment was given for two weeks from that day. This appointment was kept up all winter.

1834. Joined Hudron Ohio Conference, and by their authority was ordained Nov. 4, 1844; elders appointed to officiate were Patric Mallory, who preached the sermon, Levi Stickney, and Zerah S. Vail, who was Clerk of the Conference.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

Pleasant Grove.

I have made two appointments at this church since Conference. The first Saturday in Dec. was our first quarterly meeting. A good congregation was present and the work in the conference was interesting and done in harmony. Our plans to raise the conference apportionments were adjusted and this work is going on nicely. I think Pleasant Grove will go up as a banner church to our next Conference. We hope soon to put a new organ in this church. Other plans for work in this church will be mentioned later on.

Last Sunday this large house was well filled with attentive hearers. So far I find this an interesting congregation and easy to preach to. This is the beginning of my first year as pastor of this church, and I am well pleased with the work as it starts off and the church and congregation at large. I hear many kind words of Dr. W. S. Long, my predecessor.

Ingram, Va.

This is the beginning of my 6th year as pastor of this church. I have made only one appointment since Conference here. The work starts off here nicely. I regard this as one of the best churches in this conference. The membership is small, but true and faithful and never fails to meet its obligations. It is doing more than some stronger churches.

We are sorry to note the death of Miss Nannie Bass, one of the most intelligent young ladies of that community. Miss Nannie was a leader in church work, a great power in the Sunday school and a Christian lady of strong influence. She lingered for some three years and passed on to her home beyond on the 5th of Dec. 1912. After speaking so tenderly to her dear mother, asking her not to think of her as being dead, but as an angel in heaven, and to her little brothers to think of her as looking at them from heaven, she left such sweet evidences of her faith in God.

Happy Home.

This is my fifth year as pastor of this church. I have filled but one appointment since Conference. The work starts off happily. Here we have some of the largest congregations; but many of this large congregation are members of other churches. Our working membership here is small, but these are true and faithful. Here we have some of the best Sunday schools with a good number who are well interested in the work. In conversation with the Sec. of the County Sunday School Convention not long since, he said to me, not knowing at the time who I was, that Bro. W. D. Wall of Happy Home was the best Sunday school Supt. in Rockingham Co. I quickly spoke saying I am glad to hear that. I am his pastor.

Smithwood.

This is my first year as pastor of this church. Here I am on the fourth Sunday. This is a small church but I am well pleased with its beginning. We held our first quarterly meeting here in Dec. And I feel like this is a good working little church. They have a good Sunday school and some of the best of singing. This is the place I used to hear the best singing I knew of in any country church; but quite a few have married and moved out of the community which makes the choir less. I am glad to be pastor of this Church. My brother P. T. Klapp will preach for me there the next fourth Sunday while I will be in Keyser.

Keyser.

This is my seventh year in Keyser as pastor. This is a good little church; but so few members. It is real hard to hold our own here for lack of material. If it were not for the help of the members of other churches we could not hold our own. I have been going here as pastor for this the 7th year at a personal sacrifice, all for the cause's sake; for here I find some true and most earnest Christian workers. Rev. Cornelius Rowland was with me in our meeting last fall. The good Lord was with us and gave us a gracious revival in the church. Bro. Rowland endeared himself to the people very much. This was the 3rd meeting he held in Keyser.

Pleasant Ridge.

After an absence of three years it was my pleasure to visit this church the fifth Sunday in Dec. 1912. I was pastor for three years and I resigned under a unanimous call to continue as pastor to take charge of Salem Chapel for 3 years. My visit to Pleasant Ridge was very pleasant. I met so many of my old friends there. I was glad to be at a reunion of the late David Huffines family at the old residence in the afternoon. All the family relations were not there; but quite a few were present. The reunion dinner was very inviting. Mrs. Elizabeth Huffines the wife of David is in her 84th year. She is the only living first cousin to the mother of this writer who will be 90 years old the 25th day of next June.

MY HEART NEEDS THEE.

My heart needs Thee, O Lord, my heart needs Thee! No part of my being needs Thee like my heart. All else within me can be filled by Thy gifts. My hunger can be satisfied by daily bread. My thirst can be allayed by earthly waters. My cold can be removed by household fires. My weariness can be relieved by outward rest. But no outward thing can make my heart pure. The calmest day will not calm my passions. The fairest scene will not beautify my soul. The richest music will not make harmony within. The breezes can cleanse the air, but no breeze can cleanse a spirit. This world has not provided for my heart. It has provided for my eye; it has provided for my ear; it has provided for my touch; it has provided for my taste; it has provided for my sense of beauty; but it has not provided for my heart. Provide Thou for my heart, O Lord. It is the only unwinged bird in all creation; give it wings, O Lord. Earth has failed to give it wings; its very power of loving has often drawn it in the mire. Be Thou the strength of my heart. Be Thou its fortress in temptation, its shield in remorse, its covert in the storm, its star in the night, its voice in the solitude. Guide it in its gloom; help it in its heat; direct it in its doubt; calm it in its conflict; fan it in its faintness; prompt it in its perplexity; lead it through its labyrinths; raise it from its ruins. I cannot rule this heart of mine; keep it under the shadow of thine own wings.—George Matheson.

HEAVEN'S RAINBOW.

I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth. Genesis 9:13. (Golden Text for Sunday, February 9.)

There is nothing more evident in this universe than that God is merciful. From the rivers to the ends of the earth God has shown, and is ever more showing His mercy. When through just anger and righteous wrath He had wiped from the face of the earth a wicked and degenerate race, His mercy, His compassion, His pity was aroused first of all, and He said that there should not ever "any more be a flood to destroy the earth." As evidence of that mercy, and that eternal declaration, He hung His bow out on the clouds so that all should see, and all should know, that this thing of a flood should never occur again.

God made two rainbows. One of these He hangs out upon the clouds, the other is round about His throne in Heaven. The one we see out in the clouds is but a pattern of that which encircles the throne of Heaven.

The things of this earth are patterned after the things of heaven. That which God exhibits on the earth has first been thought out, and wrought out, in heaven. The rainbow we see in the clouds above is beautiful; the one we shall see in heaven is more beautiful because it is the original from which this one is patterned. We may see many beautiful objects, many beautiful deeds, many beautiful persons here on the earth, and we do; but these are only patterns, types, images made from the original, the genuine, the real which we shall see and know in the glory land. When the patterns of things shall have been done away and we shall see the originals and the real face to face in the better land, we shall see and know what beautiful objects are, how beautiful people are.

The rainbow means completion, perfection. The reason why we think the rainbow pretty is because it represents in one all seven of the colors—completion. When God made His bow He left nothing out. He put into it all the colors there were. He exhausted all the resources of the artist's realm.

And the rainbow is a picture and a declaration of God's love. Out of the cloud the rain had descended which destroyed the earth. Now on the very cloud from which the ruinous rains had come God placed the emblems of His promise. Our darkest clouds are fringed with a silver lining. The source of rain affords the place and the back ground for a display of God's infinite goodness and loving kindness.

This is a declaration that God can and will turn our tears to laughter, our sorrows to joys, our griefs to gladness, the source of our ruin to the sanctuary of our salvation. The cloud which threatens to overwhelm and destroy us affords the place for the display of God's perfect coloring, God's perfect mercy, God's perfect pity, love and compassion. When you see the bow in the heavens you know that God is able and ready and willing to give gladness for grief and beauty for ashes. The world has never yet marked nor measured the metes and bounds of God's goodness, bounty, love and mercy, and it never will. Heaven alone can reveal these.

FOUR LETTERS.

Within the last four days we have received as any letters the contents of which are as follows:

(1). "Have all the shares of stock in our Southern Christian Publishing Company been disposed of? If not how many shares have been sold, what is par value, and how many shares are yet offered?"

(2). "Enclosed you will find $50.00 which is I believe, the price of one share of stock in the Southern Christian Publishing Company. Please make the certificate out either to the Company itself, to Elon College, or to yourself, as may be deemed proper." (This letter was from a friend not a member of the Christian church, but interested in our enterprises).

(3). "Enclosed find $25.00 balance payment on one share stock I subscribed for. I wish the Publishing Company much success and prosperity not because I care for any dividend that may accrue, but because I want to see our people (in the South) owning their own printing plant."

(4). "Enclosed please find my check for $50.00 which pays for one share of Southern Christian Publishing Company's stock. Please issue and send me certificate of stock for same." (This letter and check were from a brother who had not been approached by any one to explain or solicit).

These letters will serve to show something of the feeling existing toward our Southern Christian Publishing Company. We doubt if our Southern Convention has ever adopted a resolution, or projected an enterprise, certainly it has not in our memory which has met with such hearty approval and universal cooperation as this of our own publishing House. If an enterprise of such promise, need, and universal interest does not succeed and prosper it will certainly be because of neglect, mismanagement, or grave inefficiency of those in charge.

THE MISSIONARY SITUATION.

The spirit of missions is not dead amongst us. Nor do you think for one moment that it is. That good spirit was never more alive amongst us than at present. Since The Sun began to enquire recently into the situation, editorially, we have received more assurance than we ever had that our people are interested in missions as they never were before. Dr. J. P. Barrett, Editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty answered the questions put to him, frankly, freely and fully. His answer is sufficient and we are grateful. His reply was given in moderation and with a steady pen. He printed facts. That was all we wished. As President Samuel of the American Christian Convention wrote in The Herald of last week with regard to Dr. Barrett, "An answer from him was due because it had been put up to him in a way that if he did not answer he was a coward. I am not in favor of covering up facts."

And now we do most heartily agree with Dr. Samuel in this statement "I am certain we will never solve the problem by criticisms. The easiest thing any one can do is to criticise the other fellow."

What we wanted was not criticism, but light. This has been turned on and is enough. Nobody believes that any part of our missionary funds has been covertly or dishonestly handled. If there has been inefficiency or poor judgment, from any one's point of view, this will in due and proper season right itself. All of us make mistakes and some times err in our judgment as touching the investment and appropriation of funds.

Here then is the duty of every Christian Sun reader: To decide to do and pray more for missions, study more about missions and give more to missions. We must become a missionary people. The conviction grows and deepens upon us that the main cause of our slow progress in developing the home work is to be found in the little we do for the foreign work. God cannot prosper us unless we help to spread the Gospel abroad—send it to the millions who sit in darkness. If we would have everything for the home work we must develop a zeal and a deep devotion to the foreign work.

The Southern Convention offers to raise this year $2,500. for foreign missions. To bring this about every church will have to raise its full conference apportionment for missions and then make a special offering beside. We can do this. It will help us to do it. We shall be the happier and the richer for the task. Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., in another column of this issue sounds the clarion call. Catch his fine spirit beloved brethren and fellow pastors and let us go forward, as we never have, in the great work of helping to take the world for Christ. All together brethren, and the task will be a joyous one and its achievement will mean progress, development, victory, glory.

THE INAUGURAL BALL.

President-elect Woodrow Wilson had the courage, and the grace of God, sufficient to turn the tide of popular applause, and a long established custom, and abolish that old national farce the Inaugural Ball. Whereupon the Moguls of society—of Washington, D. C. society in particular—are mad some, and are already in high duceon against “the silly decrees of this parson’s son elected to the Presidency.” Now just let the indignant cavort, and cut a few shines for fun. Bro. Wilson has so far shown himself to be a man of his own mind, and one with convictions as to what is right and what is not. And some how, up-to-date the people are with him. That inaugural ball was a sham and a nuisance and a humbug. It is a thousand wonders some man with grit and grace had not ruled it out before. At any rate our forthcoming President has done the reasonable and sensible thing.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Turkish-Balkan War.

The peace negotiations in London, carried on now for two months, between Turkey and the Balkan Allies, have been terminated, and at 7 o’clock P. M., February 3 the bombardment of Adrianople began afresh. It is now war to the finish. The Turks refuse to concede demands that looked to the peace of Europe, and now the Balkan Allies have reentered the conflict with the avowed purpose of driving the unspeakable Turk out of Europe. The undertaking is immense, and will be attended with untold suffering and great bloodshed before accomplished. The Turk driven to desperation will fight like a hunted animal; but the Turk has no legal or moral right to European territory. He is there by pillage, plunder and force of arms.

The peace of Europe and the safety of Greek, Bulgarian and Balkan are and must ever be threatened and endangered as long as the Turk owns a foot of European territory.

Temperance in N. C.

Those who believe that the temperance, or even prohibition sentiment, it is a stand-still, or on the wane in this good State certainly have not read the proceedings of the Anti-Saloon League meetings in Raleigh the past week. We doubt if any State Temperance Convention has been any more enthusiastic than this. Not only was the Convention well attended, but the addresses were able, to the point, and clearly demonstrated the fact that never was the spirit of temperance more alive in the State than at present. The Attorney-General of the State made an extended address in which he demonstrated his own familiarity with the working of the law and the sentiment of the people of the State as touching the law and sentiment expressed by this speaker and that of others was unequivocally that prohibition was a fixity in North Carolina, had come to stay, was far more popular now than it was when first enacted into law.

Six Months’ School.

There is a demand from the people of North Carolina that the present Legislature give the free schools of the State a chance. This demand is well nigh universal, and is emphatic. The cry is that the children of the rural districts shall have at least a six months school term, and that there shall be a compulsory attendance clause for children of given age.

This cry is so loud and so persistent that we do not believe the Legislature will or can turn a heedless ear to it. We have never known a feeling more general and more intense than this, that the rural public schools must and shall now have a chance. By the educational census this startling fact is revealed that North Carolina is doing less than any State in the Union for her public schools, save one, far away New Mexico. This stigma the people are determined to remove, and remove for good and in earnest. The boys and girls in North Carolina have as much right to a chance in the race of life as the boys and girls of other States; and they are going to get it. There is a deficit in the State treasury, it is true, and taxes are already high; but the people are determined that the public schools have suffered long enough and now if there is to be suffering other school interests or institutions must share it. We do not believe this Legislature would dare adjourn without hearing and heeding the urgent and vehement demand from all over our State to give the children of the rural districts and the free schools a chance.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Mr. J. Hawkins Rudd, Benaja, N. C., visited the College and his daughter, Mrs. Dr. S. A. Ware, last week. He is one of Elon’s best friends.

Prof. H. M. Loy, Jacksonville, N. C., visited Alma Mater this week and was peculiarly happy and felicitous in his praises of the improvements and growth of which he professed to see evidences on every hand. He proposes a great reunion for commencement of all the classes. What do the other Alums think of this? The College would certainly be honored in such a pilgrimage this way.

Dr. P. H. Fleming, High Point, N. C., visited the College Wednesday to transact certain duties as Secretary of the Board of Trustees and attended the meeting.

Rev. H. E. Rountree, Greensboro, N. C., sang a beautiful solo during the meeting service Friday evening, and has promised to return for a similar service Tuesday. He sings with power.

Rev. L. E. Smith, Princeton, N. J., writes that he is too busy to write, but encloses his remittance on Special Fund and wishes the College well. Mrs. Smith also is doing work in the Princeton Seminary.

Rev. C. H. Rowland, who is this week conducting a revival service in the College, is at his best an expounder of the Truth. The interest is intense and we are praying and working for a gracious outpouring of the Spirit in our midst. There have already been a score or more of professions.

The executive Board of the Christian Publishing Company met here Thursday and decided to begin work on the 10th instant.

The Teacher’s Normal Number of the College Bulletin is now being mailed to 3,500 addresses. Any desiring may have a copy.

Mr. R. H. McCauley, Chapel Hill, N. C., and Miss Susie McCauley, his sister, now teaching in Gilesville, were happy visitors Sunday.

Mr. Clifford Griffin, Spring Hope, N. C., a former student visited his brother here Sunday.

Uncle Wellons, while yet feeble, is steadily advancing to his accustomed strength. He has received many cheering messages from friends, all of which he appreciates. W. A. H.

THE LURE OF WORLD-MOVEMENTS.

In the wake of some of the great conventions of movements within the uplift of mankind, and the unity of the church, it occurred to the writer, young people would feel tremendously the call, or pull, of such, world-movements as touch youth. For example, the great Christian Endeavor Convention at Atlantic City reached all Christendom, and brought representatives of Christian work from all lands. About the same time Sunday school workers from lands across the sea, and this land, gathered at San Francisco for a Convention.

These two may suffice for an illustration of modern world-movements that have already gripped our young people and enlisted them, and these movements and thoroughly altruistic in their object, namely, to reach or benefit the whole world irrespective of national or continental boundaries. It seems to me that the young people already hear the call, and respond most nobly. We should regret to have it otherwise.

Think for a moment of our own young people, reared in a land peculiarly placed, in the midst of a citizenship peculiarly free from the trammels of ancient traditions, customs and governments. Think again that these youth who are reared in such a land are already, or will soon become, American citizens, a large per cent. of them trained in the splendid schools of our day, in the schools catching an outlook upon the world that was once impossible, many of them seeking technical training which virtually opens a whole world before them; youth with life still to be lived, and best of all, youth with the spirit of Christ possessing them. It seems that to such young people world-movements should appeal, that they should secure interest, sympathy and devotion.

And again, why should these world-movements grip young people? Because of what the world has laid at their feet, a heritage from the past—the best from past ages, from science, from art, from literature, from law, from, government, is laid at the feet of the young men and women of our day. Possessing such a training and such a heritage, they are mentally fitted for usefulness, and world-movements should appeal to them because of what they can do for the world. If they have received a larger vision, then they know that the youth for whom Christ died are in the world for which Christ died, and that it is little short of a crime for the Christian of our day not to interest himself in the wider movements.

And again, what appeal do these world-movements make to our youth? It must be confessed that secondary motives are something very powerful, that the lure of travel is very influential, that many a young man goes to other lands in order that he may know the joys of travel, and acquaintance with foreign people. Still others are actuated by the lure of opportunities. For example, in China today in educational work, in commerce and manufacturing, are most attractive openings for young men qualified to lead and direct.

Again, the lure of achievement makes a strong appeal. What has been accomplished in recent years, or let us say in the past quarter-century, is so tremendous and astounding that few young people can resist the desire to share in similar achievements. Think of digging a Panama Canal. Fame is assured to men whose brains and practical genius have made the "big ditch possible," and the thought of similar undertakings proves a great incentive in the mind of many another youth.

Who wants to make his life count? Who dares to attempt great things for God? The stories of the bag of gold at the end of the rainbow, of the golden fleece, and many another story of mythology, cannot compare in romance with what the ends of the earth actually and literally lay at the feet of the young men and women of our day. Some of the young people who read this article, if they have the stuff in them, can be placed where they will have untold power in molding nations. They can go as missionaries, and missionaries of the broader type, who while pushing the simple evangel can at the same time push for a larger uplift of humanity. And if there are young people who cannot go as missionaries they can, nevertheless, push along missionary work, and feel the lure of what is now a great world-wide movement. One of the most practical ways to get in touch with what the church is doing in all the world would be to enlist as a Student Volunteer. The Volunteers, as a rule, are people of distinctly consecrated and sacrificing spirit. No Christian Endeavorer, who habitually attends the devotional service and studies the topics, can fail to be enlarged, or to throw his vision far beyond his own national boundaries. There is chance to-day to help roll along the effort for world-wide peace. And so it matters not at what angle we stand, in what direction we look, there is a most splendid call from the world to our young people. In schools and colleges, in our regular church work, let us see to it that our young people have the blessing of sharing in the world call.

COME OVER AND HELP US.

In the spring of 1913, at Ishinomaki, where our church was first organized, we will hold a Quarter-Century Celebration.

In reviewing the history of the development of our church during these twenty-five years we naturally see many places where our mistakes now look amusing to us. But the turning-point in our history is a good time to correct past mistakes, gather new courage, and go forward with greater earnestness.

With a man the first twenty-five years of life is a time of preparation, both along lines of culture and experience, laying the foundation for a really useful life work. Similarly, as a church we have been largely laying foundations during this period. And yet not wholly so, for already one church, that at Azabu, in Tokyo, has grown into an independent, self-supporting church. But while realizing that up to the present our progress has been about like that of a little child as he totters through his first steps, we must now push forward vigorously, relying on the help of God and our kind American sympathizers, and do more really efficient work in helping to build up the kingdom of God in Japan.

And we believe that this coming celebration will give us a great impetus along this line; especially so if, as we are hoping, we may have the presence of several representative people from America and Canada to encourage and advise us as to the future. To this end we have issued a general invitation to our brothers and sisters in those countries who have already helped us so much, to send such representatives for this occasion.

Especially we are hoping and praying for the coming of Dr. Morrill, who has been so closely connected with our work by virtue of his office, that by his wise counsel and encouraging and uplifting work among us for a short time he may lead us into greater zeal and courage, and that by coming into close fellowship with us and securing at close range all the details and needs of our work, its successes and defeats, he may carry back to you such a clear and definite report of the work as will give you all a complete knowledge of what is being done here through your help and influence.

We are all praying that Dr. Morrill may be sent to us, and that with him may come several others to encourage and help us.

PORTSMOUTH LETTER.

On the evening of January 14th the Womans' Missionary Society of Norfolk and Portsmouth, held a union missionary rally at the Portsmouth Church. The first speaker of the evening was Mrs. C. H. Rowland of Franklin, Va., who spoke of the aim of the board of which she is chairman. The board was in session during the day and had adopted plans for the reaching of every woman in the Conference. The next speaker was Mrs. Dennison who came with letters from missionaries at work on the field. She read the letter of Mrs. Watanabe, the native worker of Japan, who is being supported by the Missionary Societies at Franklin, Norfolk, Rosemont and Portsmouth. The principle address of the evening was delivered by Dr. W. H. Denison of Norfolk, who made a strong, forceful and telling plea for the great missionary cause. The congregation was delighted with his address.

The Christian Tide-Water Sunday school Association met with the South Norfolk Church the second Sunday afternoon. The attendance was the best that we have ever had and the interest above the average. All the schools were represented and the reports showed progress. The same officers were elected for another year. Lambert's Point school stood at the head again. They had already captured the banner of the Association at the previous meeting, having gained it three times in succession, so they were simply allowed to wear the honor this time, as another banner had not been provided. It seems to be a difficult thing for any other school to surpass them. They are forging ahead all the time. They are about to overrun their building. They are are talking a new church strongly. They are evidently in need of a new building. Dr. Denison spoke to the Association on the subject of teacher training and his address was very appropriate and timely. He displayed a chart on the subject that was full of rich things for the Sunday school teacher. Many saw the need of training for the Sunday school teacher in a new light. No doubt it will result in the organization of such classes.

Berea (Norfolk, Co.) is looking up and laying her hand to the work with a new vision. A new spirit has taken possession of the people and they are throwing themselves into the work with a purpose to bring things to pass. They raised their Conference money last year easier than ever before. They actually went beyond their assessments and sent more to Conference than they were required to send. For the past quarter there has been a very noticeable increase in the congregations. A new roof has been put on the church recently which cost about $140.00. Not long since the Young Peoples Society had the building repaired. At the last appointment two brethren, K. S. Gammon and L. M. Nichols, were ordained to the office of deacons in the church. The Sunday school under the superintendence of Bro. L. M. Nichols is prospering.

The work in the Christian Churches of Norfolk and Portsmouth has been very encouraging during the month of January. At the Ministers' Conference this morning the real situation was surveyed. All the churches have had splendid attendance at regular services and nearly all have had accessions, Lambert's Point and Memorial Temple being in the lead. Every Sunday school has had a decided increase in average attendance and a splendid increase in new scholars. The Memorial Temple is crowding all available space for the Sunday school and beginning to realize that additional space must be provided. The South Norfolk school is contemplating adding on a new room during the year. Their building is too small for their school and they are feeling that something must be done to meet the needs of the work. We have already mentioned the situation at Lambert's Point. The Berkley church is also contemplating improvements. The Third Church has just added several new rooms in order to take care of the increase in their school. There is evidently a great work to be done among the Christian churches of this vicinity. They have such an opportunity as they have never had before. The field is a great one and the workers on the increase. Truly we need to pray that the Lord of the harvest will send forth laborers into the harvest fields.

Revival services are in progress at the Memorial Temple and the promise is for a splendid meeting. Dr. Denison has made thorough preparation for the meeting and the church is already at work in a telling way. There were several professions yesterday. Since coming into the field he has received over thirty into the church. In the Sunday school there are about one hundred that they are hoping to reach for Christ during the meeting. Pray for the meeting.

At the Christian Ministers Conference this morning, the writer Secretary was requested, to give in the columns of the Sun a monthly summary of the work in this vicinity. This is the beginning.

CONSHOHOCKEN LETTER.

Our new Men's Bible Class had 47 present Sunday and reported an enrollment of 86. On Sunday they gave a Musicales with an audience of about three hundred and fifty. The occasion was presided over by Mr. J. A. McFarland, Vice-President, who gracefully presented the Class President, Mr. Parker S. Williams. Mr. Williams made an easy and effective address, reviewing for the audience the progressive steps and stages that had been taken and passed, in bringing about the movement. The teacher, Mr. L. J. Palmer was unavoidably detained and could not be present. After the program was finished the Men's Bible Class, the Square Deal Bible Class, and possibly two hundred other persons, were served refreshments through the courtesy of the President of the Men's Bible Class.

Congregations Sunday were a little below normal, because of weather conditions.

I spent last week with Rev. F. C. Hall in special services at Locktown, N. J. The roads were very bad in consequence of much rain, so the attendance at church was small until Thursday evening when the audience was large, as also on Friday evening. I was expecting to return this week, but am detained on account of physical indisposition. Brother Hall kindly took me to several of his homes in the surrounding country and they were nice homes occupied and managed by refined and intelligent people. They hold their pastor in high esteem and are liberal in their praises of him. He and his good wife entertained me at the parsonage and were exceedingly kind. While over there I met the widow of Rev. J. F. Hayes who is now over ninety two years old, with mind active and able to move quite well about the house, going up and down the stairway whenever she desires without attention. I also met a sister of Bro. Jacob Lawshe of Suffolk, Va., in her home but did not know until afterwards of the relationship.

On my return home I found a good piano in the Gulph Mills Church, placed there by the new Men's Bible Class, which is an important addition to our church equipment. We are keeping up two prayer meetings per week, one at church and the other in the homes.

M. W. Butler.

Prof. E. T. Hines, Principal of the Jefferson Academy, McLeansville, N. C., delighted the College with a visit recently and made an appropriate address during the C. E. prayermeeting. His patrons are giving him high praise as teacher and disciplinarian.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. J. W. Harrell's Portsmouth Letter is full of interest and inspiration. We are much obliged to him for his fine beginning, and Sun readers will join us in that.

—The evangelistic services being conducted at Elon College by Rev. C. H. Rowland are proving to be of the highest merit and greatest worth. There have been scores of conversions, and reconsecrations, and the church is greatly edified.

—Yes, The Annual is behind time—a month. The house that issued it this year was unavoidably delayed in printing it we are told. But it is out at last. The price is 20 cts. the copy post paid. Order of The Christian Sun, Elon College, N. C.

—Do you want a copy of The Christian Annual for 1913 containing proceedings of the Convention and all our Southern Conferences for 1912, apportionments for 1913, ministerial directory etc.? Send us 20 cts. with your order and the book will be mailed you.

—If you did not happen to read in last week's Sun what our brother F. M. Farrell, Pittsboro, N. C. had to say about our church and the mission cause go back and read it Brother Pastor and see what you think of the indictment this good layman makes against us pastors. This is enough to arouse us.

—Miss Bettie Stephenson, now teaching at Boone, Watauga County, N. C., finds an abundant field for active Christian service and is thoroughly enjoying her work. She yearns for the foreign field and is burdened because of the millions in pagan lands who are dying without Christ and without hope.

—Heartiest congratulations to our hustling, loyal brethren at Liberty, N. C. They have almost finished their handsome brick building and two Sundays ago worshipped in it for the first time. Rev. J. W. Patton is the happy pastor. Be sure to read what he writes about it under "Church News" this week.

—The people of this good State are putting it up to their legislators to enact a six months school law and a compulsory attendance law, and if this same thing is not done the people generally are going to be disappointed, and indignant. "Give the free schools a chance" is the cry throughout the State. If the members of the General Assembly have not found this out they are deaf.

—Under date of Feb. 1, Rev. Warren H. Denison D. D. Norfolk, Va. writes "We are in the midst of a gracious revival here. There have been some fifteen or twenty conversions this week." Which is good news indeed. We carry nothing in these columns with more genuine joy and delight than the report of good and gracious revivals—the information that souls are born into the kingdom.

—North Carolina is largely rural in population. Now look! According to recent statistics, by the United States Bureau of Education, the school term in the towns and cities of the State is up to the average; but the average rural school term in the State—that for the country boys and girls—is the shortest in the whole American Union. Is it any wonder that a demand goes up to our Legislature from all over the State that this shameful inequality shall be eliminated?

—We are under obligations to Rev. B. F. Vaughan, Sect. Centerville, Ohio for a copy each of the Ohio State Christian Association minutes for 1912 and the Miami Christian Conference minutes for the same year. These annuals contain much valuable information as to church and Sunday school work in Ohio and show that our work goes forward in that great State. There is a long list both of Christian churches and Christian ministers in Ohio, and the contributions to missions, education, and other enterprises of our Zion show that our brethren in the West are awake and are pushing forward.

—Letters have come from many sources and quarters expressing thanks and appreciation of our recent editorials on the missionary situation. And we refer to the matter in this way to show that our people are not paralyzed or sleeping with reference to missions. There is no topic about which the people generally feel so deeply and so intensely. The letters received by us indicate a whole pent up volcano of smouldering and potential interest and enthusiasm in the matter of missions, if only some Hercules or Vulcan would arise with the zeal and might to tear away the crest and give vent to the flames.

—The Norfolk-Ledger-Dispatch of recent date carried a splendid view of Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va., and a graphic account of what the institution is doing and has done for Suffolk, concluding with the declaration that Drs. J. E. Rawls, D. L. Harrell and David L. Rawls were the factors in the creation and maintenance of this public enterprise which is a blessing to Suffolk and to peoples near by. We are not surprised at the great success and wonderful development of any institution which has at its head, and as its founders, such splendid and efficient Christian gentlemen. There would be wonder indeed if the institution in such hands did not prosper and flourish. Our congratulations, gentlemen and good friends, on the good work for the suffering of humanity that you are engaged in.

—Rev. H. Russell Clem, and wife, Springfield, Ohio, have sent us in exceedingly neat and attractive form a leaflet with New Year Mottoes, (their new year resolutions we presume) which are as follows:

Prov. 4:23. "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."

Ps. 116:9. "I will walk before the Lord."

Jno. 15:7. "If you abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

Phi. 4:13. "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me."

Rom. 8:28. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God."

II Tim. 2:15. "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God."

Notes and Personals.

—Our always agreeable and delightful brother, Rev. J. H. Barney, Clearville, Pa. writes "I am real glad you will soon be in our own Publishing House. Hurrah for the sunny South! Say, how can a preacher be loyal and not take and read his denominational paper and support the church enterprise?" Brother Barney, he can't. And, by the way, if there is a minister in the Southern Christian Convention who does not take and read to some extent at least The Christian Sun we do not know who he is. For which encouraging fact we are profoundly grateful. As Ben Franklin said in the Convention of colonial patriots when they were discussing the matter of freedom and self-government here in America "We must stand together, or we will hang separately." And it is good for any company of loyal souls to keep before them that truth.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The new "Publishing House," located at Elon College, and nearing completion, is the youngest enterprise of the Southern Christian Convention's but it ought not to be the least in years to come. If any church institution has a chance to do business in a business way, it is a printing House. There is hardly a field in which so much progress has been made as in printing. Great mills are engaged in paper making. Great forests are cut away for the pulp mills. Great foundries are making type. Great shops are building machines of all sorts and sizes. An army of men march daily to the printshops. Many gross of pencils are worn out daily, like I am wearing this one out, on paper. Great Dailies go out of great cities in car load and sometimes in train-load lots. Tons and tons of magazines are sent out monthly. Books by the hundreds of thousands come from the press every year. Circulars, Bill heads, Bills, notices, job-work in many forms, drop from the presses, like autumn leaves, through every hour of the day. No man can tell us how many tons of paper, how many gallons of ink, how many pounds of type metal are used every day in printing Houses. But one thing is sure, and that is that the printing business is on the increase and will continue to increase year by year.

Now, as to a printing House. It does not work with a limited constituency like a Religious paper. Its field is the limit of its capacity to do printing neatly, artistically, promptly, reasonably. Nobody cares where the work is done so it is done correctly and on time. Business Houses, Railroads, Mills, Factories, Schools, Professional men, authors, counties, all have printing done. The House that can win the business and hold it can keep busy. There is no "trust" in printing. There is no bar to good work. There is no corner in ink work. There is no sentiment to cold type. Its warfare is mightier than shot and shell. The click of type is yet to drown the roar of the cannon, and the news paper will be mightier than the flags of war. The doom of strife is reeled off from the cylinders of the printing press. The heat in hot tanks of type metal must some day warm a frozen world; and all your Gibaltars must yield to the printing House. It is a great business—this printing business. There never was such a good time to start a "Publishing House." The machinery was never so near perfect. The business was never so easy to get, and there was never so much of it. The door is open. The field is wide. The day is propitious. And here is wishing the new "Publishing House" a sure and profitable business from the start, and a future of great usefulness in the religious purpose and motive at the center of the undertaking. Editor Atkinson, the good Board, the capable manager, Montgomery, and the Christian Sun are all embraced in my congratulations and best wishes that they may open business in the very month in which George Washington was born.

NORFOLK LETTER.

To be fully aware of all the misery and wretchedness of life, and still be hopeful, to recognize the weaknesses and follies of one's fellows, and still trust and love them, to walk along the highway, knowing it to be hedged around by snares and pitfalls, yet forging firmly and confidently onward, to cast one's self with unstinted ardor into the battle for the right, and yet to avoid "hobbies" and extremes, to fight for temperance temperately, to avoid stirring up strife in the advocacy of peace, to be a specialist in one line of effort and be yet broad enough to avoid "boring" our friends by constantly talking "shop," and finally, to be able to do well the strenuous work of life and still possess our souls in calmness, gentleness and serenity, and to go sweetly and modestly upon our way; such verily and truly, is a result worth toiling a lifetime to achieve.

Balance, poise, how difficult are these to achieve, and yet they form two of the most beautiful elements in a well-rounded, harmoniously developed character.

The world is full of "lop-sided people.

Not all the monomaniacs are in the asylums.

People of an intense temperament need to be especially upon guard, lest, even in their efforts to do good they become narrow and self-centered in all their activities.

There be those who make their very "goodness" so prominent that it becomes nauseating.

If I am going to love you at all, I shall do so because you are YOU, and not because of any of your pet schemes or "isms."

He who really knows life; who has really "lived" and who comprehends something of the vastness of the mighty problems which confront the human race with eternal insistence, will view with a certain good-natured cynicism and tolerant scepticism and declarations of those mercurial ones who declare that they have these problems "about" solved.

Sisyphus, doomed to evermore roll his stone up the mountain; who is he but the human race, struggling with its moral, political and social enigmas?

Will these enigmas ever be solved?

Not in my day.

Nor in yours, my child.

Nor yet in far-away day that your great-great-grandchildren shall see will the world-old forces of confusion and wrong be utterly abated.

Where then, are the "brilliant measures" and the "paramount issues" in the heated and sometimes unbrotherly advocacy of which we vex our souls and forget to be kind and gentle?

"Our little systems have their day,

They have their day and cease to be,

They are but broken lights of thee,

And thou, O Lord, art more than they.'

What then? shall we give up the battle? By no manner of means, only let us remember that, after all, the important thing about the conflict is the development which we personally get out of it, and the opportunity which it affords for such an exhibition of moral courage as will inspire our fainter, weaker brother to forge onward toward the goal who might otherwise perish by the wayside.

Let us then, not carry the world too heavily upon our shoulders. In the midst of pressing activities let us try to find time for relaxation and repose, so that we may be just good, lovable, "human beings."

Henry Spencer Booth.

ENDEAVOR DAY MESSAGE.

Greetings From President Clark to Society Members.

"It seems but yesterday since those fifty young people of Williston Church came to see me in my study, in Portland, to see if we should form a society of Christian Endeavor. It was a bitter cold, blustering night in February, and I remember thinking that the weather was about as unpropitious as it well could be. The young ones came to tea, and the older ones, headed by a good friend, Mr. Pennell, with his large class of young men, came later in the evening.

"The constitution was brought out from the pastor's desk, where it was placed after a good deal of labor and prayer had been expended upon it, and read to the young people. I was surprised that so many were willing to sign it as active members, even though it contained the 'iron-clad' pledge. I was still more surprised and delighted to find that they kept it, and yet more surprised to find that this plan was adapted to other churches, and that a general desire was developed to know more about it.

"The first meeting under the new constitution was an unexpected success. In the first consecration meeting I watched anxiously, and with many fears. The presence of God's Spirit was manifestly with us, and while the young people of Williston Church visibly grew in grace from week to week, we also heard the some good news from Mr. Dickinson's church (the Second Parish in Portland), where a society was soon established, and from many others.

"So you see what a set of doubters we were at the beginning, and how little credit is due to any one for the very humble experiment which was made in that Portland church.

"Pleasant as it is, however, to dwell upon the past, on this our birthday, it is more important to think of the present. The society has come, apparently, to stay. It has come, we believe, not for the will of man, but because God has a use for it. It remains for us to guard it from danger, and to keep it in its rightful place, as a humble helper of the church.

"If this were merely a man-made agency we should have little hope for its doing much permanent good. If, as we all believe, and as its history proves, men have had very little to do with starting it, and God has used it as one means, in modern days, for training young Christians, we may believe that we are as yet only on the threshold of its history. On this account, if there are untold possibilities of good in the future, it is all the more necessary that we should be modest and cautious, and yet aggressive and earnest to use every opportunity which God gives us."

CONSECRATION MEETING.

C. E. Topic, Feb. 9—"The Ideal Christian. II. His Zeal: 2 Cor. 6:1-10.

The leader may begin by giving several examples of zeal in various kinds of work: the zeal of a poet, an artist, a writer a reformer, a politician. Christian zeal is interest, warmth, fire, consecrated to Christ's cause. Point out that Christian zeal with the biggest thing in life: the formation of character, the salvation of men, the redemption of town, city, country, and the world. The leader may suggest that zeal is quickened by communion with Christ and by contemplation of His will. Then he may briefly point out that zeal is transmittable: one zealous man makes others zealous, further, to accomplish anything in the work of the Kingdom we must inspire zeal. One can do nothing with men so long as they remain cold, but molten metal fits into any mould.

Hints for This Meeting.

Plan your meeting carefully; a really good meeting never "just happens."

Have a program, but do not hesitate to depart from it for any good reason.

Open this meeting with silent prayer while the members are standing; follow the Lord's prayer.

Have the secretary call the roll immediately following the opening exercises: let each one respond when name is called as part of the program assigned, such as talks, special music, recitations and illustrations.

Discussion Topics.

Three members tell how zeal helps a Christian.

Three members tell how a Christian's zeal helps other Christians.

Three members tell how a Christian's zeal helps people who are not Christians.

Three members tell of Bible women whose zeal carried them into greater activity.

Three members tell of Christian persons that you know whose zeal carried them into greater usefulness.

By what should our zeal be guided, by God's word or the opinion of men or our feelings.

Zeal and Success.

Success is carrying out our plans—if they are worthy of carrying out.

Success is to be measured by the whole life.

May fail in life because they have not learned to do one thing well.

A man is sure to fail if he tries to succeed in his own strength. God is the only success.

No one succeeds whose success keeps others from succeeding.

There are many men whose first success, being mere chance, is never followed by a second.

Half of success is character. Be true, helpful, and humble, and men will push you up.

No estimate of success is complete that does not count in heaven.

Good cheer is a mortgage on success. A whiner seldom succeeds.

Quotations.

Emerson wrote: "Every good and commanding movement in the annals of the world is the triumph of enthusiasm. Nothing great was ever accomplished without it." (Give one example of a cause pushed with zeal to success.)

Charles Kingsley wrote, "People smile at the enthusiasm of youth, that enthusiasm which they themselves secretly look back at with a sigh, perhaps unconscious that it is partly their own fault that they have ever lost it." (Why do people lose enthusiasm, and how may they retain it ever fresh?)

Dr. Bonar tells of a dream he had. He dreamed that he was dead, and the angels weighed his zeal. They analyzed it, and found that fourteen parts were pure selfishness, fifteen parts sectarianism, twenty-two parts ambition, twenty-three parts love for man, and twenty-six parts love for God. When he awoke he was ready for a new consecration.

RAINBOW LESSON.

Notes for S. S. Feb. 9. "God's Covenant With Noah. Text: Gen. 9:8-17.

Time.—The time of the beginning of the race under Noah.

Place.—Unknown.

Persons.—God, Noah, and family.

Golden Text.—I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.—Gen. 9: 13.

Leading Thought.—The word of the Lord is sure.

The purpose of this lesson is to show (1) how the flood ended, (2) how Noah worshiped when he came from the ark, (3) how God established the covenant of the rainbow, a covenant that is a pledge of his mercy and of his faithfulness.

The waters were prevailing. The flood was at its highest. The destruction designed had been accomplished. Noah and they that were with him were afloat in the ark. Such were the conditions as our study ended last Sunday. Our lesson today continues the story, concluding with the covenant of the rainbow..

The rains ceased: wind arose, and the waters began to subside. The record states that the ark rested "upon the mountain of Ararat," This is the name of a considerable region, a lofty tableland in northern Armenia. From it rises several snow-capped peaks, but it is not probable that the ark stranded upon one of these, but rather that it settled at such altitude. Noah and family were shut in the ark. A summing up of the days numbered in giving details brings the time to 365 days; a comparison of Gen. 7:11 with 8:14 makes it ten days more than a year. We do not fully understand the mode of reckoning used by the chronologist, hence can settle upon only a rough estimate of the time. The important point is, that as soon as it was safe for Noah to be released, "God remembered Noah," and bade him come forth.

Illustrations.

The Rainbow Token.—Heathen poetry and mythology echo this promise of the rainbow. Homer in the Illiad calls the rainbow a sign. The Latin poets Virgil and Ovid, name the rainbow Iris, the messenger of the gods. Ancient Germans fancied the bow a bridge by which the gods passed from heaven to earth, and Indians had a similar tradition.

Where to find the Rainbow.—A friend of mine yesterday, when he was told there was a rainbow, looked for it in the direction of the sun. He evidently did not know better. God never puts rainbows in the direction of the light. There is no need of them so long as you can see the sun shining so gloriously as it did yesterday afternoon. It is when you have to look at the cloud that you want a rainbow. Thus you will always find that if the sun is in the east the rainbow is in the west. Hence the old song says—

The rainbow in the morning
Is the shepherd's warning:
The rainbow at night

Is the shepherd's delight.—D. Davies.

Question Review.

1. Who of you remember the rain we had—? (Mention the most recent heavy rain.)

1 remember I heard a little boy say, "It's never going to stop raining."

2. Was there really any danger that the rain would not cease?

3. Why are you so sure there will not be another Flood such as there was in the time of Noah?

4. To whom did God make this promise?

5. With whom besides Noah, did God say he made this covenant? ("Every living creature.")

6. When men draw up a covenant of agreement now, what must they do to make it binding? (Sign their names.)

7. How did God sign his covenant with Noah?

8. How many of you have ever seen God's rainbow signature?

Let us all be on the lookout, and see who will be the first to see a rainbow this year. When you have seen one, be sure and tell me of it, by phone, or next Sunday.—Leonard.

WHAT MISSIONS MEAN TO ME.

The work of missions, whether at home or abroad, means to me the Church obeying her Lord.

This is the great work that demands hearty support from all Christians. May we not say that interest in the work, and financial support of it, are the evidences of sincere Christian profession?

Active interest in Mission work is necessary to keep the individual Christian, as well as the individual church, from becoming selfish. Is it not evidence of some grievous lack that so many people in our Christian countries are neither interested in, nor identified with, the church?

This condition exists in far too many places, but it should not excuse the church or churches so situated from taking the wider outlook that includes the whole world, nor from contributing generously to carry the gospel to the multitudes yet in ignorance of Christ's mission to the world.

Do we remember that we should be responsible for the evangelization of a million of the unsaved, if we are to do our duty, in connection with the other denominations of Christians?

Then we ought to give far more generously than we have yet done for this work. Measuring up to our responsibility and privileges, we ought greatly to increase our Foreign Mission offering, making it sufficiently large to wipe out the present deficit, and furnish funds sufficient for the support of all our Foreign workers, and also enough that it may be enlarged. If we all, as members of our denomination, realize the full force and importance of the work, we would do it, for we are able to do it.

GREETINGS FROM ACROSS THE SEA.

I send greetings to my sisters in the Lord. From a small child, I went to Sunday school and was myself led to Salvation. Knowing deeply about Christ's salvation as I grew older and received grace. I felt, that though I was happy, I must try to work for the salvation of my many friends. I earnestly prayed about this. God has given to such an one as me, seven or eight places in which to work. During the long time of 22 years, I had five great troubles and temptations. One was by fire; once a robber entered the house. Again a flood came. My beloved husband became a consumptive and after eleven years died. The last was such a grief as man may not tell or others may not know. One must yield to a higher power and every day give thanks.

Lately, I received such grace as to work in Akabane in evangelism. In a thread factory there I often spoke of salvation for one year. Also I visited the sick in the factory boarding house. I had many consultations with the girls and I tried to comfort them with Christian love. It was most happy work for me. It was only a small result, but these girls repented of their sins.

God, having called me to Jicou-gawa to live, just now I am in Ihinomahi. I am meeting, with gladness, acquaintances whom I have not seen for 20 years. It gives grace to pray with the Christians. Twenty years ago, my husband worked gladly at Ihinomaki. I wish to work in the same spirit. Pray that God will bless my weak work. Also, tho' I have not met you, I will every day pray for God's grace upon you. Also my other request is that some of the women may enter God's kingdom. I shall be glad to hear of your work and prosperity.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way
and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-eight years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 100 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

Wicker—Wilkie.

Dec. 4th, at 7.30 P. M. Zion Christian church was the scene of a beautiful wedding, the contracting parties being Mr. John McFarland Wicker and Mrs. Minnie E. Wilkie, both of Lee county, N. C. The ceremony was performed by their pastor, Rev. G. R. Underwood, in the presence of relatives and friends.

The church was artistically decorated for the occasion with ferns, holly and mistletoe, the red and green color scheme being carried out. Holly was profusely banked about the altar. In front was a large arch from which hung a large white bell and at the head of each aisle was a smaller arch from which was suspended a smaller red bell.

While the wedding march was being rendered by Miss Gladys Bryant the party entered in the following order: Little Misses Laura and Lutie Wicker who swung open the gates that admitted the party to the altar; next the bridesmaids, Miss Roberta Womble and Miss Alma Wicker. They came down each into aisle and crossed over in front of the large arch to the opposite side. Then came the groomsmen, Mr. Matthew D. Wicker and Mr. Alton Wicker, they, too, coming down either aisle and crossing to the opposite side of the altar. Then came the bride down the left aisle leaning on the arm of the maid of honor, Miss Ida Belle Wicker, sister of the groom, and at the same time the groom came down the right aisle accompanied by his best man, Mr. William McIver, brother of the bride. They met in front of the altar beneath the large arch and were there made one.

Immediately after the ceremony the bride and groom with the attendants, also a number of invited guests, drove to the home of the groom's mother, Mrs. Anabelle Wicker, where a reception was given.

The presents were many, beautiful and valuable.

Hurley Kilby Saunders, son of Solomon J. and Zora Saunders was born in Nansemond Co., Va., August 5 1887, and died December 29, 1912, aged 25 years 4 mos. and 24 days. He was a bright boy of good morals and united with Oakland Christian church about eight or ten years ago. His father died in June 1909. After his father's death he took charge of the home affairs and looked after the welfare of his mother with devotion and fidelity. A little over a year ago he was married to Miss Chapman of Isle of Wight Co., Va. Several months ago his health began to fail, and the end came peacefully on the above mentioned date. He died trusting in his Saviour. He leaves a mother, wife and one child. The funeral services were conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. H. H. Butler, a life-long friend of the family. His body was laid to rest in the family semetery to wait the resurrection morn. May the Father bless and comfort the bereaved family in this dark hour.

Mrs. A. G. Higgins, was born Sept. 1, 1838, in Novo Scotia, and grew up to womanhood in that country, married and had two daughters, both of whom are now living, one in Mass. and the other in Cal. She lost her first husband, and married Mr. A. G. Higgins, and came to Va., in March 1884. They soon located at Dendron, Va., and Mr. Higgins, was in the employment of the S & S Lumber Co. for a great many years. When the Dendron Christian Church was organized Mr. and Mrs. Higgins, came in as charter members, and have been loyal to the church and to the Master's work all the while. Early last Spring Brother and sister Higgins, moved to Berkley, Va., and a few months before Christmas sister Higgins came back to Dendron to visit her daughter Mrs. W. S. Barrett. She was in feeble health and continued to weaken and finally passed out to the spirit realm Dec. 28, 1912. She was buried Dec. 30, 1912, at Spring Hill Christian Church, services conducted by the writer her pastor assisted by Rev. Mr. Heath, the M. E. pastor of Dendron, and Rev. Mr. Blair, pastor of the Baptist church of Dendron. Sister Higgins, was a true, and kind hearted woman, and it was always a pleasure to her pastor to visit the home. she was so kind and mother like we feel that one of our best friends is gone. She leaves to mourn their loss two children by her last husband, Mrs. W. S. Barrett, and Mr. A. S. Higgins, both of whom are highly respected and are very useful in society and church, her husband and a host of friends. We shall miss the dear sister but as she was ready we feel she is now in the realm of the blest. May God bless the children and the dear husband and her many friends C. C. Jones.

Dear Children and Friends:

I am very glad to say that our sick ones are getting on nicely. Mary Webster is up now.

Rev. P. T. Klapp paid us a short visit this week, also Rufus P. King, of the Friends' church. "Uncle" Rufus spent Saturday night with us and delighted the children with some good humorous stories. He is very fond of cows, and has given the institution five or six; and as I make out the report for this week I have a letter from him which states that he has another one for us if we would accept. That is easy to decide. Of course we will accept, with thanks.

I am sending letters to all the Sunday schools asking them to consider, those who are not already doing so, the matter of giving one collection a month as a Monthly S. S. Offering for the support of the institution. I am very glad to have enrolled some new ones already; and, I hope others will allow me this happy privilege. This will help pay our bills and meet current expenses.

Yours for the best interest of the institution,

Dear Children and Friends:

I am sorry you were disappointed by last week's report, but it is published, will clear that up. Now it is useless for me to ask you how you felt about it for I know already: just as I feel when you don't write.

Last week there came to us, by express, thirty copies of song books: "Jubilant Praises," as a gift from the citizens Bible Class at Elon College. Some time ago Dr. Harper, who is teacher of the class, came over and was with us in our Sunday afternoon services and saw how we were trying to sing from three books. So he was very sympathetic and as a result we have plenty of books. Thank you, very much, Doctor. At this same time Dr. J. J. Summerbell of Dayton, O. was with us and gave us a very impressive talk. Now, I think if our friends could happen here and see how badly we need the water and sewerage they would present the matter to their people and would begin to respond in a way that would mean for the work to be done at once. We have about $250.00 of this on hand, and $34.00 in material but we don't want to begin till we can see our way out.

We have received, this week, six more cans of fruit from the Ladies' Aid Society at Bethlehem. This makes twenty-five cans this society has sent; and, I can assure them every can is appreciated. Some time in passing come over and look into our storage room and see how good people have helped us in this way.

I hope you will notice the splendid plan suggested by Catherine and Baird Moffitts and tell us what you think of it. I think it is fine.

With best wishes for the work, I am,
 Uncle Emory.

Wadley, Ala., Jan. 27, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

Mother and I have planned to go to Grand Father Stephenson's while father was away this time but the weather was so bad we could not go. We are having just lots of rain and it is warm like spring time.

Enclosed is my dime for January.

Dwight Hillis Lankford.

Too bad you were disappointed, for the boys like to visit Grandfather.

We were glad to have our Alabama cousins remember us.

Asheboro, N. C. Jan. 26, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

It has been a long time since I sent any money to the Orphanage so sister and I send our little offerings. Santa Clause was mighty good to us. He brought me a radiotelegraph that works a little bit like a magic lantern. It is an electric machine and enlarges a post card to six feet wide.

A little missionary society of the Presbyterian church here gave mite boxes to a few children and they got over $19.00 last year. How do you think it would do for you to send out mite boxes to children to get money for the Orphanage? Nearly all of us can save up a few nickles this way.

Your niece and nephew.

Catherine and Baird Moffitt.

Thank you for this nice letter; and, the suggestion is good. It may be we will get up something of this kind. Come again.

VALLEY LETTER.

Since my last letter to The Sun I have finished the revival meeting at Linville, held a meeting at New Hope, and assisted Rev. W. T. Walters in a meeting at Winchester.

The meeting at Linville resulted in six conversions and five accessions to the church. At New Hope there was one conversion.

My stay with Bro. Walters in Winchester was very pleasant to me and I trust profitable to all. They are a sociable, loyal, and appreciative people. Bro. Walters is held in the highest esteem not only by our own people, but by the people of the town. Our church and cause there are fast winning recognition, and growing in favor with the people. The church is somewhat handicapped by being under a burden of debt. The cause is worthy, and our people should rally to the rescue and remove the debt as rapidly as possible. Some interest was manifested in the meeting, and I suppose Bro. Walters will give Sun readers an account of same.

Don't Fool With Wood Shingles

Buy STEEL Shingles

They Cost Less, Last Longer, Are Easier to Put On and Are Fireproof

This is the Age of Steel. Wood shingles have gone out of date. Cost too much.

Too much bother to put on. Rot out in a few years. And they multiply by 10 the danger of fire. Thoughtful men are nailing STEEL Shingles right over their old wooden roofs.

And those putting up new buildings are likewise careful to choose STEEL SHINGLES.

Edwards STEEL Shingles

come in big sheets of 100 shingles or more. Don't have to put them on one at a time like wood shingles. Just nail the whole sheet right over old roof or on sheathing. No extras, no painting, no tools needed. And money can't buy a more handsome roof.

Absolutely Rust-Proof

Don't judge Edwards Steel Shingles by common galvanized iron roofing—the kind that rusts. We have invented a method that absolutely prevents rust from getting a foothold, as 100,000 delighted owners of Edwards Roofs have found. It's the famous Edwards Tightcote Process.

Protection From Fire

Don't take chances of fire from defective chimneys, flying sparks and lightning. Roof your buildings with these STEEL Shingles and make them safe. Remember, nine out of every ten fires start with the roof. We specifically guarantee every Edwards Steel Shingle Roof against lightning. This guaranty is by a $10,000 Cash Bond.

Write for Special Factory Prices—Freight Prepaid

We sell direct from factory to user, thus saving you 40%. And our business is so big that we cut our profit-per-sale to about half the maker's usual profit. And we pay the freight. Amazing as it may seem, these STEEL Shingles actually cost LESS than wood shingles.

Send postal note for our latest Roofing Book No. 1371 and Special Factory Prices. Give size of roof, if you can.

Ask your doctor how often he prescribes an alcoholic stimulant for children. He will probably say, "Very, very rarely." Ask him how often he prescribes a tonic for them. He will probably answer, "Very, very frequently." Then ask him about Ayer's non-alcoholic Sarsaparilla as a tonic for the young.

BEGINNING THE DAY WITH GOD.

Every day should be commenced with God and upon the knees. He begins the day unwisely who leaves his chamber without a secret conference with his Heavenly Father. The true Christian goes to his closet both for his panoply and his "rations" for the day's march and its inevitable conflicts. As the Oriental traveler sets out for the sultry journey by loading up his camel under the palm tree's shade, and by filling his flagons from the cool fountains that sparkle at its roots, so doth God's wayfarer draw his fresh supply from the unexhausted spring. Morning is the golden time for devotion. The mercies of the night provoke to thankfulness. The buoyant heart that is in love with God makes his early flight, like the lark, toward the gates of heaven. Gratitude, faith, dependent trust, all prompt to early interviews with him who, never slumbering himself, waits on his throne for our morning orisons. We all remember Bunyan's beautiful description of his pilgrim's lodging over night in the "Chamber of Peace," which looked toward the sunrising, and at daybreak he "awoke and sang." If stony Egyptian Memnon made music when the first rays kindled on his flinty brow, a devout heart should not be mute when God causes the outgoings of his mornings to rejoice. No pressure of business nor household duties should crowd out prayer.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

ON BEING A BLESSING.

(I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing. Gen. 12:2. Golden Text for Sunday, Feb. 16.)

The words were spoken to Abraham nearly two thousand years before our Christian Era began. And now when almost four thousand years have passed we know that the words were a promise which has been made good in every particular. Abraham was truly blessed, his name is mightier than that of monarchs, and his life, with its example of unequalled faith, is yet a blessing to all who read of him and know his character.

It is given to few men indeed to live in history four hundred years, much less four thousand. When you consider the monumental characters of history you must include Abraham. He was the man of faith. He was the altar-builder. You can trace the course and career of Abraham by the altars he built, just as you can trace the life of Moses by the laws he enacted, or that of David by the battles he fought, and that of our Savior by the miracles He wrought. You can't think of Abraham without thinking of an altar to Jehovah. He believed in worship as a part of his daily life. Whenever and whenever he pitched his tent he built an altar. Abraham believed with all his great soul in the power and personality of Jehovah, and he trusted Him fully and implicitly to lead, guide and sustain him.

Such are the men who redeem history and make its pages burn with human interest, the men who have convictions, look to the future and trust in God.

Would you be blessed? Build an altar. Have a stated time and place for private, personal or family devotions. Would you be great and have your name live after you are gone? Remember Abraham; and like him build an altar. Pour out to Jehovah the desires and aspirations of your heart. In your travels, trials, temptations, bow down before God and worship Him. He is the source of all true greatness, the giver of all permanent peace, progress and power. Would you be a blessing to those about you and to others yet to come? Then keep up the family altar; keep the heart warm by the glow of the altar fire, by daily and constant devotion to Jehovah. Abraham will be great and will be a blessing as long as time lasts because in all his adventures, in all his wanderings, in all his undertakings he loved and trusted God with great simplicity and sincerity of heart and purpose.

THE MISSIONARY SITUATION.

Rev. J. W. Horrell, Portsmouth, Va., gets at the heart of the matter of the missionary situation in his article elsewhere in The Sun this week. His position is that we have been just playing at the matter of missions. This matter of missions should be the very largest and the most vital one to consider, talk about, and pray over in all our conferences, church assemblies and conventions, and we make it secondary, if we consider it at all. We pastors may as well take the blame of this matter now as later: for the blame is at our door: We have not talked, perched practised and prayed missions enough. We believe every pastor in the Southern Christian Convention will have to plead guilty to having neglected, in their pulpits, and in their private ministrations, the vital subject of missions. Almost any one of our Conferences can give in any year quite as much as all our Conference give for missions and not be the poorer but the richer for the effort. The Christian church must become missionary if it is to go forward and not backwards.

God can't prosper a non-missionary church and keep His word.

We have fine and friendly letters, and of the most tender and fraternal kind from Dr. M. T. Morrill, Foreign Mission Secretary, Dr. O. W. Powers, Home Mission Secretary, and Dr. W. H. Denison of the Mission Board assuring us that all is being done that they know how to do to develop the missionary situation amongst us and awaken a missionary conscience in our churches; that the present embarrassing situation, financially speaking, all came about from projecting a work years ago larger than our income has justified. Which being true it behooves us to make the income larger, increase our missionary zeal, and redouble our efforts in behalf of the biggest and best issue amongst us.

We of the Christian church need 1st. To study, talk and preach more about missions,

2nd. Pray more for missions, and then we will,

3rd. Give more to missions.

To this end may God help us, for the need is great and the matter is vital.

THE IDEA WAS HORRIBLE.

Some men stop strong drink from one cause; some from another, and others never stop at all. I read of a man the other day that stopped for a singular cause, and decided afterwards that it would have been horrible indeed if he had not stopped just when he did.

He was a westerner. The turning point was thirty-five years ago. The place was a hotel in Denver. The persons interested were two—two men out on business and by chance thrown in each others company in the lobby of the hotel after supper. "Let's have a little of something to drink brought in. I'm thirsty," bantered No. 1. "Not tonight for me. I am out now buying government land at one dollar and a quarter per acre, and am saving every cent to put into the project. By the way, instead of setting 'em up, buy a couple of acres of land with the money you would spend for the two bottles," challenged No. 2. "Well now I hadn't planned to go into business just yet, but if a fellow can start in on two dollars and a half, the price of one evening's drink, here is to you," and down went the two and a half. "Well sir," continues No. 1. "My newly made friend went out next morning and bought me two acres of land. What do you think! Those two acres of land today are right in the middle of a flourishing town and, Sir, if I had taken that drink that night I would have swallowed a city block, a grocery store, an apothecary's, four lawyers' offices and the biggest dry goods store in town."

Which would have been swallowing some; but many a man has swallowed more than that in one evening's drinking, has swallowed his house and home, the comfort and protection of his wife and children, the savings of a lifetime, and all the prospects for happiness and joy in this life and in that to come. The idea was horrible.

THE WHY OF HIS EFFORTS.

Those who have been reading the papers recently know that the Congress of the United States now has under consideration, and the House has already passed by a wholesome majority the Webb interstate liquor shipment bill. This bill bears the name of our good congressman Yates Webb from the ninth North Carolina district and provides that liquor shipped into prohibition territory shall be subject to the laws governing the handling and sale of liquor in such territory. It is simply a prop to prohibition, does not prevent liquor being shipped into dry territory, but does make it subject to law when so shipped.

Mr. Webb has made a valiant fight for his bill in the House of which he is a member, and has won.

Here is a bit of history that may help to an understanding of Mr. Webb's position. In the North Carolina district which he represents in Congress is historic King's Mountain, from whose summit one can get a view of the surrounding country far and wide. Now read what Mr. Webb said in Congress when urging the passage of his bill:

"Ten years ago, or a little more, I stood yonder on historic King's Mountain, and I saw the smoke of thirty-eight government distilleries rising toward heaven. I saw no macadamized roads; scarcely a church of any note or dignity in the entire country; scarcely a school-house where our boys and girls might obtain even the rudiments of an education. I saw saloons throughout the length and breadth of Gaston County. There were only two or three factories giving employment to two or three hundred people. Two years ago I went back, about ten years after the people had driven out this curse. I found macadamized roads in almost every part of the county; I saw magnificent churches of every denomination; I found school-houses in every district of that county, where boys and girls might obtain an education to fit them for their duty in any station. There was not the smoke of a single brewery, but instead of the smoke of the thirty-eight government distilleries, I saw ascending to the glory of God in business the smoke of forty-three of the largest cotton factories in the United States of America. Which is best—the school-house or the doggery, the cotton factory, or the brewery? That which is destroying and humbling humanity, or that which is raising it up for the glory of God and the good of the State."

HOW THE SKEPTIC REASONS.

In order to believe, or make believe, that one doubts God's being, His love and His mercy one must resort to the most crude and careless sort of reasoning. The small boy reasoned that there was no Santa Claus because he saw so many of him in the store windows just before Christmas.

The argument for our Heavenly Father's goodness, mercy, lovingkindness is so strong, so powerful, so unusually apparent that the only way to weaken it is to say that it is so abundant that it does not exist at all.

God's goodness is displayed round about us everywhere and all the time. The only way to argue its absence is to acknowledge its great abundance.

NOW READY.

By the time this issue of The Sun reaches our readers we will be ready, nothing unforeseen hinders, to do the very neatest and best sort of job work and general printing in our own Publishing House, now being supplied with the very best and latest printing equipment and supplies. Which means, dear readers, if you will send us your job work we will do our best for you and will greatly appreciate your patronage. All we ask is a trial. Send us some work and see. We know Sun readers will have an abundance of printing done, letter heads, envelopes, invoices, notices, circulars and the like. In having your work done remember us. Our largest press has not yet been installed and it will be some two weeks yet before The Sun will be published at our own plant. But our small presses are installed and we are ready to serve.

THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The Southern Christian Publishing House is almost complete and in a few days all the machinery will be in place. From the first the Company has planned to build, and equip the plant in such a manner as to be able to do the very best newspaper and job printing. The machinery, presses, cutter, folder, linotype machine, engines and other equipments have been selected with great care so as to produce the best quality of printing.

The employment of an experienced printer of twenty-five years success in the business as foreman was the next step in preparing to do high grade work. Under the personal direction of Mr. C. W. Montgomery, of Troy, Ohio, all the work will be done by those whom he may select because of their fitness in their respective positions.

As soon as possible The Christian Sun, The Elon College Weekly, the Elon College Catalogues, and Bulletins will be printed from this house.

Those desiring high grade printing, such as letter heads, bill heads, wedding invitations (engraved), visiting cards, programs, etc., etc., can get the very best work done here on short notice.

Let the friends of the enterprise patronize the House by sending all their job work here, and the quality of the stationery that they will use thereafter will make other friends and make the business grow upon merits.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The protracted meeting closed on Thursday evening, with nearly one hundred reclamations and professions, and the church wonderfully revived spiritually. Brother Rowland spoke on fourteen different occasions, but his messages were ever the same simple, truthful gospel and carried conviction to all who heard. We shall now settle down to our routine work, better and happier for his coming amongst us.

Wedding bells rang in our town Sunday, when L. R. Tuttle and Miss Glenn, the latter a sister of Mrs. C. E. Mason of our village, were united in wedlock, with Uncle Wellons officiating.

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Walker, Union Ridge, N. C., visited their sister, Mrs. Harper, Saturday and Sunday. Mr. Walker graduated from Elon in the class of 1911.

Prof. Campbell was happy Sunday in visits from his Valley-Virginia friends, Prof. Flick of the Greensboro City Schools, and Captain Spiker of theingham School, Mebane, N. C.

Mrs. T. A. Moffitt, Ramseur, N. C., Mrs. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va., and Mrs. P. D. Teague, Liberty, N. C., visited their children of the student body recently, we are always glad to welcome our patrons.

Mr. Albert B. Palmer, Port Republic, Va., and a student of former days, visited his Alma Mater this week. He had been down to Raleigh to stand the law examination before the Supreme Court. He was a successful candidate and is to locate in Concord, N. C.

Dr. W. C. Wicker has been chosen to represent the Sunday school forces of the American Christian Convention in the World's Sunday school Convention to be held in Zurich, Switzerland, in July and will attend.

Dr. Atkinson preached an able, congenial, helpful sermon Sunday on our kinship to Christ. It was a very appropriate discourse with which to follow the revival services just concluded.

Dr. Child is now in Menton, France, enjoying the beauty of scenery and climate there, and slowly regaining his strength. He fears that his annual visit to the College will have to be postponed till next year, for which we are truly sorry.

Dr. W. G. Sargent, Providence, R. I., and Educational Secretary of the American Christian Convention, is to visit the College in May and deliver a course of lectures on the Reformation.

The College Charter has just been amended by the N. C. Legislature to make the quorum of the Annual Board meeting eight and to render void and uncollectible accounts of minor students with merchants without written consent of their parents before the accounts are made. This measure will protect parents, merchants, and the College, and is universally welcomed.

OUR FOREIGN MISSIONARY WORK.

It is now time for all who are interested in our foreign mission work to get to work with a zeal and definite plan that will bring results, that will help the cause which we love and which lies so near the heart of Christ and his loyal people. Our foreign missions are vital to the work of the Christian church. Much has been said lately, but now it is time for work and prayer and giving. We need a vigorous campaign for our foreign missions. They are successful, our missionaries are faithful, our work is a worthy work, the Christian church is not going to take any backward step, we are not going to advertise to the world that we do not believe in and support our foreign mission enterprise; nor that our Board and its officers are not true men with as deep and loyal interest in missions and the work of the Christians as any of our brethren are. Your Board stands ready to enlarge our work just as fast as the funds will allow, and they will be the last ones that are willing to retrench or withdraw our workers. The writer has served on your Mission Board about 15 years. He has never missed a meeting of the Board, and but few times the meetings of the Mission Council (the Executive Board). He is of the opinion that any other nine men whom the Convention would have chosen would not have done far different in the general plans and policies of the Board in any particular line. Not one dollar has been misappropriated. I have never seen any selfish plans or motives brought forward by any member of the Board. In almost every important matter in the final decisions there has been practically unanimous action. The hardest week of a man's life is upon that Board each year. I have often seen them in session fall upon their knees before God and seek divine guidance in the difficult problems. I have heard the voices of the Mission Secretaries and others praying in the night hours for wisdom. If the plans and methods and policies have not been the best under all circumstances it has been because the wisdom of these nine men unitedly has been deficient or that they have been compelled to carry out plans by the American Christian Convention which sometimes conflicted with their personal judgment.

It is time now for a vigorous campaign in each church in these seven conferences of the Southern Christian Convention by
 1. The Foreign Mission Standing Committee.

The "budget" plan is the best plan known to Christian workers in all leading churches. It is the plan suggested by the Laymen's Missionary Movement. It is effective and successful wherever tried faithfully. The Mission Board has made out a budget for running its foreign work and paying the deficit in that regular department. Each conference and auxiliary convention was asked to consider in its regular session what part of that amount it would assume as its standard and make a faithful effort to raise this conference year. The conferences or conventions, as in our Southern Convention, after due deliberation by the conference officers, and proper committees, and by regular action of the body set the standard that they will faithfully try to reach. It was emphasized and generally understood that this was to be raised in the general and regular channels so as to increase the regular church offering and thus stir the interests of the church membership generally. It was not understood to include the work of our women who have special matters on hand, or private gifts, or by Christian Endeavor Societies but the gifts of the churches as such.

We have assumed $2,500 as our goal for this year for these seven conferences. How easy we can do that if all will get to work and help. I understand that the apportionments in the several conferences for foreign missions is somewhere from $1,500 to $1,800. How easy these seven conferences could raise an extra thousand, an average of some $125 each. Here is the work of our Standing Foreign Committees to see that this is done. It could be done by asking in some instances the pastors to raise in their own way a special offering in this time of the foreign deficit such an offering as the church would like to give; or, it could be done by an exchange of pulpits so that some of our most capable advocates of foreign missions could present the needs of the cause; or, the foreign committee could prepare an appeal setting forth the needs and plans and sending it to the churches; or, the foreign committees could go personally and present the needs to the several churches. There are plenty of ways if the Foreign standing committees will take up the matter. One thousand dollars would soon be raised above the regular church offerings through the apportionment plan. The Memorial Christian Temple will be responsible for raising one-third of the extra thousand this year that the whole Southern Convention would have to raise. Brethren we can do it if we will. Let's do it.

2. Pastors of our Churches.

The pastor is the leader of the church and as a rule the church will follow his leadership. It is in the hands of our pastors to make or break our foreign mission work. If you will conduct a vigorous campaign, give a series of sermons on missions fired by the Spirit of God, will educate your people, furnish them from the abundance of literature at the mission office and have an intelligent plan and work it you will send a cheer to your Mission Board, its secretaries, its missionaries, and a shout of hallelujahs to the native workers, and bring souls to Jesus Christ. It will take plan, time, midnight hours of prayer but in large measure the success of the cause will depend upon you brother pastors. It is not a matter whether you like the members of the Mission Board, or the Secretaries, or the convention plans, but it is a matter of the Cause of Christ and the Christian church, the souls of men, and your own spiritual interests. Brother pastor we are counting on you.

3. Personal, Individual gifts.

We have people interested in our work who have large private resources, who might receive a gracious blessing from the Lord if they could pay the entire deficit against our foreign fund in the foreign work and not sacrifice anywhere near what many of our missionaries, and officers do. I lay it upon your hearts brethren. Brethren in other brotherhoods give thousands and tens of thousands annually for their work. I appeal to you brethren whom the Lord has richly blessed with this world's goods to come up to the help of the Lord now. Will you consider it much in prayer?

4. Let us get the blessing that comes in attaining, let us get the inspiration that comes in reaching the goal which we have assumed. The cause is worthy, the indebtedness is legitimate, our workers are on the fields, and we cannot desert them or cause them to lose heart. Our Mission Board and Secretaries were chosen by the brethren. We are not here by our seeking. The Board is doing its best, the results remain with the brethren. We count on you.

Conference Standing Committees, Pastors, Conference officers, high privates in the ranks we are depending on you.

MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The second period of Mission study on Monday night December 2nd was devoted to "Mission Methods in the Sunday School."

The proposition is: "The complete Sunday school is one which meets the need of every individual in each stage of his development and provides for its own perpetuity as an institution."

It is a recognized fact that in secular institution both scholars and teachers are graded that the needs of each stage of development may be properly met. It is a fact that ought to be recognized, and with much more importance than the secular training, that there is a religious instruction and training for each stage of the child development and only that particular kind meets the needs properly. The purpose of this instruction is to show the pupil at each stage his proper relationship to Jesus Christ, to cultivate in him Christian character, and to enlist him in definite service. The study of missions is a factor in this training and contributes to each of the three-fold purposes.

What may be used? What is the test of material? This is a first question to be, and will be asked in beginning Missions in the Sunday school. In the first place it must interest the pupil. In the second place it must appeal to the normal and natural instinct of the child, and in the third place it must contribute to the fundamental purpose of the school. These questions having been settled, almost any material or method may be adopted.

How shall we produce a Missionary Sunday school? The answer may be found in the answer to the following question: How do public schools foster the school spirit and patriotic interest? They do it by having patriotic teachers, duly honoring and memorializing great men, hanging pictures on the walls, having special days, singing the songs of the nation, furnishing the pupils with patriotic books, etc., such as "Boys of '76," unfurl a flag on the play-ground and from the top of the building, hang mottoes and quotations on the wall, conduct public exercises and have speeches, use object lessons in the school, make pilgrimages to places of historic or public interest etc., etc.

What does all this mean in terms of the Sunday school? Answer in the same terms as above except use missionary interest instead of public and patriotic interest.

The teachers must be missionary. Every teacher can be, ought to be and cannot fail to be if endowed with a vision of the call of God for Christian character. How can they be? By training. How can they be trained? It is needless for me to take the time here to mention the books which may be had at publishing houses almost for a song. These books inform and tell how, and a heart on fire for God catches the spirit and in hundreds of ways finds opportunity to tell Sunday school children something interesting every Sunday in connection with the regular lesson. A method which has proved successful in places is as follows: Have a missionary teacher of the school who rotates with classes from Sunday to Sunday. But this fails of the highest good because while she or he is growing in mission spirit and life others are being impoverished, and the school idea is not in it. If all are missionary and the school is possessed with the spirit of it as a public school is possessed with patriotic spirit then growth ensues and you have a mission school.

Again, the Sunday school to be a missionary Sunday school ought to keep before its pupils constantly the lives of great men such as Paton, Livingstone, and all the other great missionaries, and the important facts concerning their lives. There is a serious lack of knowledge in our Sunday schools and churches, of great missionary men. Who was Jno. Paton? How many schools have a half dozen in them who can answer at once. When we come to think about it, it is a crime not to know, and I expect there are teachers who do not know, and I wonder how many preachers do not know. We know about Washington. Do we know Savoranola? Livingstone? Again, the school should have missionary songs sung with understanding which may be done by the superintendent or some one explaining the meaning of the songs they might have the flag salute, pictures on the wall, mottoes, etc., etc.

To be continued next week.

TEMPERANCE.

The work of temperance reform is moving on. The Anti-Saloon League has raised twice as much money and done twice as much work this year as last. The Executive Committee at their annual meeting on November 20th stood for a search and seizure law, for the better enforcement of the state-wide prohibition law, and a Convention to meet in Raleigh, January 30th, 1913, to endorse this action.

This seems to be the true interpretation of the sentiment. The Baptist State Convention, The N. C. Conference, the Western N. C. Conference, the Methodist Protestant Conference, the Disciple's church, and the Christian church in their annual meetings since November 20th have memorialized the General Assembly to pass this measure. We copy this language from one of the reports:

"After a study of the temperance situation in our State and Nation, your committee believes that the Legislature ought to enact a law giving authority to police officers to search places suspected of selling liquor and to seize such liquor when found. That the Congress of the United States ought to pass a law that will restore to each State the right to protect itself against liquor shipped from other states, therefore we recommend:

That this Conference memorialize the General Assembly that convenes in January, 1913, to enact a search and seizure law as a means to the enforcement of our prohibition law."

The judgment of the police officers and temperance workers is that this legislation is necessary and the law makers ought not to delay in passing it at once. The passage of the Webb-Sheppard-Kenyon Bill, which everybody now predicts, will make such legislation necessary in order that the officers may seize this liquor when it is in the possession of the railroad and express companies to try the liquor and show its intent.

The Churches in their reports advise laymen and pastors to attend the temperance gathering in Raleigh January 30th, and Supt. Davis is looking for a large, representative, and enthusiastic gathering.

The need of this legislation is patent to every man who has noted the shipment of liquor into his own territory in the past thirty days. X.

GOD'S LOVE.

God's love has been manifested thorough the history of mankind. Even in the Garden of Eden, when man had sinned and for the first time experienced shame, God clothed him. But he also deprived him of the privilege of the tree of life, to save him from a wretched and miserable earthly immortality in sin.

Haynes.

Loranious J. Haynes was born June 27, 1873, and died December 22, 1912, aged 39 years, 5 months, and 25 days. He leaves to mourn their loss one brother, one sister, a wife and son, and a number of other relatives and friends. His wife is a member of the church at Mt. Olivet (R), but Bro. Haynes was not a member of any church, though generally recognized as a good man. Funeral services were held December 24, at Mt. Zion U. B. church near his home, and the body buried at McGeheysville.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Our good and delightful Brother William Tunstall, Henderson, N. C., renewing for The Christian Sun one day before his subscription expires graciously adds "I have been taking The Sun since its first issue, and cannot do without it." There are loyalty and love for you, and from one of the sweetest-spirited men in all our acquaintance.

—As a result of the evangelistic services at Elon College the past two weeks, nineteen have united with the church here. We presume that others will join the church of their choice when returning to their homes. We presume there were fifty or more confessions of faith in Christ during the meeting. Rev. C. H. Rowland, by his earnest, faithful and devout ministry, endeared himself to college and community and won the hearts of all.

—Under recent date pastor H. E. Rountree, Greensboro, First church writes: "Ladies Home and Foreign Missionary Society reorganized in our church yesterday. Mrs. R. I. Williams, President; Mrs. S. A. Caveness, Vice President; Mrs. H. E. Rountree, Secretary; Mrs. L. M. Clymer, Superintendent Junior Society which is already active.

Plan: Educational program monthly study: "The Call of the World."—Dougherty.

—Rev. A. W. Andes, Secretary, Harrisonburg, Va., writes that The Young People's General Convention of the Christian Church, South, will meet in regular biennial session this Spring; the exact time and place to be determined by the Executive Committee and published in The Christian Sun. Secretary Andes is anxious that the "Standing Committees" of this Convention do something for the work and the Convention besides just "stand," and that they do not delay that work till the meeting of the convention.

—Our beloved and energetic brother, Rev. Daniel A. Keys, of South Norfolk, Va. church is out to interest and edify the young as well as the old in church services, and so has introduced the novel method of dividing his Sunday morning into junior and senior divisions. Last Sunday at 11 o'clock for the juniors he used as topic, the first division of his sermon "How to Make Others Sing." For the senior, the latter division he discussed "Love As a Christian Grace." We trust Brother Keys will tell Sun readers his experience and whether he succeeds in getting his Sunday school pupils. "To stay today till after preaching" —The Atlanta Bible Conference which has come to be a second Northfield, is to convene in fifteenth annual session March 7-16th. The director and president of the Conference is Dr. Lem G. Broughton, now of London, England who is coming to personally direct the conference. Among the noted speakers and teachers at the conference this year will be Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, who will speak twice daily throughout the Conference; Dr. James M. Gray, of Chicago; Rev. J. I. Vance, D. D. of Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. W. R. Wedderspoon, of Washington, D. C.; Dr. John R. Sampsey, of Louisville, Dr. E. Y. Pierce, of Chicago, Secretary of the International Sunday School Committee; Dr. W. M. Morrison, of Africa; Dr. Lacy Moffett, of China. Special Railroad rates have been granted. Those desiring further information can write Rev. John W. Ham, 78 Luckie Street, Atlanta, Ga.

OUR PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Dear Brother Atkinson:

I want to say to the readers of the Christian Sun that the new Publishing House at Elon College is beautiful, stands in a most convenient and conspicuous place and does great credit to the Building Committee. They have some surplus land adjoining the building which they can dispose of to good advantage at any time. The lower portion of the building is well arranged for the purpose for which it is intended, the upper story is cut up into nice offices or living rooms that can be rented for a good price.

The machinery is all new, modern, and of the best type to be had.

The Superintendent, Mr. Montgomery, from Troy, Ohio, seems to be equal to the task, and is a fine man. They are busy arranging the machinery and will be ready for work in a few days. We may look for some as good and fine work from our own house as is to be had anywhere.

The money has certainly been invested to a good purpose and in good stock. The building is much larger than first planned for, and, consequently, will require more money than was anticipated. The property is worth much more. It is therefore, necessary to sell some more stock, which I think the agent will have no trouble in selling. We will be proud of our Publishing House that we have so long needed. It rejoices my heart to see my younger brethren going forward with these enterprises that I have so long labored and prayed for. I only regret, in my declining years, that I am not able to purchase some of this Publishing House stock, which in the years to come I feel will prove both a blessing to our beloved church and a profit to those who are able and willing to put their money into it now. Our own beautiful, well equipped Publishing House rejoices my heart every time I look upon it.

Yours in the work,
J. W. Wellons.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is more and more manifest that officials in the Police service of New York City are in league with the under world. The confession of Captain Walsh, among the "men higher up," reveals a course of grafting that is appalling. Modern society seems to produce "gamblers" and "grafters" as naturally as stagnant ponds breed mosquitoes. This state of human society provokes inquiry into the cause or causes of such corruption. Does it spring from congested populations in great cities? or does it simply discover the bad people who come into congested centers from many other places? Does the "love of money" which is "the root of all evil" lie at the bottom of such systematic and diabolical evils? Does democracy have any part in such widespread evils as curse our modern society? It is easier to discover evil and to find fault than to offer remedies; and we are prone to do the easiest thing. Hence, most of us are faultfinders rather than healers of evils which afflict our age and our country.

I am compelled to think that congested population offers increased opportunity for wrongdoing, and that evil people, coming from many distant places, give way to their evil propensities as they did not in smaller places where they were known. Where population is sparse enough for the public eye to be upon the individual, the individual is restrained in evil doing; but when population is so great that the public eye loses sight of the individual the evil propensities go unrestrained. The only method the public has devised to overlook individual life in large cities is through police officials; and when these are corrupt and protect criminals, then society is at the mercy of the worst members of society. This seems to have been the condition in New York City. All sorts of offenders against law could have the protection of the police, provided they would pay a regular tax to officials; hence all sorts of bad houses paid money and made more money. The love of money seems to have been the motive in all offenders. The gambler could pay money because he could make money; and the policemen would wink at evil for cash. Is this love of money inherent in human nature or does modern society inspire the love of money in such a measure as to make men criminals? Have we pushed the matter of business and gain beyond the line of moral endurance? Does respectability in society require the expenditure of more money than honest service can earn? Have we made the terms of good standing such a strain upon money as to cause men in official position to risk character for money? Or has the sight of luxury so inflamed human appetite for the best and keenest gratifications that men lose sight of moral principles and moral accountability? We know that fashion and custom carry whips mightier than coach-drivers for fiery steeds. Public sentiment carries some people on its crest as the swollen river carries driftwood on its bosom; and this age needs a public corrective. Honesty has fallen below par, and self-indulgence is at a premium. The age needs a new philosophy; or the emphasis laid on an old philosophy; that honesty, purity, simplicity, and integrity make any man worthy of high place in the confidence and respect of society.

W. W. Staley.

NORFOLK LETTER.

Bold indeed would he be, even were he the ablest of men, who might attempt an exhaustive analysis of the forces with which the church, not only of today, but more so of the morrow, must grapple. For, these are so many-sided, that it is not given to any to see all the phases thereof. Into just what form many things that are now held in solution by society will eventually crystalize no one can predict with certainty.

Still, it is incumbent upon us to make the most painstaking study possible, of the conditions which confront us, and we should be encouraged to do this by the fact that although much of what we meet must remain forever insoluble, yet upon a careful examination of the status of those things in which we, as Christians should be most concerned, there emerge a few basic facts upon which we may build confidently and surely.

First, we may note that with the possible exception of Catholicism, arbitrary ecclesiastical authority, considered purely as such, is rapidly losing its hold upon the minds of men.

We should expect this as a necessary concomitant of the "insurgent," or progressive movement in the political realm. In the church, as in the state, men are everywhere in open revolt against the "whipcracking" of ecclesiastical "bosses," or obligarchs, there being the same cause at the bottom of both tendencies namely; that intellectual phenomenon characteristic of the Twentieth Century known as "Modernism." There is a distinct "breaking away" from modern religious hierarchies, and in the church of the future, whatever sway or preeminence man may attain, they must attain by excellence of character, united with sheer ability and usefulness.

Secondly, there is a growing distaste for dogma, considered apart from its bearings upon the practical and daily lives of men.

The elaborate dogmatical systems of the great churches were formulated in an age and time when men were more prone to metaphysical speculation than at present.

The sort of speculation for which this age most cares is that prevalent upon Wall Street. Under strenuous modern conditions, people have no time in which to "split hairs" over some fine point in theology, but, in addition, there is not the intellectual predilection in that direction, even were the time theirs. I of course, refer here to the general rule, making exception of the comparatively few who still "specialize" in theology, but even of these there would seem to be a constantly decreasing number.

Here, again, we see Modernism getting in its work. Men have lost interest in the old, mooted points in theology largely because they have become intelligent enough to see first, that these propositions, over which the Fathers so often wrangled in wholly unchristian spirit, are absolutely incapable of either proof or disproof with mathematical certitude and secondly, that if such a result were possible but little would still be gained. Hence, they are unwilling to waste their time in dealing with nonessentials.

As a corollary, derived from the foregoing, we reach the conclusion that this is, therefore, a bad day for Denominationalism, since the only justification which the various denominations have for their existence is the claim which they make that their "peculiar" system of dogma is the most nearly correct one. Smash this contention, and they have smashed their greatest reason for being.

In the third place, as the churches are forced to abandon their contention over dogma, it is found that, more than ever, men at large appreciate her efforts to do them good after a sane, practical fashion. Truly and sincerely, it is my belief that there has never been a day wherein the people were more willing to hear the simple, disinterested message of the gospel than they are now.

While not, for an instant, losing sight of the "life that is to come," it should be also remembered that the exacting conditions of the "life that now is" weigh so heavily upon men that they need encouragement and counsel as to how they may best meet these conditions. Here, further, it is my earnest belief that the church that can best help men in this respect, as well as in others, will be the church of the future.

Further, it is not simply enough to try to get the people to church, but, in the words of Dr. Lyman Abbott, we must try "to get the church to the people." If we go out after them, they will begin to come to us.

My next letter will deal with the imperative necessity resting upon our church to strongly intrench herself in the cities, if she is to become the power she should and can be in the thought of the people at large.

Henry Spencer Booth.

THE NEWS.

—According to rumors and reports Washington, D. C., is to see the greatest throng of people, at the Wilson inauguration March 4th, that it has seen in many a decade.

—It falls to the lot of few men to accumulate ten million dollars in a lifetime. Yet that much fell into the coffers of John D. Rockefeller in one day last week when Standard Oil declared its annual dividend. There were forty million in profits and the Deacon's share was one-fourth.

—The Lower House of the Congress passed by an overwhelming majority the Webb interstate liquor shipment bill giving prohibition territory management of liquors shipped into its borders for illegal usage. This bill is to strengthen prohibition and strike a blow at blind tigers.

—There is no rest for—the politicians. They already have a man or two up and going for the next Governor of Virginia. By the time one man is named and inaugurated, or comfortably installed in office another begins to pull to be his successor.

—At the government station, St. Helena, Norfolk, Va., where men of the army and navy assemble for amusement or other purposes this notice has been posted and is being enforced "No cigarette smoking allowed." No one is allowed to sell cigarettes on the station grounds. Men of sense well know the poisonous and paralyzing effect of the cigarette.

There is this difference between food and air, and that is, the air we breathe is invisible, so that we can not use our eyes to tell whether it is good or bad; with food we can tell, usually, by looking at it, whether it is clean and wholesome.

Unfortunately, we can not see dirty air as we can dirty food. And because this is true, most people are unmindful of the kind of air they breathe, though they may be ever so nice and particular as to the kind of food they eat.

THE PLAN OF THE MEETING.

This meeting may be made very effective and interesting if the prayer-meeting committee and the leader will take a little pains in advance, according to the following method. Arrange a board to represent the bulletin-board of a great daily newspaper. A large movable blackboard will answer well, if it is set on end; and you will probably need two of such boards, or even more. Then prepare for each member of the society a strip of paper on which is printed a catch-line summarizing the point he will bring out in the meeting. These catch-lines are given at the start of all the following items, and will serve as models for the other items which you may add to the collection of facts. Make them as much like newspaper bulletin-lines as possible, not only in the wording but also in the lettering. You may have a set of letter stencils, or be able to obtain one. At any rate, the lines should be printed in very black ink, and should be big and plain enough to be read with ease clear across your meeting-room.

There are two ways of using these slips. If your society is small, it will be most effective if each speaker in turn comes forward, places his catch-line on the bulletin-board (using tacks or thumb-tacks), then faces the society and says a few words on his catch-line, bringing out its significance. These little talks, of course, can be only indicated within the limits of this page. If, however, your society is too large for this, you can economize time by giving all the slips to one person, whose duty it will be to stand at the bulletin-board and place the slips in position one after the other, the Endeavorers speaking on the slips as they are stuck upon the board.

Thoughts on the Topic.

Said an old farmer: "I figured out along time ago that by even moderate drinking, I would drink an acre of good land every year."

A story is told of a woman who stood before a magistrate who was hearing a case against her husband. "Drunk, third arrest." Somehow the pathetic face of the woman touched the judge, and he said to her, "I am sorry, but I must lock up your husband." "Your Honor," she returned, "wouldn't it be better for me and the children if you locked up the saloon and let my husband go to work?"

In 1911 (the latest year for which the figures are available) the United States consumed 2,169,000,000 gallons of strong drink. That was the largest amount in the history of the country. Full statistics have been kept since 1870. At that time the amount consumed was only 296,000,000 gallons or less than one-seventh what it is today.

Our national drink bill for 1911 (the latest figures available) amounts to the enormous sum of $2,360,000,000. This is simply the cost to the people of the strong drink sold. It takes no account of the cost of the crime caused and promoted by drink, the poorhouses that must be kept up for the paupers made by saloons, the asylums for idiots and insane, the police force, the courts.

To a large extent the prohibitory laws of the nine prohibition States are neutralized by an iniquity permitted and protected by the United States government,—the shipping of liquor into those States by the express companies. In a test case the government has actually forced an unwilling railroad to transport such liquor. A bill is now before Congress which, if passed, will forbid the importation of liquor into States where the law is against the sale of strong drink. Every Endeavorer should find out how his Senators voted on this question, if it comes to vote; and, if the bill is killed in committee, what his Senators have done to get it out of the committee's hands and before the Senate.

"The saloon is an economical problem. Where money goes to the saloon-keeper it cannot go to the grocer or the baker. A baker in Spencer, Mass., voted for license, and got it. Under license he had just as many customers as he had under no-license, but his sales fell off 30 per cent. In other words, the women and children had to go short of bread in order to support the saloon. The baker saw the light and voted against the saloon. Endeavorers, get out the temperance voters. Circulate petitions at election times. Wake up the indifferent. Get, and study, no-license literature. Let the women take a hand. Enlist the boys. Use every legitimate means to put the saloon down and out."

"The saloon is being outlawed, as it deserves. Saloon ridden districts have higher tax-rates, taken all in all, provide poorer educational facilities for the children, and have proportionately fewer children in the high schools as statistics clearly prove, than no-license cities; they have larger city debts, they expend less money on sidewalks and roads, and, in fact, the only benefit that saloons confer on city or town is a large police force where with to take care of drunkards and criminals manufactured by the saloon. In 1903 the town of Ipswich, Mass., was "dry." That year there were 61 arrests. The next four years were "wet." The first year, 1904, there were 123 arrests; in 1905 there were 168 arrests; in 1906 340 arrests; in 1907, 419 arrests. In 1908 Ipswich went "dry" again, and the arrests fell to 77. Saloons make drunkards."

ABOUT SUNDAY'S LESSON.

Some things Superintendents and Teachers May Talk About.

Subject: "The Call of Abraham."

Scripture: Genesis 12:1-9.

Time:—Estimated B. C. 2260 (Sayce); 1921 (Ussher).

Places:—Haran in Mesopotamia, Sechem, Bethel, and Hai in Canaan.

Persons:—The Lord, Abraham, Sarai, Lot, adherents and servants, Canaanites.

Golden Text:—I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing—Gen. 12:2.

Leading Thought:—God blesses those who trust and obey him.

Our lesson opens at a point nearly four centuries after the Deluge. Noah's three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth, had become respectively, the founders of the Jewish and other Asiatic races; of the races who inhabit Africa, and of those who constitute the European nations. Jews are Shemites; we are Japhethites.

Some two centuries after the Flood occurred the confusion of tongues and the dispersion of mankind told of in Genesis 11 as taking place near the site of ancient Babylon. From this date the Bible record concerns itself chiefly with the history of the Semitic race, and introduces Terah, in the eighth generation from Shem, who became the father of Abraham, the founder of the Hebrew race. Terah and his family dwelt in Ur of the Chaldees.

"The home of the Nativity of Abraham was long a lost city. The excavations by Mr. Taylor in 1854, and the discovery by Major Rawlinson of important historical documents, have settled beyond reasonable dispute the location of Ur of the Chaldees. It stood on the right bank of the Euphrates River, on a spot now occupied by the mounds of Mugheir. It was originally a port on the Persian Gulf, but the mounds now representing its ancient site stands nearly 150 miles above the mouth of the Euphrates. This great distance between its old site and the present headwaters of the gulf is due, according to geologists, to the abundant deposits of alluvia made by the river during the past four thousand years. The inscriptions discovered give a list of kings who ruled over the territory before Babylon came to prominence, or became a capital."

LESSON CONTRASTS.

Noah, of whom we have studied in the last two lessons, honored God by faithful work and then by patient waiting. Abraham, whose story we now take up, honors God by diligent journeying. Each man had a heart opened toward God, an ear ready to hear his call, and a life given to obeying the divine directions. Very different are the ways God dealt with righteous Noah and with faithful Abraham. In drawing Noah to himself God blotted out all familiar objects, and shut him and his alone in the ark of safety. But Abraham he called to separate himself from his ancestral home and all familiar scenes and go with God to a new land. The mission of righteous Noah was a limited one, reaching scarce beyond his family circle. Abraham's mission is as wide in extent as the human race, for he is called that through him all families of earth may be blessed

OBJECT LESSON.

Take a small child by the hand. It does not matter whether or not Johnny knows his way around a big city, if he is led by someone who does know the way. He will not get lost, nor fall, nor become frightened as long as his hand is held by someone strong enough and wise enough to take good care of him. When Abraham left his home to go to a new country and a new life, he did not know where he was going, but he did know he was walking with his hand in God's hand. That is what each one of us may do—walk hand in hand with God. "I know not where I am going, but well do I know my Guide."

LESSON ANNOUNCEMENTS.

One of the most natural things for little children to do when it comes to a chance for choosing, is to say "Me first." Bigger children and grown people do not say "Me first," but they often act it. To give up the best place or best things to someone else, is as sure a proof of an unselfish character as a rising thermometer is proof of sunshine.

We learned to-day of Abraham's faith in God and loyalty. Next Sunday's lesson gives another story about him and shows how he acted when property interests were involved. It is said you can tell what a man really is when you touch his pocketbook. Next Sunday's lesson shows how much Abraham stood the pocketbook test.—[Hagman.]

SHALL WE HAVE A MASS MEETING OF OUR WOMEN IN MAY?

Just because our women have never had a gathering all their own to study and discuss missionary needs, plans, and prospects, is no reason that it cannot be done, but renders it the more needful to be done. And since our kind Editor has made the suggestion and has given us the invitation why can we not have such a gathering as he suggests at the time appointed for the meeting of the Woman's Board of our Southern Convention? The women of the Board feel that they need help and inspiration to be gained from an interchange of plans and ideas of those interested in the work and no doubt a great impetus would be given the work throughout our convention. To come in contact with each other, to be drawn together by our common cause, to know each other better would inspire to a measureless degree.

It will mean sacrifice for some of our women to take the time—for many of them are busy house-wives and mothers but we prize most those things which cost us something and the success of this movement among our women calls for some effort on our part. So let us come together to plan how the work can best be done.

Let each member of our Conference Boards feel it her duty to be present; let each society send a representative; and let each church where there is no society, send a woman, who will be expected to return to the church enthused and informed as to organizing some form of the work in the church. We believe that a Woman's Society, or a Young People's Society or a willing Worker's Society, or the Mite-box plan can and should be worked in each of our churches. In some churches all of these could possibly be worked, but there is no church but what might use some one of these forms of endeavor.

What has been accomplished by the few engaged in the works, is a forecast of what might be accomplished when all our women are enlisted. Shall we have a Mass Meeting with a view to touching each of our churches, and to gaining the cooperation of all of our women? What shall we do about it?

(Mrs.) C. H. Rowland,
Chm. Woman's Board
Southern Convention.

GOOD NEWS.

A Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society has been organized in the Wakefield church with twenty-one charter members, ten active and eleven associate. Officers for the Conference year 1912-13 are President, Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, V. president, Mrs. C. C. Jones, Secretary, Mrs. L. B. Faison, Treasurer, Mrs. T. Wagner, Supt. of Literature, Miss Lilly Burton. The election of Supts. for other departments and the appointment of permanent committees was deferred till another time. It was agreed, however, that each person present at the organization become a committee of one to solicit additional members for next meeting. The field has not been fully canvassed and we hope, by an earnest effort on the part of all, to secure more names. Regular meetings will be held each fourth Sunday at the close of S. S. there being no peaching services at that hour.

One young man when solicited for membership said "Why certainly. I am with my church always in whatever she undertakes." What a splendid spirit of devotion and loyalty to the church of our choice. O for more who would put their shoulders to the wheel just that way.

Mrs. J. J. Lincoln.

ANOTHER ORGANIZATION REPORT.
ED.

Mrs. W. E. McClenny reports a Woman's Missionary Society organized at Damascus, Gates Co., N. C., with nine members and with the prospect of others joining soon. This sounds good and is encouraging.

Are there no others who can make a similar report? It requires some effort, a great deal of faith, and a willingness to work but the results are well worth all of this. Perhaps some hesitate because only a few are interested or there are only a few to enlist; yet if the few and the many in all of our churches were each to do her part, we would be surprised at the results from our combined efforts. Begin with the few and have faith to enlist the many.

THE WORLD FOR CHRIST.

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

This was the final commandment of our Savior, to the apostles, before He ascended to heaven; and it was not intended for the apostles alone, but for every child of God.

Christ Himself laid the foundation of missions in the world. He left His home in heaven and came to earth to redeem fallen man. He preached and labored among many people; and prepared the apostles, and others, to continue His work after He went back to heaven.

Christ's labors on earth were not in vain. His work has been continued; and it is going to still continue until it is fully accomplished. God's will is going to be done on earth, as it is in heaven. All nations are going to be converted, and there will be universal peace and good will. "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—Isaiah 11:9.

May every child of God fully realize the responsibility that rests upon him in helping to extend the gospel of Christ to all parts of the world. It is a commandment of our Lord, and we must obey. Christ wants us to be co-workers with Him. He will reward us bountifully for all that we do. He says: "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest."—Luke 10:2.

The great missionary needs are money, men, and prayer; and these can be fully supplied, if we will put our hearts and hands to the work. We cannot all go, in person, to the foreign fields; but we can give of our means to help send others; and we can let our prayers accompany all who are in the fields. Christ tells us to lay not up for ourselves treasures upon earth, but to lay them up in heaven. Every penny that we give for missions and every prayer that we send to the fields is a treasure laid up in heaven.

Friends, may each one of us respond to the missionary call of Christ, and be co-workers with Him. By doing this we

Dear Children and Friends:

The first to answer one of the letters which I am sending to the Sunday schools is the Union Memorial S.S. near Everett, Pa., which sends a check for one dollar and says they have decided to comply with my request. As quickly as the Annual comes out I will send it to all those who have not received one.

We have also enrolled two new cousins for the corner.

This weather is good and we are feeling fine; and making good use of it in school. Fifty-two of the sixty-one attend the Graded school.

I hope we are all looking forward to Easter for doing something special for the Orphanage.

Fondly, Uncle Emory.

Sipes, Greensboro, N. C. one sewing machine; Navassa Guano Co., Wilmington, N. C., one ton 8-2-2 guano. These are all good, substantial gifts and allow me to express to one and all our appreciation for them. As we are in need of sheets, would be very glad if some church or society would take a "sheet collection."

Chipley, Ga., January 20, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

Will you admit a little girl four years old to your band of cousins? I am not old enough to go to school, so I stay at home and help mamma and help entertain my brother and sister.

When I am a big girl I am going to visit the Orphanage and meet all of the cousins. Find enclosed 10 cts. with much love.

Elberta Shortt.

Yes, "mam," and mighty glad to have you: "Georgia cracker." Come again, and we hope you will sometime visit us.

Chipley, Ga., January 28, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I am a little girl eleven years old. I go to school every day, and like my teacher "Mr. Sivells" very much I am in the fourth grade. English is my favorite study.

I hope the cousins are enjoying themselves these lovely days.

You will find enclosed 10 cts. I want to join the band of cousins.

I love to you and the cousins,

Rosie Shortt.

I am so glad you enjoy your school-work and hope you will continue, then some day you may be a good school teacher.

Dear Uncle Emory:

We are late this month with our dimes. We have such good times playing these sunny days. Where were your letters last week?

The letters were left out by the printer: we are all mighty sorry it occurred; but: it is just like boys to have a good time, but all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy.

Ivor, Va., Feb. 1, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I am a little behind in writing to the corner also in sending in my dues so I am enclosing 50 cts in stamps this about brings me up to date and will try to keep up my money dues if I don't write every week.

Mamma with several other ladies of the Ivor Christian church sent a box of canned fruit to the Orphanage before Christmas. One lady sent a fruit cake and mamma sent 1½ gal. can of peaches and I sent 1½ gal. can of huckleberries and I think $5.00 in money was in the same box. I read the acknowledgement of the money as a thanksgiving offering but have not seen anything about the can fruit being received. I hope you received that also. I am sorry to learn that some of the cousins have been sick hope they will soon be well. I am in sympathy with all the little cousins.

Sincerely,

Paul H. Brantley.

Yes; Sir, I am glad you have come again. Two new ones this week. I remember distinctly about the $5.00 being brought to me from the box and it was all reported that week but may have gotten mixed in reporting. We are all well now, thanks.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

As the year 1912 was about to close, the death angel knocked at the door and Mrs. A. G. Higgins answered the call. She was a charter member of Dendron Christian Church and in her death, the church has lost a Christian woman, the community a good neighbor, the home a faithful wife and a loving mother. Therefore be it Resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to Him who instituted the church and created the home.

2. That we express our sympathy to the family of the deceased and commend them to Him who "Weeps with those who weep."

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased; a copy sent to the Wakefield Enterprise, the Surry and Prince George Herald and The Christian Sun for publication and a copy spread upon our church minutes.

Now you can play the Piano as well as any one

IMPLY join The Christian Sun Piano Club and let the Club send you one of the superb Ludden & Bates Player-pianos. You no longer have to understand music in order to produce it any more than you do in order to enjoy it. Club members tell us that they are simply delighted and astonished to find how quickly the Player-piano develops their knowledge and taste for music and what splendid entertainment and recreation it brings to their families and friends.

The Player-piano has come to stay—for it is really two instruments in one—a regular piano for those who can play and a Self-player for those who have never studied music. It enables all the members of the family to produce for of the world's great Masters. Even a child of six short years learns to perform on the Player in a few minutes. To those who did not have the opportunity to study music it opens the door that was locked—the door to the greatest of all arts—and reveals to them a new and beautiful world of which they had only dreamed.

PIANOS OF QUALITY

Ludden & Bates, Managers of the Club, were the pioneers in the Piano Business in the South. For nearly half a century they have studied the requirements of the Southern trade. During this time they have placed over seventy-five thousand pianos in Southern Homes. Your parents and grand-parents, in all probability, secured their pianos from this old and reliable House.

Ludden & Bates pianos are their own best advertisement for they are honestly made of the best materials, by skilled workmen whose greatest pride is the "Quality" of their work.

The Club brings these superb instruments within easy reach of practically every home. Investigate its many privileges and advantages.

The Ludden & Bates Player-Piano

The Ludden & Bates Player-piano was one of the first instruments of its kind ever offered to the Southern Trade. It is, therefore, not an experiment, but has demonstrated its practicability and superiority by years of successful service. For the home that has no musician and for the home with a "silent piano" the Club performs a splendid service for it not only provides a piano of the sweetest tone but also confers upon every member of the family the ability to play the choicest selections of the world's great composers. The Club also provides a means by which you can exchange your old piano for a new Player-piano.

CHURCH NEWS.

My work is moving on very smoothly and am very much pleased with it. Yesterday I was at Liberty, Randolph, and the services were indeed good. Rev. P. T. Klapp preached at the evening service and his sermon was to the point, plain and very edifying. The eleven o'clock sermon was the first pulpit service held in our new brick house of worship, which was finished last week, except the painting. It is one of the easiest buildings I ever spoke in and Liberty is justly proud of the same. Four more collections, like the one yesterday, from the large congregation, will place all our conference assessments in hand. This church is at work and they are bringing things to pass for which I am glad.

There is an indebtedness of nearly $800. on the building and I hereby appeal to you (the reader) for a donation to help liquidate this debt. We aim to have it dedicated the fourth Sunday in May or the fifth Sunday in June. Now do not neglect this appeal but send in a contribution as you feel the Lord would have you. All who have pledged and feel they can now, will please send the promised amount to Bro. O. T. Hatch or Bro. Samuel Boggs, of Liberty, N. C. Kindly send all donations to one of these brethren and the columns of The Sun will acknowledge the amount and by whom given.

Lebanon is doing finely. They are a business people. This is an old established church and is able to do great things for the Lord. My congregations there are good and give fine attention to the Word. We will be ready for conference by November and are hoping for a fine session.

Wentworth is still moving on and much good is being accomplished by this church. They have a Christian Esdeavor Society and a good Sunday school. The church services are well attended and thus we rejoice together.

I am now on my way to Mooresboro in Western N. C., for a trip of two weeks.

SATAN IN THE NATURAL WORLD.

Merely because a thing is present in the world does not mean that God put it there. Yet how constantly we talk as though God were directly responsible for all that is! Most of us assume that the thorns on rose-bushes, the poison in snakes, the murderous instincts of wild animals toward each other and every so-called "natural" instinct in man, are all directly originated by God and given by him for some good purpose. Do we find any such teaching in the Bible? Creation, or nature, we are told, is in "the bondage of corruption"; and corruption is not of God: it is of Satan, and sin, and death. The entrance of sin into the world brought conditions which God never made, and which plainly have permeated not only the natural man but the whole natural world. As we remember this we shall not make the mistake of saying that, because God gave us this or that instinct, it must be right to gratify it. We shall rather seek light from him as to whether the instinct is from God at all or not. And the warfare and cruelty that are instinctive in animals will be seen to be of Satan, not of God. "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." That is Satan's work, not God's. It is all going to be changed when our Lord returns and takes supreme control. Then creation itself, when the sons of God are revealed through the redemption of their bodies, shall also be delivered from its present sin-caused bondage. Then "the wolf and the lamb shall feed together, . . . they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith Jehovah." Until then, let us recognize the evidences of our great Enemy, and not further his work nor hinder God's by failing to see the line of eternal cleavage between them.—Sunday School Times.

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

BLESSINGS WITHOUT SORROW.

The blessing of Jehovah, it maketh rich: and he addeth no sorrow thereto. Prov. 10:22. (Golden Text for Sunday, February 23.)

We do not have many unmixed pleasures in this life. Every rose bush has its thorns; every shower its lowering cloud; every day its night; and every joy its shadow or dread of sorrow. But there are unmixed blessings. When our Father sends a blessing He adds no sorrow thereto. Sin comes in to sap the joy that fills the heart, but God sends no sorrow with His blessings. The happiest people on the earth are not those who, necessarily, live in the finest houses, wear the best clothes, or have the biggest bank account; but those who seek first the Kingdom of God in all their work and way and plans and have the heart to trust Him and fear Him and love Him every day. The sad blunders and bitter disappointments come in this life when and because we leave God out.

Lot, of the lesson, was doomed to dismal failure, not because he had poor business judgment as the world goes, but because he left God out. Abraham was destined to have his efforts crowned with joy and success because he took God into account, sought peace, and made righteousness supreme.

We often think the problem of poverty is the perplexing one of this life. It is not. The problem of prosperity is equally perplexing. A writer in the New York Christian Advocate very sanely points out,

We often talk about the problems of poverty. Our study today introduces us to some of the problems of wealth. It is often true that two men can suffer together in harmony when they cannot prosper together without discord. It is often true that suffering unites men while prosperity divides them.

Abram and Lot were both men of great wealth. The account we are studying more than hints that Lot owed his wealth to the fact that he was with his wise and far-sighted uncle. If Abram was in a sense a soldier of fortune who went forth at the command of God, he had become a soldier of very good fortune, for his flocks and herds and silver and gold had constantly increased. So Abram and Lot became men of vast possessions, with a large body of servants. The point was reached, indeed, where it was physically impossible for them longer to travel together. The time of actual separation was reached when their servants fairly came to blows because there was not pasture enough to accommodate all the herds and flocks for which they were caring.

This discord came to the ears of Abram, and he saw that a separation was the only way to solve the problem.

Prosperity always brings its own vexing perplexities. New social and moral and religious problems arise with the securing of great wealth. An unflinching literary study of these conditions in America has been made by Mrs. Edith Wharton, in such books as The House of Mirth and The Fruit of the Trees. To live wisely and fruitfully and happily on $50,000 a year is a much more complex problem than to live serenely and efficiently on $1,000 a year. The increasing of the herds, and the silver and the gold, though often the object of the heart's desire will prove an introduction to many a painful and difficult problem.

Abraham continued in the barren hill country. His sense of the presence of God grew richer and deeper. His wealth and power continued undiminished. Possessions and character and piety grew together. He was master of his wealth and his wealth never became master of him. And as time went on the hills proved after all the best spot for a tribal ruler. With all his shrewdness Lot had not out-generated Abram. The man of vision in the long run had the best of the man of business sense.

"OUR CHURCH CRISIS."

Under the above title our beloved and versatile brother, Rev. Alva M. Kerr, of Pleasant Hill, Ohio, writes a very forceful and fluent article to The Herald of Gospel Light February 6; which gives a view of our Christian church, or rather of "leading spirits" in the church that we never till now witnessed, and never dreamed of as existing.

We are afraid Bro. Kerr's ill health has got the better of his vision, and that his point of view is subverted. We agree with our beloved in this fundamental proposition."

"Nothing is more fundamental as a necessity for power and spiritual vision in an organization ruled as a democracy, as is ours, than love, and friendship, and implicit confidence in each other's sincerity and motives. Coupled with this, and growing out of it, is the unity which comes from the clining heart and hand even when the intellect differs."

Bro. Kerr was the true philosopher when he wrote that, and put his thought down in monumental manner. Now his conclusion is this: that we as a church "have grievously violated these principles, and out of that have sprung most of the appalling conditions that now threaten us."

We agree with his principles, entirely, and differ absolutely with his conclusions.

We have not had a very wide observation amongst our brethren, we will admit, but such as we have had has led us to believe that no people on earth love each other better, cling tighter with stronger friendship, and display more implicit confidence in each other's sincerity and motives than the active, loyal member of our Christian Churches.

As an example of how we brethren are at variance with each other Bro. Kerr says "Time and again semi-circular letters in great numbers have been circulated among the 'safe' men, in which many of the finest and truest men of our denomination have been defamed. No less than two dozen of our general officers have been so attacked. At least six or seven of our college presidents have been so abused, and I would not venture to say have many of the faculty." Candidly we regret to even quote those lines in The Christian Sun for we have an idea they will be startling news, not to say deplorable revolutions to nine tenths of our readers. For our part we never even so much as heard that one such letter as the above was ever written. And as for attacking our general officers and abusing our college presidents—well, we never heard in all our lives that even one part of that existed in this Christian church of ours. I believe I should have to weep my eyes out, I know it would break my heart, to believe that these things existed in the church of my love and my devotion. Candidly, we never witnessed in all our lives, political trickery or underhand, obscure, questionable methods of elevating one brother to office, and taking another out, in our Christian church. Church officers, "high up and low down" have usually held their positions till they were worn out by service in them, or weary with the duties, or exhausted by the strain, or desired that others share the burden. Toke our Conference Presidents, for instance. We attend our Southern Conference all now and then. In all our lives we have never seen the least bit of unfriendly rivalry, or political wire pulling, or even any undue anxiety that one should have this position alone, or in preference to, another.

We do know that our Presidents of Elon College have remained so until they voluntarily and gladly relinquished their office; no editor of The Christian Sun has ever been ousted that we have heard tell of; and so through the whole category of our offices and enterprises.

But our brother continues: Our Conventions have had neither time nor inclination to study our mission and educational problems, upon which depend our growth and success. Newmarket would have been a disgrace for a political party even. Norfolk was like a volcano ready to burst. Huntington was tense and angry. Troy was filled with suspicion."

Well we never attended but one American Convention, that at Norfolk, but if the above be the correct estimate we propose to steer clear the rest of our days. We were at Norfolk and had a perfectly joyous time. We never heard any politics, or dreamed of any trickery while there, and so far from its being a volcano we thought it one of the sweetest, most brotherly and most wholesome assemblies we had ever been in.

Furthermore this writer remembers trying to deliver some sort of an address on missions before that Norfolk convention and he does not remember ever to have had better attention and more hearty appreciation given to so poor an utterance.

Farewell now and forevermore to all the American Conventions that ever were held, or ever shall be held, if they are in any manner like those described by Bro. Kerr. We are fortunate indeed to have attended only one, if this is their character. Upon my very word of truth and honor I never saw or heard, at a Christian Convention or Conference, the first evidence of petty bickering, or political wire pulling or any questionable manifestation for prestige, place or power.

I know well the ministers and most of the very active laymen composing the bodies of our Southern Convention, and in all candor I do not believe a more thoroughly loyal and united church membership and constituency exists on this earth than are here to be found working shoulder to shoulder in the the Christian Church. And in behalf of this Christian church. And in behalf of these men of God and beloved in Christian service I dissent wholly and absolutely from the position of my good Bro. Kerr and sincerely trust that his health may soon be better and his liver in better shape so that he may have a more hopeful estimate of his church and his brethren.

GOD'S THOUGHTS.

Let us bear in mind that the Bible is not man's thought of God; but God's thought of man. It does not reveal, nor teach, man's will concerning God; but God's will concerning man. It is not a treatise on how man ought to deal with God; but on how God deals with man. It is not a book that shows how man should deal with sin, but one that shows how God deals with sin.

If therefore, you would know God's thoughts, understand His attitude toward man, realize how He deals with man, grasp God's conception of sin, read the Bible, the Book of books.

THE CORN SHOW AND MORALS.

Columbia, South Carolina has had a very successful Corn Exhibition. There were no side shows, "Midways" and "Plank Walks" allowed. But the multitude came. Now the much esteemed Charlotte Observer comments very like a good preacher, on the event in these words,

"The National Corn Exposition at Columbia has aroused an unprecedented interest and has drawn larger crowds, it is said, than any other event in the history of South Carolina. It has had no midway nor any show of the kind usual at fairs. It has been a great popular success solely because it stimulated and appealed to the interest of the people in constructive work. It showed how several bushels of corn could be grown where one bushel grew before, how numerous other farm crops could be more profitably produced, how cattle and poultry should be raised, how farm homes could be made more attractive, and such things. There were lectures and conferences. The absence of the shows counted for nothing. We do not believe this could have happened in the South ten or even five years ago. That it can happen now is profoundly significant of progress toward everything which tends to make a people prosperous and happy. Thousands upon thousands of preachments had been launched from press and rostrum with little seeming effect; but in the fulness of time they told."

What a gleam of hope springs from the last sentence. Press and preachers plead for the truth, for decency, for order, for morality. The wicked wag their head and go on. But "in the fulness of time" press and preacher see and realize the result of their labor. It takes time for moral movements to gain firm foothold and momentum; but they win out finally.

SHALL THE BIBLE GO?

The Board of Education of Pennsylvania have decreed, we see it stated, that the Bible must not be read in the Public Schools of that State. Illinois decided months ago that the good Book could no longer be read in the Public Schools of that State. Many of the other States, some eighteen or twenty, if memory serves correctly, had already decided to the same effect. Not that any evil teaching has been found in the Book, but Catholics hold that their priests, but not the people should and may read the Bible. And besides the Catholics have certain amendments to the Book that render it harmful to their cause to allow the people generally to have and read the Bible.

The decision, therefore, to not allow the Bible to be read in the Public Schools shows how the Catholics are gradually getting their hands on the reins of government, and how their power and authority are increasing.

—A bill before the North Carolina Legislature to abolish kissing the Bible on taking oath in court rooms was killed by an overwhelming majority.

—A bill has passed the lower House of the Legislature of this State unanimously, allowing the Governor to appoint women as notaries.

—Rev. Z. A. Poste, well known amongst Sun readers, gives up his Lewisburg, Pa. charge and will return to Franklinton, N. C., where he is already known for his faithful and devoted services.

—According to the latest authentic figures there are now 300,000 Sunday schools in the world with 30,000,000 officers, teachers and pupils; and this great army is said to be on the increase of about one million a year.

—The allies sent an aeroplane over the Dardenelles the other day to reconnoitre the Turkish position on the trip, which was made successfully. It dropped three bombs at Turkish warships, which, however, missed their mark.

—Coming too late for last issue was the good news that Dr. Dennison of the Memorial Temple, Norfolk, had received forty members into church fellowship up to last Sunday night during the meeting still in progress. The people of the church are delighted and much edified by the glorious results.

—Our sister republic, Mexico, is in the throes of a revolution which broke out Sunday Feb. 9th. The army is in revolt, President Madero is barricaded in his palace, and the national capital is in practical control of the revolutionists. It looks like troublous times just across our Texas borders.

—Abraham Lincoln was born in a log cabin near Hodgenville, Ky., February 12, 1809. The 104th anniversary of his birth was celebrated last Wednesday. As the years pass this man looms larger and larger upon the world's horizon as one of the very great men of the ages. His character is the more clearly read as the years pass, and his great work and wonderful brain are more and more appreciated.

THE PRACTICAL ISSUE.

If you have no devotional element in your nature, if you have given yourself over to criticism and doubt to such an extent that you cannot readily believe, remember that Jesus, who is admitted to have been an expert in the subject of right and wrong, made faith a "work" for those who opposed him. That is, you must labor to believe. If Jesus is right, doubting in itself is sin. Why?

Nobody denies that atheism is death. Materialism is its corpse. Destructive criticism poses as its "funeral director," but does not deserve the name of undertaker (because of lack of seriousness). The substratum of materialism is sensuality. Sensuality is the greatest promoter, most active factor of sin, leading again to doubt, to denial, to atheism. And the only dignity of the whole procession is that of death.

What is the sense of getting into that crowd? You will get into the cemetery soon enough, without cultivating the agencies of death. To cultivate death (suicide) is sin. J. J. Summerbell.

THE MISSIONARY SITUATION.

It is with a great deal of interest that I have followed the recent discussion about the missionary situation. My heart has been made sad to realize just how little we are doing for the greatest of all causes. The life and prosperity of the church is locked up in the missionary question. A missionary church is a great and God honored church whether it has 1000,000 or a 1,000,000 members. It is estimated that we have at least 120,000 and we have not been raising as much as $25,000 for the great work of foreign missions. We are aiming to raise that amount this year. Will we do it? This would relieve the situation considerably, but how long would it take to put our work on the proper basis at that rate? We must aim at something larger if we would have the clouds lifted and the brighter day to hasten its coming. Oh! when will we awake and lift up our eyes and look on the fields that are already white unto the harvest? The Macedonian cry is coming up from every land. The command of our Lord is ringing in our hearts, "Go ye." Will we heed the call and obey the command?

The situation that confronts us at this time would justify a call for $50,000 this year for foreign missions. We have played so long with the situation it will take something that has promise of large things to lift us out of the meshes of the present situation. We must undertake to do a work that will make its appeal to the man of large means as well as the man of small means. All men like to have a part in things that are worth while. Can we get our people to see that missions are worth while, yea, that they are the supreme business of the church? Our force on the field ought to be enlarged this year by all means. We should send out at least a half dozen new missionaries. We will not do our duty, if we do not send them out. This may seem like idle talk in view of the present situation, but you must feel that it is not far from the mark. We must try to redeem the past by redoubling our efforts and at once entering upon an aggressive campaign. Oh! where is the person that has felt the glow of Christ's love in his heart, that could be satisfied with the work that we have been doing to evangelize the world? "Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion." "Pray ye, therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into the harvest."

The above task, as outlined, lies at the door of the ministers of the Christian church as a glorious possibility. If they will do their duty as leaders of the people, the mission treasury of our church will have such an influx of funds as it has never enjoyed before. The lack in missionary offerings is due to the failure of the ministers to lay the matter upon the hearts of the people. I say this from personal knowledge and experience. I have found that when the preacher espouses a cause in earnest the people fall in line and surpass even his fondest expectations. The larger part of the blame for the present situation lies at our door. It is a sad fact, but nevertheless it is true. Will we rise in the strength of our Lord and do your duty? Will we aim to put $50,000 in our mission treasury this year? We can do it if we will. Let the Lord lead in the effort and we will follow in much prayer. Let us lay the cause upon the hearts of our people. God will give a richer harvest. A new day will come to all our churches. Thousands will no doubt be added to our church roll. The accomplishment of such a task will put new confidence in us. Shall we undertake the task? The Lord help us to undertake.

WHY DR. MORRILL IS WANTED IN JAPAN.

I. For twenty-five years the Mission Board has greatly exerted itself, both in the matter of money and of power, in behalf of its Japan Mission and church.

The church has now come to its Quarter Century celebration with much rejoicing and is desirous that Mr. Morrill should be present in order that we may show to the Board, through him, how thankful we are for all this help.

II. We believe it will be mutually helpful for such a special representative of the Board to come and see directly what has been the result of these twenty-five years of work of both missionaries and Japanese pastors and Bible Women; what are the difficulties and requirements of a successful prosecution of the work, and to come into close and direct touch with the workers in our own homes and in the midst of our own fields of work.

We desire such an inspection of the work for we believe that it will result in large sympathy and help greatly in the future development of the work in Japan. And so we have invited him because we want him, want him very much, and hope and pray that he may be sent to us.

Sakurai Masaji.

Moto Wakuya Mura; Dec. 10, 1912.

From Japan.

Ischinoski, September 23, 1913.

Dear Dr. Morrill:

As Bro. McCord is writing up some things about the journey, it may not be so necessary for me to enter into full particulars. It has been at least seven or eight years since I went about in this northern field, but I am quite impressed with the opportunities for preaching the gospel. A few days ago four of us went out to a place where the gospel had never been preached and we had a good audience to listen to us as long as we thought the meeting ought to continue. Saturday night Matsukawa and I went to another place where so far as we know the gospel had never been preached unless it was done in the time of Bro. Jones. We made no attempt to hire a room but began out on the street by singing a song. Bro. Matsukawa preached a sermon and left me to follow. I preached about forty minutes and followed up Matsukawa to another place where he had opened a second meeting. He had to take a train and left me with his audience and I preached a second sermon and returned to Ichinoseki on my wheel.

Yesterday was Sunday. I was asked to address the Sunday school, to preach twice and to teach a class of young men in English. The subject in the morning was "A Glorious Savior" and in the evening "A Glorious Salvation." When I was in America it seemed to me like I lost a good part of my ability to talk in Japanese. But when I preach two or three times a day, I seem to get into the swing of things again.

It has been impressed on us that there are great possibilities along the lines of street preaching and that by means of it many people outside of the preaching centers may be reached. Heretofore as missionaries we have tied ourselves rather closely to the places where we have settled pastors. It seems to us that one might plan a trip, or trips, of a month each and go into the interior places where the presence of a foreigner on the street would at once draw a crowd to whom the gospel might be preached. The need for carrying out such a plan is principally money for travel and this averages in the neighborhood of 75cts to a dollar a day. But in addition to preaching the missionary ought to have a stack of Testaments for sale and a quantity of tracts for distribution.

A young man at this place desires to study for the ministry. With the stopping of our school and with the needs in every direction because of the insufficient appropriation, all the balance of the money which remained over when the school closed was sub-appropriated to help fill out the deficiencies elsewhere, so that we are for the present shut off from taking on more students. When our school begins again, if it seems best to begin it. I am strongly persuaded that we can not do better than to give the students two years of quiet study. Music, personal work and some English and let them fill out later in some more advanced school. We can do this where we are not fitted to do the other.

What pleasure, what encouragement it would give us to greet face to face representative of those many who, with earnestness and sympathy and love, have so greatly helped us through these twenty-five years.

We do not want our celebration to be a mere ceremony. We want it to become a fact in the life of our church, a fact of power, leaving us a great influence, a mighty impulse for enlarged future activities and deeper spiritual living.

And we believe that the presence of the Foreign Missionary Secretary will be a powerful factor in bringing this to pass.

But this is not all. The little time which he may be able to spare for a bit of field work, visiting different places where we have churches and where we do evangelistic work will be a like important and helpful, not only bringing him and through him all of you into a closer knowledge of the work here, but will add prestige and consequent power and influence to our own work in after years.

Some ten or more years ago Dr. Bishop came to Japan, and the Christians can never forget that visit nor the help and encouragement which he gave, nor the continuous uplift to the work.

And now that we are confronting a new turning point in the history of our church here we believe such a visit from Dr. Morrill would be of tremendous advantage to the work. The more we think of it the more earnestly we desire his coming.

Y. Naruse.

Tuskidate, Dec. 11, 1912.

Nakaniida, Japan, Sept. 28, 1912.

Dear Bro. Morrill:

I have been so busy and often so tired that it has been quite impossible to keep up any account of the interesting things we daily meet on this journey. When I saw at Kannariand I spent two nights. I either had visitors at the hotel or was making calls among the brethren. At this place being alone I conducted the meetings in my own way. The first thing to do after arranging place of meeting was to go out on the street with tracts and as they are distributed, announce the meeting. Naturally the children gather in swarms and I begin a special street sermon to them. The older people attracted by the crowd also stop to listen and many in the crowd hear the gospel, or a fragment of it, for the first time.

At the preaching services the greater part of the audience is composed of children who want to see and hear the foreigner. Many others even among the adults have only curiosity to hear what the strange babbler with his broken Japanese may babble.

A prominent fact with all the places visited is that while many Christians have been made, owing to the instability of the Japanese population, churches are constantly weakened by removals to other places. This helps to explain why it is that sometimes in places where no preacher has ever gone sometimes one and sometimes several Christians are glad to come to us and declare their faith.

When the weather is good and the roads not mountainous or muddy, one of the pleasures of the journey is to get on one's wheel with all the baggage it will carry and go off to the next place riding amid the golden rice fields and amid the everchanging beautiful scenery of beautiful Japan.

At Tsukidate I found a thriving church in charge of Bro. Naruse who in the summer came to the North from Opi. His church might almost be called an official church because of the number of officers of the city that belong to it. In this place the most influential element of the town is in the church. It speaks well for the hopefulness of the situation. Here ten years ago I came for a meeting in company with Bro. McCord and late after the meeting a young man named Kanno stopped to talk about the wonderful Jesus. We kept up the conversation until midnight and just at midnight he decided to be a Christian. I think he was the first convert in the town. He intended to be a Bible student but his health was too poor and last year the Lord called him home to enjoy in reality the glories which for nine years had been looking forward to in anticipation.

At this pace we met an old man named Hara who all his life had tried to satisfy his heart without any religion but without any success. From his testimony one would judge that the Holy Spirit had come to his heart in a wonderful way revealing his sinfulness and the need of forgiveness and dependence on God, for he says he found Christ without the help of any teacher. He is now a very earnest Christian.

But what was equally strange was the conversion of an old woman now eighty eight years old who in her extreme old age found peace and joy in Jesus.

Near this town within easy striking distance are several villages to which Bro. Naruse can easily go. One wishes it were possible to provide all our men with bicycles with which to save the high jinriksha fare which they often have to pay in travel. At this town we had an invitation to address 200 students of the middle school. Having been so much with students it was quite a privilege and both Bro. McCord and myself gave addresses, his being entirely in English and mine in English with a fellow who didn't know very much Japanese named Woodworth to interpret. We preached the gospel but was not labeled that way, the discussion of religion being forbidden in the schools though some teachers make statements which are subversive to all religion and are a travesty of the truth.

You have doubtless heard of the conversation which the mole and the robin had one fine spring day as the robin sat on the branch of the apple tree amid the fragrant blossoms and sang out the joy of its heart. Then the mole stuck its head out of a hole in the ground and the following conversation took place:

"What are you making somuch beastly noise for?"

"I am happy."

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Dr. Warren H. Denison, pastor of the Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., has been chosen to preach the baccalaureate sermon for this year and has accepted. He comes at the invitation of the Philologian Literary Society.

The annual public entertainment of the Clio Literary Society will occur on the evening of Washington's Birthday. Mr. C. B. Riddle will deliver an oration. There will be two original humorous selections—one by Mr. W. T. Dowd and the other by Mr. R. S. Rainey. Messrs. E. T. Cotten and W. J. Cotten on one side and Messrs. J. L. Farmer and W. C. Morgan on the other will discuss the Panama Canal question, while Messrs. Woodward and Heatwole will furnish musical numbers. A splendid exercise is anticipated.

Dr. Atkinson is away this week selling the additional issue of $5,000 of stock for the Christian Publishing Association. He ought to find no difficulty in placing it, since it is a most worthy and promising enterprise.

Dr. Newman made what he modestly styled an off-hand talk Sunday at the regular preaching hour. The congregation regarded it as a great discourse. He did not take his text "till he saw the whites of the eyes of his congregation," according to the custom of long ago, but his sermon was based upon years of close, consecutive study and analysis of the Word.

A new hard-wood floor, of Michigan maple, has been placed on the platform of the College chapel. It was certainly needed and is a welcome improvement.

Mrs. Lawrence and children have returned from a visit to Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va.

Miss Cornelia Watson has been quite ill for two weeks, but is now recuperating. Her sister, Mrs. Fon Garrison and brother, Mr. D. W. Watson, both of northern Alamance have been over to visit here.

The N. C. Inter-collegiate Peace contest occurs in Raleigh, February 28 to March 2. Elon's local contest has not yet been held. Mr. W. J. Bryan is to speak during the Peace Conference that follows the contest.

Mrs. Machen was visited this week by her sister, Mrs. Peebles, of Durham.

One of the excitements in the power house went wrong this week and the other got so near wrong that a new 3 K. W. had to be purchased.

Mr. R. W. Fitch, Union Ridge, N. C., visited Dr. Watson's family Sunday.

There is great satisfaction here in the promotion of Prof. A. Lucius Lincoln, Charlotte C. H., Va., to the position of Inspector of Elementary Schools for the State of Virginia, a position carrying with it a salary of $2,000. Elon feels proud of her distinguished alumnus and feels sure he will fill the new post with credit and efficiency.

The new catalogue is now in progress of making. It will show many changes in accord with advancing conceptions of education. Our own Publishing House will bring it out. Doesn't that sound well?

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There are so many kinds of experts, faultfinders, and reformers in these days of progress that one wonders how our forefathers lived and brought the world up to its high standard for this generation. Among all the dangers discovered and the remedies offered are the fateful effects of "child-labor" and the cry for "compulsory education."

A recent report from Thomas Dowley, Jr., who was sent out by the "Department of Commerce and Labor," as one of the persons to investigate and gather facts as to the employment of children in mills, says that in many cases such employment is not only harmless but a blessing. This is so much opposed to the suppositions of would-be friends of children and benefactors of society that it should open the eyes of those who have received opinions for facts. By brother Duncan, who superintended "Sterling Cotton Mills" at Franklinton, N. C., for many years told me that a man came to his office and requested him to sign an obligation not to run the mill at night; that night work was injurious to health. My brother told him that his experience was that the night force had better health than the day force; and he thought the reason was, that the day force spent part of their time out of the mill in the night air, while the night force spent their hours, when not asleep, in the day air and sunshine. There was experience against theory.

Many people are shedding tears over poor children at work in mills and never shed a tear over rich children engaged in dissipation. As between the two the rich are to be the more pitied. In proportion to numbers the facts would no doubt prove that poor working children are as healthy as the rich idle children. It is better for children to be in the mill at work than on the streets learning mischief. It is better for children to be in mills helping to support widowed mothers than to be on the street breaking mothers' hearts.

As to education, there is much idle talk. Many of the schools are no better than the mills. The rooms are more crowded and often the atmosphere is no better than the atmosphere in the mills. In fact many of the teachers are incompetents, having crammed enough to pass examination, but more interested in parties and cards than the real welfare of the children. Often false ideas are crowded into the minds of the young, with no helpful instruction and example for the children.

As to "compulsory education" it is a misnomer. Perhaps you will understand when I use the phrase "compulsory religion." You can no more compel education than you can compel character. You can offer opportunity for both, but the individual must choose and cultivate them. Rich people have as much difficulty in educating their children as poor parents. Advantages do not all lie in the path of prosperity. We live in a world of fair averages. Paid experts and paid benefactors do not appeal very strongly to reason and conscience. The sooner we learn that the open school-house and the open church put education and salvation within the reach of all who will accept and profit by them the better. They cannot be given as anti-toxin to the ignorant and the evil. Compulsory education is utopian and deceptive. Much of the ignorance and sin are fostered in the evil lives of people and not in the failure of the state and the church to provide for the intellectual and spiritual welfare of the rising generation. Honest work hurts nobody. Some children have all school privileges and die ignorant and useless; some children who never entered school are wise and useful. Do not let the theorist bewilder whole states and reformers stop work that is honorable.

What has been said in no way discounts proper care of the physical condition of childhood, nor the education of all who can and will receive this boon of Christian civilization.

W. W. Staley.

Health is more than the absence of sickness. It is being well and a little bit more. It is not difficult to be in such a physical, mental and normal state that we can tell our neighbors and friends that we are "well this morning, thank you." It means more than simply feeling that we have no aches and pains. It means an exuberance of life and energy. It means that you have strength for your task and a little energy to spare.

NORFOLK LETTER.

My Dear Little Children:

So far, I have been writing mostly for the big, busy, owlish "grownups," but this time I am sending in something for you.

I wrote this a long, long while ago for a very sweet and dainty little friend who lived in a big, nice home and would never eat bread if she could get cake. I call it,

THE STORY THE LOAF TOLD.

Little Nell, just home from school threw herself upon the lounge, "tired to death," as she said. Only eight, she was the baby of the family. "Tell me a story, Mamma," she begged.

But just then Mamma was too busy. "Try to think up one for yourself, dearie," she said.

How "comfy" it was there upon the lounge, thought Nell, as she fixed a big, fat cushion under her head. She tried to recall the things that had happened during the day. Let's see, there was her 'rithmetic. She had recited well in it, her teacher had said. And then, Tommy Jones had been so naughty that he had to be kept in. And then—oh yes, there was the bakery, and the pleasant baker-man who had given her a cream-puff as she came home. U-m-m-h, how delicious it was. If she just had another one.

Oh, dear, what had happened? For, here she was, right back in the shop again, with cream-puffs and pies and fruit-cakes all about. But, the funniest part was that they all seemed to know her and to be looking at her.

And then the strangest, strangest thing happened. A fine-looking Loaf of Bread spoke to her. "I will tell you a story if you wish," it said.

"Oh, please do," cried Nell, getting over her fright which she had felt at first. And all the cream-puffs and pies and fruit-cakes drew near and listened while the Loaf began:

"Long, long ago, before I was a Loaf, my home was in a wheatfield. I came from tiny seeds that grew upon stalks which nodded and waved by the millions in the soft breezes that blew gently over the far-away plains.

"The stalks that bore us were at first very tiny. When they began to peep above the ground they were so thick that the whole earth seemed covered with a green carpet.

"One day, just after the frost began to bite, a great, white blanket of snow fell upon the carpet and under this worm cover we slept cozily until Spring.

"When Spring came our snow-blanket melted and the gentle sun smiled upon us. Our stalks grew so fast that you could almost see them. As summer came on, they began to turn a golden yellow. By and by, they waved and billowed like a sea of molten brass in the June sunshine. People came to admire our fields and to look upon our beauty."

The Fruit-Cake, who always put on airs looked around enviously. "You use might fine language for a plain Loaf," it said.

"Your dough was made from the same flour mine was," the Loaf retorted, and continued:

"At harvest-time the little grains from which I came were taken to a Mill in a great city." Here it seemed almost to squirm. "Oh, dear," it said, "what a fearful thing they did to them at the Mill. They were poured into a thing called a hopper and down this they rushed, headlong, and fell right in between two, awful, whirling stones that ground them into a million atoms."

"How terrible," Nell gasped.

"Yes, but at last I came out of the Mill as beautiful, white Flour," said the Loaf. "I was brought to the bakery house here and made into Bread as you see me."

Nell had become so excited over the story of the Loaf that she had forgotten the Cream-Puffs, to whom she usually gave all her attention. So, these too, became envious.

"I think you've talked about enough," said a big, fat Puff to the Loaf.

"I'm feeling sour myself," said a Lemon Pie.

"But you can't impose upon my big brother," said a Bun, hopping over to the Loaf.

"S-s-s-h," hissed a little Ginger-Snap. "The baker is coming." At this, they were all quiet.

Looking around, Nell saw dozens and dozens of big, handsome brown loaves upon clean, shining metal racks. "There seem to be more Loaves than anything else," she remarked. At this the pies and tarts winced.

"I suppose they make more of us because we are more needed," said the Loaf.

"But I am more fashionable," said a Fruit-Cake.

"People can't live on fashion," said the Loaf.

Just then a lady entered with a little, ragged waif of a girl about Nell's own age. "This little girl is hungry," she said to the baker. "Let her have some bread."

"Good-bye," said the Loaf, as the baker prepared to wrap it up for the hungry child. "I may be plain, and not especially fashionable, but still, I can be a blessing." The child took it with a grateful light in her eyes.

While the Loaf had been talking, Nellie had climbed upon the counter. She had started to get down when she slipped and fell, hitting the floor with a tremendous "thump." "Wake up, Nell, supper is ready," she heard a voice saying, as she rose from the floor where she had fallen from the lounge while asleep. When she went into the dining-room the first thing she saw was a big, brown Loaf, cut into tempting slices.

"Oh, Mamma," she exclaimed, laughing, "this bread reminds me of my funny dream." And then she told the dream as we have told it to you.

CARELESSNESS AGAIN.

I have thought for some time I would write the dear Christian Sun, but through carelessness I have failed until now. Looking over The Sun I notice an article headed "Carelessness", and reading it over I resolved to try and be benefitted by it. I think the pastors do extremely well under the circumstances. They go to their churches on Saturday and only a few of the members come to be fed after he has prepared the best food that he can possibly prepare for them. And when he has finished preaching he has to get down on his knees and pray for them for there is hardly any one that will lead in prayer and seldom will one ever say amen. Dear brethren who can blame the preacher for being a little careless? I have been made to wonder at the present state of affairs. How long will it be before we can't even have Saturday meeting on account of carelessness? Brethren of the laity let us put aside our carelessness and go to work for the Lord in earnest and the Lord will prosper us beyond our expectation.

—The California Christian Advocate declares that the moral citizenship of California is making a desperate effort to present to the world a clean Panama-Pacific Exposition. Two bills are now before the California Legislature; one, the Red Light Injunction and Abatement Law, directed against the "Barbary Coast" of San Francisco and social evil contingencies of the State, the other, to prohibit the sale of alcoholic liquor on or within one hundred and fifty yards of the Exposition grounds. May the moral citizenship prevail in its undertaking.

We may, and many of us do, overeat, but very few persons ever overbreathe. In other words, we may get more food than is good for us, but it would be difficult for any of us to get too much good air.

Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor.

This department under the direction of Young People's General Convention. Frequent news items from Sunday schools, organized classes, and C. E. societies are desired. If you are interested in either or about to organize, address the department's editor,
CHARLES A. HINES, Editor and Cor. Sec.,
Greensboro, N. C.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

Every Sunday school should make Easter a red letter day in the school. There is no other time that takes hold of young people's hearts and minds as does this occasion. Make the most of it.

One of the most attractive publications of the United Society is the annual "Story of the Year," which tells of the principal events of Christian Endeavor in 1912. The book is edited by Rev. R. P. Anderson. It may be had for ten cents from the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Tremont, Temple, Boston, Mass. This amount could not be better invested.

In a recent article for a syndicate of papers, William T. Ellis, one of the foremost religious workers of the age speaks in the highest terms of Christian Endeavor. Among other things he says: "The potency of Christian Endeavor was not realized by its promoters, nor is it to be measured by their followers. It belongs among the unmeasurable spiritual forces of our generation."

The organized class must be led on from one stage to another. Too many new things must not be tried at once. Introduce one good thing first, work it out, then take up the next greatest need of the class. Be sure that all work undertaken is definite and worthy. If it be the support of one poor family, or the education of one needy young man, it will be better than a lot of hap-hazard charity or money constantly spent upon members of the class for their own pleasure.

Not enough attention is given to the singing. Just a few days ago I heard of a school at 9:30 in the morning opening its service with "Now the day is over, Night is drawing nigh." No wonder there was a laugh in the school that disturbed the thoughts of people whose minds should have been directed otherwise. The superintendent ought to select the hymns in advance with a view to have them appropriate to the lesson text.

It will add a great deal to the impression the school makes upon its own members and visitors if a little system is used in getting the classes to their places after the opening exercises. It is well for the superintendent to stand upon the platform and call the classes by members. Begin with the youngest members, and as fast as one class gets lined up and started for its class meetingplace or class room, let the next youngest class follow. This can be soon worked out so that it will take only a minute or two and in the end the classes will get to their places more quickly than if permitted to go in confusion.

ABRAM AND LOT.

Suggestion for S. S. Lesson Feb. 23—Gen. 13:1-18.

Time—Estimated about B. C. 2255 (Savage); 1918 (Ussher).

Places.—Out of Egypt, into and quite generally throughout Palestine.

Persons.—Abram, his wife, Lot, his herdsmen, Canaanites, Perizzites, men of Sodom.

Golden Text.—The blessing of Jehovah, it maketh rich: And he addeth no sorrow therewith.—Prov. 10:22.

Leading Thought.—God's blessings only joy.

The purpose of this lesson is to give another chapter in the life of Abram, who is to be blessed to be a blessing to all peoples, in God's plan for the salvation of the world.

In detail the lesson shows (1) how Abram and Lot, when there was danger of trouble between them, preserved inviolate their mutual friendship, subordinating business to friendship, safeguarding friendship as something more highly prized than wealth; (2) how Lot's choice took him among evil associates, and how God renewed his covenant with Abram.

Lesson Contrasts.

In our last lesson we saw Abram enter Canaan a stranger. In this lesson we find him well established there. In that lesson his prosperity had already begun, but in this lesson we find him very rich, and quite the equal of the Canaanitish chiefs. Abram had been called to leave his father's house; and in the scene before we beheld him separate from the last remaining member of that house. In last Sunday's lesson our attention was chiefly fixed upon separation from; in this lesson we can fix it upon separation unto. Abram was separated from his native land, but separated unto a land which should be his God-given inheritance. He was separated from many human friends, that he might become more notably the friend of God.

Object Lessons.

Offer a child a book or an apple. Robert now has the apple because that is what he chose to have. He could just as well have had the book if he wanted it. What he got depended on his own choosing. This wonderful power of choice is given to everyone of us, and we use it in many ways every day of our lives. All we have or are, really depends on how we use the power of choice. To choose carefully and unselfishly means happiness. Be careful how you choose in both small things and great. Lot made a selfish, unwise choice, and brought sorrow upon himself and his household. Abram made a generous choice and gained instead of losing.

A mirror held close against a boy's eyes. What do you see in the mirror? Henry? Yourself? Would you be willing to walk through a crowded street with a mirror before your eyes? Why not? People would laugh. Yes, probably they would. Besides that, you would stumble or be run over. It is not a common thing for people to go about with mirrors before their eyes, but it is not uncommon for them to be blinded by having self before their mind's eye all the time. One who thinks about himself and his own interests most of the time, cannot see clearly what is best and what is right. One of the men of whom to-day's story tells made a foolish choice because he had his own selfish interests before his mind's eyes.

Lesson Announcement.

Several Sundays ago we had a story about the rainbow as the token of God's covenant. Next Sunday we are to have a very beautiful story of the stars as the token of another covenant with God. I wish the boys and girls would try to find out this week something about the peculiarities and strength of the Jewish people in the world today. See if you can find out why the present Jewish race is a proof that God kept his promise to Abram. Next Sunday we will have the story of the promise made over thirty-six hundred years ago.

Dr. Clark in Northern Europe.

By the middle of January Dr. Clark, accompanied by his youngest son, Sydney, had reached Trondhjem, far north in Norway.

Two meetings were held in the city, one of them in the great cathedral, the most famous in all Scandinavian, which was packed to the doors. The other meeting, held in a church, was also crowded.

From Norway Dr. Clark travelled to Findland, holding four meetings in three days, besides conferring with Christian Endeavor workers. Finland is wide-awake regarding Christian Endeavor, and is enthusiastic about the movement. All the great cathedral churches are open to Christian Endeavor. The cathedral in Aabo, from which city Dr. Clark writes, was begun in the year 1229, and is a wonderful structure.

DAVID LIVINGSTONE.

A Christian Endeavor Meeting Celebrating the Anniversary of a Great Missionary.

The Centenary of the birth of David Livingstone will be celebrated by many churches the week before March 19th. With this in view much of this lesson is devoted to Livingstone, who was himself a medical missionary.

The Topic is "Medical Missions." Matt. 10:7-11.

Glimpse of Livingstone.

"David Livingstone, whom most men would place at the head of the great Protestant missionaries, was a poor Scotch weaver's lad, born in 1813, March 19, just a century ago. With part of his first week's wages as 'piecer-boy' at a loom he bought a Latin grammar, laying the rest of the money in his mother's lap. By the age of nineteen he had decided to be a medical missionary, and after obtaining a most practical training he reached South Africa in 1841 as a missionary of the London Society—a connection he maintained till 1856. He began with Moffat at Kuruman. It was there he married Mary Moffat, who made him a noble wife, and near there he had the famous fight with a lion, which bit through his arm bone.

"Livingstone's chief work, to the outward eye, was exploration. With toil and peril such as only a heroic spirit and stout body could endure, he opened up the Zambezi country from ocean to ocean, and the region around the great African lakes, many of which he discovered. He became one with the natives, and obtained a marvelous ascendancy over them,—an influence steadily used to promote the cause of Christ.

"After leaving the London Society, he maintained his work by the sale of his books. With the exception of a brilliant visit to England in 1857, he buried himself in the Dark Continent. Stanley's search for him and his discovery of the aged and almost starved apostle in 1871 an intercourse with the Stanley's spiritual birth—are well known to all.

"The devoted man would not return to civilization, but continued his great work. On one of his latest journeys he read the Bible through four times. He grew more and more feeble; fainting, he had to be borne in a litter over miles of swamp; his men built him a rough hut, left him for the night, and in the morning of May 1, 1873, his loving black servant, Susi, found him on his knees by his bed, having passed away in the act of prayer. His faithful followers buried his heart under a tree, embalmed his body, and laboriously carried it a nine months' journey to the coast, so that it now rests in Westminster Abbey—the chief glory of that glorious shrine."

Facts of Medical Missions.

Missionaries were driven out of Kashmir until a medical mission was started, and at once opened the way for the gospel.

British trade with India, the beginning of European rule in Asia, began with a cure wrought by an English physician upon an Indian princess who had been burned.

There is about one medical missionary to every 2,500,000 persons in heathen lands; to the same number of persons in the United States there are 4,000 doctors.

The founder of an important mission in China declares that every attempt to get a hold in a new city failed until a medical missionary had first won confidence by healing cases beyond the skill of the native physicians.

Once seven American missionaries in China wrote to the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society begging for a medical missionary, saying that their work was greatly hindered because no medical work was connected with it.

The important work of the famous medical missionary in China, Dr. Mackenzie, started with his healing the wife of the great Chinese statesman, Li Hung Chang, for whom the native doctor said they could do nothing more, except to give over again all the drugs which she had already taken.

David Livingstone won his way through Africa with his medicine-chest and a few surgical instruments. Peter Parker opened the door of China to commerce and missions by the point of the lancet. Dr. Allen opened Corea to missions by using his surgical skill in saving the life of one of the native princes after native doctors had tried in vain to staunch the flow of blood with sealing-wax. Dr. Elmslie won the way for Christianity into Kashmir when evangelical missionaries had tried in vain. Dr. Carr paved

FACTS ABOUT CHINA.

Students in China are supposed to recite in class. They think the professor is paid to tell them, so why should they tell the professor? A missionary reports that the Chinese memory is wonderful. Girls in the schools can recite whole volumes at lightning speed without a mistake. The missionary says that in her school she has made such efforts to teach them to recite slowly that the girls are quite sure that she is deaf!

If a student fails in a Chinese Government school, the fault is with the professor and not with the student and the professor is in danger of losing his position! China, being far behind in civilization is trying to make up for many years she has lost, in rapidly advancing civilization. Many of the Chinese women now think that the foreign teachers who come so far to help them know everything. If the white woman says the world is round, when they have been taught that it is flat, they are very ready to change their belief and consider it round, if the white sister says so.

The poor people use pillows stuffed with grass seed or chaff, and many of them are square with a hole in the center for the ear.

Through missionary influence, many a Chinese girl is now allowed to go foot-free instead of having her toes turned under her feet when she is seven, and bandages wrapped tight around until the feet are deformed, and very painful. Think of the pain of being a little slave-girl, with feet bound tight and having work to do all day long. Many little girls are sold into slavery by their opium-smoking fathers and mothers.

In some parts of China babies only a few days old are fed on peanuts which the mother chews first. Many of the Chinese are very gentle and lovable but totally ignorant.

At the the birth of a baby boy there is great rejoicing. For the first month he is given what is called a "milk name." At the end of the month he is called some name which indicates that the parents do not love him, like "Ugly Dog" or "Cat." This, the ignorant Chinese do, thinking it will deceive the evil spirits whom they think are waiting to steal the baby. At six or seven, the boy receives a school name which he keeps until he gets to be a man, when he acquires a complimentary, high sounding name. Often children are just called number one, number two, etc., and princes as well as babies are named this way. Little girls of the common people are usually called "Ya tou, little slave."

CHURCH NOTES.

Asheboro.

Our services at Asheboro were well attended at the last appointment. It was perhaps the largest audience that we have had there since the reorganization of the church.

On Jan. 12th, I received three into church fellowship. We hope at no distant day to secure a lot for church purposes. The work at Asheboro needs a resident pastor with preaching twice a month—morning and evening—the other two Sundays to be occupied with some near by country church or churches. It would make a good field and I believe that it would be fruitful of result. I believe that Conference ought to see that some such arrangements is made as soon as possible.

High Point.

The first Sunday in Feb. Miss Ethel Clements of the Department of Expression and Physical Culture of Elon College, was with us at High Point and sang for us to the delight of all present at both the morning and evening service. Miss Clements is very popular at High Point. Two other churches were wanting her to sing for them, at one service when they found out she was to be with us.

A stranger in our audience that evening, said, "I am from Kentucky, where they have the finest kind of Christian churches." He was a traveling man and seemed interested in our work. I think that there were two or three traveling men at our evening service. We are always glad to have these strangers drop in and worship with us, and we always give them a glad welcome.

High Point needs a resident pastor devoting full time to the work. We are negotiating for a lot at this place. . .

CONSHOHOCKEN LETTER.

Our congregations at the Gulph Mills Church have been very good recently, even encouragingly so. There were one hundred and twenty eight in the regular Sunday school last Sunday and fifty-eight in the Men's Bible Class, making one hundred and eighty-six. The Bible Class is, almost entirely, made of outside men, yet they desire for their attendance to be added to the regular Sunday school attendance.

A very representative outside man advised me a few days ago that from his view-point the work here has not been as promising before in twenty-five years. That was at least encouraging to us, even taking into consideration that he is possibly mistaken in his judgment, for it is no disadvantage to have work held in such views. But there are several encouraging features in the work just now. Nothing very unusual has transpired in the field here since my last. But advices come stating that the State Board of Education in session last week, decided to do away with the reading of the Bible in the public schools of Pennsylvania. I was told about it by a member of the Board who, although not a professor of religion, was indignant over the matter. I have felt sufficiently the pulse of the State since living here, as it throbs in public sentiment, to feel justified in saying that the people of this good State will not stand for such action on the part of the School Board. Sometimes those "Higher-up" are called down. Rome seems to have driven another nail and scored another point, but we must believe that it is only apparent and for the moment.

Rev. Z. A. Poste retires from the Lewisburg pastorate to return to Franklin, N. C. He is held in high esteem by the people of this Conference, and his words weigh. It has been a genuine pleasure to this writer to be with him occasionally, even, since coming this way. He was once my instructor at school and in him I have ever felt like confiding. Lewisburg is an important pastorate and needs a strong man to succeed brother Poste, who has so ably served them for past few years. The winter has been mild, hardly as cold thus far as an Eastern Va. winter, until February 1st, since which time we have had several light snows and low temperature. Dandelions are out and it is reported that snakes have been seen in Southern New Jersey coming out from their cold winter retreats. The weather comes to my rescue, you see, when I am lost for something to write about.

Page Valley Letter.

The holidays with their few days of rest over, we are in our field of labor again. My work in the new year is moving along pleasantly, and in some measures successfully. On the 13th inst. we began a series of meetings at Wisler's Chapel. We had good congregations most of the time, and especially toward the close. The visible results were four accessions, and the church seems revived. We have a small membership here, but there are some faithful ones who desire the success of their beloved church, and work here is encouraging.

We held revival services at Wood's Chapel just before Christmas, preaching to good congregations. There were no accessions, but we hope good may have been accomplished that will yet result in the salvation of souls and the building up of our Master's cause at this place. Last Sunday was a good day at Newport. A large and inspiring audience, and three accessions to the church. Four had united with the church during our special meetings, and we expect others to join later. Newport seems to be in fine condition.

On the afternoon of the 8th inst. several members of Leakesville church made a visit to the parsonage and spent an hour or so, which we very much appreciated and enjoyed. I must speak cautiously about one of the objects of their visit; for our good Brother Atkinson seems a bit jealous of us pastors who are not editors; but I will say that our larder was replenished with many good things, for which we are thankful. Bethlehem church and S. S. gave us a beautiful berry set as a Christmas present. When we remember these acts of kindness, and many others from friends of Leakesville church and community who had previously kindly remembered us in a private way; of Newport and East Liberty churches, and others, we are encouraged to try to do more for the Master's cause than ever.

Reunion.

January 6th a large congregation met at the home of "Uncle James Brady's" near Pleasant Grove Christian church to celebrate the 97th birthday of the oldest citizen in Randolph Co., N. C. This was also a reunion of the family. It was said that nearly all present were relations of Bro. Brady. They showed a great token of appreciation on this occasion in setting before him a most sumptuous table. This is a remarkable man. Ex-sheriff Hayworth said that "Uncle James" was one of the most prompt citizens in Randolph Co., N. C., that he was usually the first to list, and the first to pay his taxes. He paid all his debts promptly, kept no running accounts. He is one of the most peaceable, trustworthy, honorable and industrious citizens in that county. When he was 94 or 95 years old he did his own plowing and work and raised enough to support his family. He is now able to walk any where about the home and do some little chores. His mind is clear and active. This writer stood in his porch after dinner and preached from Psalm 71:9. "Cast me not off in time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth." The choir sang beautifully, "Shall we meet beyond the river." "Uncle James" made a good talk to the young people, telling them how to live for God. The choir then sang, "God be with you till we meet again," while the large congregation passed by him many of them shaking his hand for the last time and wishing him well. He is the oldest member of Pleasant Grove Christian church, Randolph Co., N. C. He has been faithful and true to his church that he loves so dearly. Thus passed into history a most pleasant occasion in which all present seemed to take a deep interest. God bless "Uncle James" and give him yet many years of happiness on earth.

Dear Children and Friends:

You will see by looking over the list of many S. S. offerings that we are gaining some. Our borders are being extended into new territory; and, I trust as the letters reach the schools they will receive careful consideration and more of them will answer favorably. All our wheat is gone and we have bought the first barrel of flour this week so you see that adds about $9.00 more each week, to the cash expenses. In that case wheat is the same to us as money.

We were glad to have Rev. C. H. Rowland visit us while at Elon engaged in the meeting. The children enjoyed his talk.

Rev. P. T. Klapp paid us a short visit this week.

Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Short, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery, also Mr. and Mrs. Fuller were among our visitors last Sunday. We are glad to have our friends come and see us.

Uncle Emory.
 Sanford, N. C.,
 February 8, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I will write my letter and send my dime for February as it is getting late. I'm still going to school and my lessons are hard and I have to study hard, and I don't have time to write an interesting letter. Well I will close or now.

Your niece,

Pearl Way.

It takes hard work to master hard lessons, but play is enjoyed so much better when the lessons are done. I hope you will have good luck and pass on all your work.

Stem, N. C.,
 February 8, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I have been thinking for some time that I should like to join the band of cousins; and send some dimes to you for the Orphanage. So I shall begin by sending you a dollar. You may consider this money as a belated Thanksgiving offering. I shall try to be a little more prompt after this.

Mamma and I have some grand times here in our home, during the day, while "Daddy" is in the school room at work.

Your new little nephew,

R. P. Crumpler, Jr.

We are glad to have you join the "band" and hope you will help to get more interested. May be some day you will be a teacher.

Gilmertown, Va.,
 February 5, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

We are sending our dues ($3.75) for this year. Hoping you may have a bright and prosperous year. With much love for you and the cousins.

Esther, Wm., Gay and Willard Johnson.

Now that is fine; I see you don't expect to get behind.

Portsmouth, Va.,
 February 5, 1912.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I have been thinking of writing and sending our dues for five months though get so behind in my studies in November when I was ill with diphtheria, and when I got well had to study to catch my class again. Though I passed to the 5th grade with my class, now I feel good about passing and will send my back dues for October, November, December, January, and February, and I hope that will pay us up and will try to do better next time. I will close with love to you and the cousins, from you little nieces, Blanche & Doris Saunders.

"Oh, the trees and the flowers and the about. What is it? beauty of the world charms me. Besides I have a beautiful nest with beautiful blue eggs in it and in a few days I shall see my beautiful baby robins."

Well, that's all nonsense. No one has dug into the earth and examined everything and tasted everything in it more than I have, and I want to tell you that there isn't anything finer than fishworms." So he ended the argument and disappeared, but I have wondered sometimes if there is not now and then a mole-eye philosopher in the world who is about as wise.

It would hardly be worth while to try to go over the names of the places we visit and of the meetings he hold because there is much of sameness about them and if the names are as for you to remember as they are to me I would not feel it especially profitable to you to know them.

We had up again and go up hill and down until we reach our next preaching point which is seven and a half miles distant. We find in several towns Protestant christians who have been converted elsewhere. But the Greek church has been doing work in many of the towns for many years and they have in places a large membership. But one of their members came to one of our meetings drunk and they seem to have no special standard of morals. We judge that like the Catholic church it is a degenerate form of Christianity.

As we went on our way and got hot, tired and thirsty we stopped at a wayside teashop to rest. On the godshelf were the images of fowls in pairs, the images of the god of wealth and of good luck and another indescribable image devoted to phallic worship. On being questioned the woman undertook to give an explanation of the special virtues attached to each but the substance of all it was health and wealth and success now and here. Whatever may be one's sins and illdesert, and without reference to a change of character. It seems sometimes that superstitions have as many lives as a cat is said to have and they are hard to kill. But as we drank our tea and ate the cake, I tried to explain to her the teaching about the great salvation in Jesus. She listened attentively with troubled face because all I said both showed the inefficiency of her gods.

So we rode on from Tuskidate seven miles and a half to Takashiniza, then fifteen more miles to Nakanida where our meeting was held the last night. We advertised the meeting in the usual way, preached on the street, distributed tracts, sold out all the Testaments we had, preached in the evening and tried as far as our poor abilities permitted to use our opportunity in the spirit of him who said, "Unto me who am less than the least of all the saints is this grace given that I should preach the unsearchable riches of Christ among the heathen."

Sincerely yours in Christ,

A. D. Woodworth.

Clem.

It was a sad message that came over the wires announcing the death of Charles Franklin Clem, which death occurred in Detroit, Mich., December 13, 1912, as the result of a fall from a building. Bro. Clem was born in Shenandoah County, Va., July 2, 1884. On January 2, 1909, I united him in marriage to Miss Jessie Munch. Two or three years ago he and his noble young wife moved west. They lived in several places in Ohio, finally settling in Detroit, Mich., where the accident occurred which in a few hours ended his life. Before leaving Va. he and his wife both united with the church at Dry Run, and remained faithful members. His untimely death was a great shock to the entire community. He was held in high esteem by every one, and all were deeply pained to learn of his death. Surviving him besides his wife are his mother whose name is Amanda J. Clem, one brother and two sisters. Funeral services were held at Dry Run, December 16, 1912, and the remains laid to rest in the family burying ground near by. May God comfort the sorrowing.

How to Get Free of Cataracts

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way
and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of thus suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-eight years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 100 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

For HEADACHE—RICKS' CAPUDINE.
Whether from Colds, Heat, Stomach or Nervous Troubles, Capudine will relieve you. It's liquid-pleasant to take—acts immediately. Try it. 10c

BORN A SECOND TIME.

I call to mind a man who came into a cottage meeting which I was conducting. Had I known his record I think I should have hardly ventured the hope of helping him toward God. He was the profanest man in the village. "Under his tongue was the poison of asps." He was notorious as gambler and debauchee; one of the ugliest customers a man would be likely to meet. God knows why he ever came into that prayer meeting. He scarcely lifted his head, except to flash upon me a pair of the brightest and wickedest eyes I have ever seen. And when the quiet hour had passed he slipped out, apparently unbettered, into the night. Some days went by and then one evening, during the progress of an old-fashioned watch night service, his face appeared among the rest. Near midnight he came and knelt "for the benefit of prayer." There was nothing spectacular about it—just a brother sorry for his sin. He did not groan aloud or cry for mercy. He gave no outward sign of inward revolution. But I wish you might have seen his face as he arose to join in the closing hymn. It was fairly luminous. He had found the Messiah, and he went forth from that service to tell his old companions the story of his conversion; to live a beautiful, consistent life. I saw him last summer, and in his face were "the marks of the Lord Jesus." And they tell me that a whole neighborhood is rich in his consecrated labors. You may describe the change under many names—reformation, turning over a new leaf, conversion. I know not any term so vividly suggestive as the term our Master used: he had been "born the second time."—George Clarke Peck.

THE FAITHFUL ONE.

He is faithful that promised. Heb. 10:23. Golden text Sunday March 2.

The Bible is packed full of wholesome, happily helpful promises. No other book has as many. No other written document promises so much. And yet those promises came from God, and He has always been faithful to keep and to fulfill His promises to the letter. No man can say successfully that God has failed to keep His promises. The lesson of today is a pledge and a promise to Abram. Take the first verse, "Look towards heaven and number the stars, if thou be able. So shall thy seed be." We know now how truly God fulfilled this promise. Even when the Israelites came out of Egypt in Pharaoh's day, all the seed of Abram, there were estimated to be about three million souls. These multiplied into a mighty people whose descendants still continue in the earth and we suppose will for all time. For centuries these people continued one of the most important and powerful nations on earth. Surely God made good His promise to Abram, God always verifies His promises. And Abram believed. There is the key note to this great man's true greatness. Any one can doubt. Any sort of man or mind can be sceptical, indifferent, doubtful. It takes a bold, brave man to believe, and to keep on believing.

There never was a great feat accomplished in this world, a great enterprise built up, a great achievement accomplished without some person of dauntless, almost defiant, faith behind it. The world still wonders at the man of invincible faith who laid the first electric cable across the Atlantic. Any ordinary man would have given up after the first, second or third unsuccessful attempt, but Fields did not.

A man of meager mould would have quit the work of building a trans-continental railroad, and would have declared the scheme too bold, daring, monumental to be carried out. Had Carey and Judson and Morrison been men of little faith they would have laid down the work of winning the pagan world to Christ after years of unsuccessful and tireless effort. But these men believed God, took Him at His word and pushed forward.

I have been thinking recently of "the outstretched hand"; of those who trust themselves, follow sin and refuse to believe in God or trust Him. These do not believe in the outstretched hand. Read of it from Isaiah 14:26-27 "This is the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth; and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all the nations. For Jehovah of hosts hath promised, and who shall annul it? And his hand is stretched out and who shall turn it back?"

The hand of Jehovah stretched out! There it all is. He not only promises us help when we need it and will call upon Him: but the hand is already stretched out; extended in mercy, love, compassion and helpfulness.

If we go to Him He will not turn us off. If we call upon Him He will hear. If we trust in Him He will not forsake us. If we rely upon Him He will save us. Oh! God of promise and of power, help thou our unbelief.

OUR PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Erecting and equipping a house for general printing and publishing purposes is no small undertaking. This writer is painfully aware of that. He and his associates are having experiences these days, too numerous to mention. But, and here is the point of the matter, if we may be used to establish a great enterprise and see it in successful operation, what does the pain matter, or the endeavor? Here was a great opportunity amongst us, an open field, a call to service, for some one or ones. Sooner or later the thing had to be done; and as Dr. W. W. Staley said in a recent Sun letter, there never was a more opportune time than the present in which to begin a printing and publishing business.

So the work goes on. Two professionals were here last week, men sent out by machine producing houses to inspect and supervise the work of installation and erection. These tell us, as others have, that we have so far one of the very best plants, latest, neatest and best equipped, in the State. Only the best has been bought.

We are not yet equipped. Some printing has begun. Jobs of commercial work are being received and are having attention. Some are already printed. Others are being printed. But the full swing is not on yet, and will not be for some days to come.

Because of the better and much larger building than at first contemplated it was decided to increase the amount of paid in capital on stock from $10,000 to $15,000. Last week was the first time we had had opportunity of offering any of this additional stock. The friends received us gladly and purchased stock to the amount of $2,000. Almost to a man, of those seen, some stock was taken. As soon as we can get away again we shall offer the remaining $3,000. Only this amount will be offered. We are near enough in sight of finishing building and equipment now to see that $15,000.00 will do. Of this amount $12,000.00 has been taken and more than half that amount has already been paid in, (the second payment being due March 1). This stock has been bought by the most careful, conservative, far-sighted business men and women of the country. The feeling obtains wherever we have been, that the business is safe, will prosper, and must ultimately develop into splendid and profitable proportions. Why should the House not prosper? Work is abundant. Enough of it can easily be had to keep the plant busy. No one expects any work done without a profit. The Publishing House that undertakes work without profit would have to go out of business. And by the help of God, beloved, we have gone in to stay in. Our building is up and paid for. All bills so far have been met—and the discounts for cash saved.

We ask the co-operation of the people: their kindly word; their patronage; their printing. We will show you a different and a better Christian Sun soon, and a class of work that we believe all will be proud of.

OPENING BLIND EYES.

Miss Helen Keller is one of the marvels and miracles of our times. She was deaf, dumb and blind. No sound entered her ears, no color painted itself on her mind, no sound or word escaped her lips. Twenty-six years ago a noble and energetic and patient woman, Mrs. Macy, undertook to explore the untried fields of this young girl's mind and heart. The results have been strange and wonderful indeed. Still blind and still deaf, she is now cultured, refined, scholarly, and last of all has learned to speak by audible word of mouth. She addressed an audience of nearly a thousand at Montclair, N. J., recently. Being asked what was the greatest ambition of her life she said, "To make others see and hear as well as I can." What an ambition! And what a comment on us who have the faculties of sight and hearing. A soul was unearthed in this woman, and long since she enquired about God, even before being taught of her teacher, and has yielded her heart to Him who while here on earth opened the eyes of the blind and unstopped the ears of the deaf.

In her address according to the daily papers, she began by saying:

"I am going to try to make you feel that we are bound together. I do not like this world as it is. I am trying to make it a little more as I would like to have it. Perhaps you are thinking how blind I have been. You have your eyes, and you behold the sun, and yet you are more blind than I am. It was the hands of others that made this miracle in me. Without my teacher I would be nothing. Without you

I should be nothing. We live by and for each other."

This is true to the Book, and to human nature. Ours is a social world. "No man liveth to himself, no man dieth to himself." We are dependent one upon another. And it behooves each to do his best for the other, as well as for himself.

MISSIONS AND MEN.

In 1800 there were 70,000 Protestant conversions in foreign fields, Fifty years later there were 211,000. In 1880 there were 857,000. In 12 years thereafter there were 1,225,000 communicants in Protestant churches. In 1900 there were 1,371,00. In 1910 there were 2,223,000. That was an increase to surprise the nations and challenge the admiration and approval of men—a gain of nearly one million converts to our Christ in ten years.

In 1800 the number of missionaries in foreign lands could almost be counted upon the fingers of two hands. Today there are 22,000 missionaries in non-Christian lands and the number of those going out is ever on the increase. From 1898 to 1902 seven hundred and eighty volunteers went to foreign fields for Christian service. From 1902 to 1906 one thousand went. From 1906 to 1910 one thousand and two hundred and ninety eight went.

One hundred years ago the total contribution to foreign mission enterprises amounted to about $100,000 annually. Today the regular annual output for foreign missions is $30,000,000. In foreign lands great buildings are being erected in the name of Christ to help humanity, colleges are being built, hospitals, printing presses, and benevolent enterprises are going up, and are on the increase.

In this land of ours, men, big-headed, large hearted, busy-handed, industrious men, are seeing fit to give heed to missions and are being challenged by the largeness and the promise in the work.

What this writer wishes to see most of all is this Christian church of ours catching the spirit of modern missions and entering into this spirit with increased endeavor, zeal, enthusiasm, and contribution to missions, both of men and money in a large and ever increasing ratio. Brethren, have we really caught the spirit of our times as touching the matter of missions?

THE PORTABLE CHURCH.

The Southern Christian Convention, through its Home Mission Board, purchased some weeks ago a portable church building, made of steel, with a seating capacity of three hundred,

The building was delivered and erected all right, under the immediate oversight of Rev. A. W. Lightbourne D. D. Dover, Del. to be used in the bounds of the Delmarvia and Pennsylvania Conference. Soon after its erection a violent storm swept through Delaware and our portable church, with many other buildings, suffered therefrom. The company who furnished the building, however, re erected it after the storm, at their own charge. Dr. Lightbourne under date of Feb. 21st writes, "We reopened our Portable church second Sabbath in February under most favorable circumstances. Last Sunday we organized a strong Sabbath school, there being over forty present. In addition to the new churches at Willis' and Magnolia we have secured ground and material for a new church in Wyoming, Del. This church will be opened in March. My health is poor, but I have never worked so constantly as during the past year. I hope to have a good sized and thoroughly organized Conference in the near future. Young men of talent and education are coming to us. Oh! if our brethren of the West and South could only see the opportunity to enlist in the cause of Christ the men and women of broad culture and practical and altruistic human interest and sympathy! Our church is best fitted to win this progressive and liberal minded class."

We were writing about our portable church, Dr. Lightbourn's personal words were so unwholesome that we took liberty with them. We learn with pleasure of the good work in the Delmarvia Conference and hope to hear further encouraging reports from our Portable church. Dr. Lightbourne's big brain, great heart, and boundless, consecrated energy will prove great factors in making it exceedingly useful and eminently successful. The Portable church proposition is a practical attempt to carry the gospel to the people.

THE SANCTITY OF SUFFERING.

None in this world escapes suffering. He was a true philosopher who said, "He who breathes must suffer; and all who think must mourn." Even Jesus was made perfect through suffering. He did not escape the world's bitter pangs of pain and grief and sorrow. No one of us shall.

But suffering was not sent to break and to bend us; it was sent, it is permitted, to save and to sanctify. Our hearts would grow too hard, our wills too stubborn but for the element of suffering in the world.

We shall look up and get the most out of life and be brave. In this way suffering will be the better borne and mourning will be turned to joy. Brave and regal souls bear their burdens hopefully and look to the hills from whence cometh strength and help.

A DISEASE AND THE REMEDY.

"Hell is only a disease," declares a Boston lecturer. Will some one now discover a serum that will produce immunity.—Norfolk. Virginian-Pilot. Brother, that serum was discovered long ago and we are surprised that our contemporary has lived so long in ignorance of it. Salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ is the remedy, and the only one. Otherwise this awful "disease" will certainly do its deadly work.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Tuesday Dr. A. M. Shannon, President of the American Social Purity League, made an address to the students and won the appreciative admiration of all who heard him.

A letter from Miss Alice True, Utsynomia, Japan, states she has been using Preparing the Teacher, the Teacher Training Course of the Christian Church, with good success in her work as religious teacher and expresses the hope that it may be translated into the Japanese language.

Elon's representative in the N. C. Inter-Collegiate Peace Contest is to be Mr. F. F. Myrick of the Junior Class. The contest occurs in Raleigh Friday evening, February 28th.

Dr. Atkinson's sermon Sunday, based on Isaiah's prophecy of the perpetual increase of Messiah's kingdom was deservedly praised by a much-edified congregation. One visitor, a travelling man, declared to the writer that he had not heard so much gospel in ten years.

The Junior Class treated the Senior Class to an elaborate banquet on the evening preceding Washington's Birthday. It was not only elaborate in the menu served, but in the manner and class of teamusement features. Some people, Christians, too, think you can't have a good social evening without cards and wines. Just let them attend the next Elon Junior-Senior Banquet and have the best time of their lives.

But the crowning event of the College week was the annual Clio Entertainment, which comes on the evening of Washington's Birthday. A pleasing program had been planned and was executed before an appreciative audience of culture and refinement. As is usual on these occasions, music, vocal and instrumental, humorous selections, orations, and a debate were features. The question discussed by the debaters was that the ships of all nations should use the Panama Canal on identical

HOW TO INTRODUCE A MISSION THOUGHT INTO THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

My last article closed with the idea that the evangelization of the world rests upon us as well as the future generations. The question is asked, How is the present generation, whom we seek to instruct in the Bible going to get the idea of the missionary life and its needs?" "How are our boys and girls going to get the idea that missions is a part of the whole Christian life?"

Let us now ask, "What are the churches for but to make missionaries? What is education for but to train them? What is commerce for but to carry them? What is money for but to send them? What is life for but to fulfill the purpose of missions, the enthroning of Jesus Christ in the hearts of men?"—Strong, as the Sunday school is as an institution, dealing in fundamentals in the construction of Christian character, what is it for if it fails to put the missionary wheel in its machinery and turn out a missionary product? If its purpose is to train character in the likeness of Christ, does it not fail, if it fails in enthroning Christ in the hearts of men? How can Christ be enthroned, with all the significance of enthronement, if the one idea for which He came into the world, is omitted? We shall be guilty of an appalling guilt if we do not enthrone missions in our regular school work. The question then is still before us, "How shall it be done?"

Let it be understood in the first place that missions is dreadful when reduced to the "money" idea. This very fact perhaps accounts to some extent for the present missionary situation in our church. Missions is a matter of education along the line of fundamentals, and it is a deplorable fact we have to face, that nothing definite is being done in our Sunday schools. The organization of the "Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies," is a step in that direction, and yet even this is reaching the goal in a very indirect way. It is not fundamental at all. Why not put the children under an every Sabbath instructive program?

This possibly may be best done by the organization of a committee, on which is a representative of every department of the school, who shall be the genius behind the movement in the school. And every effort must be a program of work by the committee, and their ideas shall be, mission study, prayer, giving, teaching, training, adequate missionary instruction in general. The book, "Five Missionary Minutes," referred to previously is regarded to be the best known for superintendents in assembly work of the school.

The missionary committee's idea should be so mapped out in a program that there shall be definite missionary prayer, regular missionary giving, enlisting missionary recruits, and organizing missionary activities. In our missionary institutes held every summer and many times by some during the year, we hear much about banner schools and the standard of excellency. In our annual Conference we heard from our missionary orators that missions is the secret of the success of any church. Why can't we then make the chiefest of the fundamentals a point of banner work and a matter of special attention in our churches? I am persuaded that missionary development cannot be had without missionary institution and training along the lines outlined above.

PRAYER THE INCENTIVE TO MISSIONARY SUCCESS.

BY MRS. M. D. WOLFE, HAVERHILL, MASS.

The history of missions is the history of the Christian Church from the earliest days. It is the history of prayer from the beginning. It is the history of Christ's Kingdom established, when Christ as King began His ministry on earth. And though His ministry among men was short, He gave His disciples the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." That command has been ringing down through all the ages since the time of Christ as the keynote to the world-wide evangelization. Then "Go ye" is a standing order no less urgent now than when first proclaimed by our risen Lord. But with that command another followed almost immediately: "But tarry ye in Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." The power of the Holy Spirit was to be the incentive to spreading the Gospel and this gift of the Spirit is given only in answer to fervent, believing prayer. The possession of this divine Spirit transformed the timid, shrinking apostles into the first Christian missionaries. Wonderful events followed the preaching of those early apostles. Within a very short time three thousand converts, among them the different sects sojourning in Jerusalem, were witnesses for Christ. Those present on the day of Pentecost carried the news from Jerusalem through Judea, in obedience to the command, "And ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Paul the great apostle to the Gentiles and foremost in foreign missionary work, by the Holy Spirit was consecrated to the work, and during his three missionary tours churches were established throughout Asia Minor, Macedonia, Greece and in Rome. These are only a few striking events and examples of the power given to all the missionaries throughout the nineteen centuries of work. Thus we have seen the work committed to the humble, unlearned disciples, and as a result, the marvelous growth and prosperity of the early Church.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions grew out of a small prayer-meeting, known as the "Haystack Prayer-meeting." Composed of a few students from Williams College, who met to consecrate themselves to missionary work. Their societies were soon formed. The missionary impulse was no longer limited to Puritans and Moravians. The Protestant churches everywhere were aroused to fervor for the Gospel. The result was that Bible and tract societies were organized providing means for the printing of the Bible in foreign languages, and scattering the Word of Life broadcast. Each denomination or society sent out its own missionaries, and when for reason the ranks were broken, new workers were soon sent to fill the vacancies and the work grew and prospered.

In this brief survey of missions from the time Christ down through the centuries, we can see only the hand of God as leader in the great work, and His children as instruments to carry out the command. Our hearts have been quickened as we have read of the devotion of these pioneer missionaries, by whose heroic efforts and perils untold nearly every country in the world has been entered and explored, and the door opened to the missionary of Christ.

The history of mission clearly proves to us the need of the Holy Spirit's power to accomplish anything truly great. The lives of missionaries furnish examples of his truth. Their persevering efforts amid untold difficulties have always been coupled with their sense of dependence upon divine help. We believe the great need now, as ever, is a more powerful dependence on the power of the Holy Spirit united with persevering effort.

God in His Word has linked prayer and work together in the closest bonds. We speak of the need of money; but if in answer to earnest prayer the Church could be made to feel more deeply the Spirit's power, there would be no lack to carry on the work. Our work is before us. So let us go forward with new hope and zeal in united, faithful service, trusting in Him whose word cannot fail, that the kingdoms of this world may become kingdoms of light.—Extracts from a paper read before the Woman's Board at Boston, Mass.

THE CHURCH PAPER AS THE PASTOR'S ASSISTANT.

By REV. J. F. JACOBS.

There are many able pastors who carry upon their shoulders the entire burden of their church work. The church officers depend upon the pastor. If money is to be raised the pastor has to raise it, and if the sick or afflicted are to be visited the pastor has to visit them. If prayer meetings, Sunday schools, or young people's societies are languishing it is the pastor who must take up the burden and inject new interest into their work. It is surprising that some churches make but little progress even though they have the ablest pastors when the pastor is the only active worker in the congregation? Is it surprising that many able pastors break down under their heavy burdens of work and find it too much for them? In such cases it is extremely likely that the pastor's assistant, the church paper, has been neglected by the pastor, or by the church officers, and that too small a number of the church members are taking the church paper.

If the church paper is universally subscribed for and goes into every home of the congregation the pastor find his work immensely easier. The officers of the church are not only more active, but they also find that the discharge of their duty is easier because the church members are much more interested and devoted to church interest. All the causes of the church are more liberally supported. All religious meetings are more fully attended. All religious duties are more conscientiously discharged, and the pastor has his hands held up in every good work and he has a big active congregation.

Just a suggestion to the pastor and to the people.

It will lighten the pastor's work and increase his efficiency if the church paper is sent into every home in a congregation. This would cost very little, comparatively speaking, for probably over half of the substantial homes already receive their church paper and would not do without it. A little activity on the part of the pastor and church officers in securing subscriptions to the church paper would put new life into the congregation, increase the growth of the church in numbers and spirituality, and cheer the pastor with larger returns from his labors.

THE PROGRESS OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

By J. F. Jacobs.

The following interesting figures are developed by a comparison of the American Newspaper Directory of 1897, taking the Southern States including Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia, in which territory the population has increased in fifteen years approximately 22 per cent., and the church membership over 30 per cent.

We find by the above comparison that while the number of Religious Publications has only increased from 108 to 122 that the total circulation has increased from 938,966 to 2,252,194, an increase of over 133 per cent. In 1897 there were 108 publications; in 1912, 122. The average circulation per religious publication of 1897 was 8,694. The average circulation per publication in 1912 was 18,460.

A careful comparison of States indicates that in each of the Southern States there has been a decided increase in circulation of the Religious Publication with the exception of one State.

Alabama	42 per cent.
Arkansas,	65 per cent.
Florida,	21 per cent.
Georgia,	24 per cent.
Kentucky,	33 per cent.
Louisiana,	93 per cent.
Mississippi minus	2 per cent.
North Carolina, ..	97 Per cent.
South Carolina,	55 per cent.
Tennessee,	210 per cent.
Texas,	2 per cent.
Virginia,	95 per cent.
West Virginia,	43 per cent.

These wide variations are due to the fact that in many denominations, especially the weaker ones, the entire religious literature of the denominations is issued in a single State. Tennessee especially is the home of large publishing interests of several important denominations, in consequence of which a very large proportion of the Religious literature of the South is published in Tennessee.

As regards the publications which are issued weekly and semi-weekly, the following increases are shown to have occurred within fifteen years:

The Baptist weeklies and semi-weeklies have increased from 135,110 circulation to 174,163.

The Catholic, from 35,750 circulation to 48,800.

Interdenominational literature, from nothing to 56,884 circulation.

Methodist, from 149,230 to 277,537.

Southern Presbyterian, from 30,200 circulation to 75,261.

Disciples, from 44,859 circulation to 45,534.

Lutheran, from 4,081 circulation to 5,000.

Episcopalian, reduced from 5,500 to 4,939.

Northern Presbyterians in the South, increased from nothing to 10,437.

Associate Reformed Presbyterian, increased from 2,325 to 2,700.

Holiness, increased from 5,500 to 12,250.

Universalists, increased from nothing to 1,000.

Cumberland Presbyterian, from 14,000 to 21,051.

Jewish, from 11,951 to 16,802.

Christian, from 1,500 to 3,000.

Methodist Protestant, from nothing to 1,000.

(Primitive Baptist, from 3,000 to 11,759.

As regards monthly and semi-monthly publications, the Baptists increase from 11,460 to 22,800.

The Catholic, from nothing to 26,000.

Interdenominational, from 49,870 to 55,525.

Methodists, from 52,550 to 94,750.

Southern Presbyterian, from 4,150 to 69,000.

Disciples, from 2,200 to 2,250.

The Episcopalian, from 3,000 to 4,611.

The Primitive Baptist fell off on this class of literature from 8,930 to 6,500.

The Unitarian fell off from 1,250 to nothing.

On the quarterly literature, the Baptist literature increased from 295,000 to 474,000.

The Methodist increased from nothing to 728,000.

Disciples, increased from nothing to 35,500.

The Lutheran, increased from nothing to 2,000.

Holiness, increased from 5,500 to 12,250.

From these figures it appears that the thirteen Southern States have increased their consumption of religious literature very much faster than the population has increased, and owing to the larger circulation per publication it is quite evident that the literature is of better type than it was 15 years ago. The Methodist church is the largest church in the consumption of religious literature; the Baptist stand second; the Presbyterians third; Disciples fourth.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—The Annual has been sent out. If you wish a copy send 20 cents. We will supply as long as they last. We have about 40 copies yet on hand. Mail us your order today with 20 cents in stamps if you wish a copy. It contains proceedings of Southern Convention, also all conferences of the Convention in the South, and apportionments of the churches for 1913.

—Governor Colquitt of Texas has ordered out four companies of State militia to assemble at Brownsville, Tex., to be prepared to defend the American consulate across the line at Matamoras, Mexico, which consulate has been threatened. Governor Colquitt sent this message: "Notify Mexican commander at Matamoras, who is demanding money, that if he harms a single Texan his life will be demanded as a forfeit."

—A good woman who has never taken The Sun but has had access to it heretofore writes this letter under date of Feb. 21. "I would so much like to have The Sun come to me, but I have no way to pay for it. I have been seeing the paper and certainly do like it, but I cannot pay for it." If any Sun reader would like for this good sister to have her church paper a year and will send us $1.00 we will send it to her for that amount.

—Rev. W. H. Denison has recently concluded a successful series of meetings with Norfolk Memorial Temple. There were nearly half a hundred accessions to the church. How happy Bro. Denison is in his work. We recently dropped in on him for a brief hour and a good lunch. He was deep in the work and his amiable wife was as interested in the work as he. A visit to them was a stream of sunshine on a cloudy day.

—Writes a good and active pastor "Very soon I mean to make a thorough-going canvass of my membership for new subscribers to The Sun. I mentioned the matter in Sunday school last Sunday and obtained one new subscriber which I send herewith." Thank you, beloved. In a very few weeks now we expect to have a much enlarged and improved Christian Sun. The brethren may count on this. Will they not now begin to lay plans to make a canvass for subscriptions for us. This will be needed and will be greatly appreciated.

—Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Chairman Woman's Mission Board, Franklin, Va., was the first to send in, from a distance, a nice large order for job work from our Southern Christian Publishing Co. Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C., was the first pastor to send in an order. Rev. E. M.

Carter of our Orphanage was the first local patron. We are yours to serve in all kinds of commercial printing, letters, letter-heads, envelopes, bill heads, circulars, notices, programs, wedding invitations, engraved or neatly printed as preferred: in fact all kinds of general printing and job work. Give our house a trial, that is all we ask.

—Rev. J. W. Harrell, Portsmouth, pushes forward with the work. His is the life of a busy, faithful and successful pastor. It was a joy to spend the night under his congenial roof and have wholesome and helpful talk till the small hours.

—You may always expect a cheerful greeting and a good audience at Holy Neck, Nansemond Co., Va. It matters not about the weather. We were there on a recent Sunday when the weather was biting and a snow was on the ground. But it was missionary day, and the people were there for three services and dinner intervening. Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., the beloved, was at his post of duty and let us preach in his pulpit, and then talk to his people on missions in the afternoon. We were pleased, and the people were patient. Dinner was also abundant and the fellowship was delightful.

—Rev. H. S. Booth, Third Church, Norfolk, sends us this cheering and hopeful word which is appreciated: "I rejoice in the success which has attended the efforts to get the Publishing House going. I doubt if the church could have made a more strategic move. I deeply regret that I have not been financially able to take some stock in it for myself, for I have all confidence in its splendid success. You may count on me to do all I can for its success, and in any way I can to help." This good word coming unsolicited, is appreciated. Every pastor thus far, save three on purely financial grounds, that we have spoken to about the matter, and we have spoken to a great many, has taken some stock in the Company. You may always count on our faithful pastors to do their part in every good and worthy undertaking.

—We are pleased to note that our young and wide awake Brother E. T. White of Norfolk, has been elected assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Suffolk. Congratulations, good friend White, and we shall expect the Y. M. C. A. of Suffolk to be the better for your services. The Suffolk correspondent of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot thus speaks of Mr. White:

"Mr. White graduated from the Norfolk High School in the class of 1908, attended Elon College 1908-09, and since that time has held positions of honor and trust in Norfolk. He comes to Suffolk not a stranger as he is known not only in social but athletic and business circles, and his coming will mean strength to the association.

"Mr. White has been a member of the Norfolk association for the past ten years and has been a member of the leaders' corps in the gymnasium for a number of years, having taken charge of the classes during the absence of the physical director. With his experience in the association he is well fitted for the position he will fill with the Suffolk association."

Last Sunday's News and Observer carried the following:

"Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Kernodle, Durham, N. C., were agreeable and happy visitors to the college Monday. Mr. Kernodle is an undertaker and deserves that the Lord should prosper his business."—Elon College Notes in the Christian Sun, Rev. J. O. Atkinson, correspondent.

"Dr. J. O. Atkinson, the learned and charming editor of the Christian Sun, speaking of a gentleman who lives in a thriving city of the State, says: "Mr. — is an undertaker and deserves that the Lord should prosper his business." Just what the esteemed doctor means we are unable to say, but the first thought that came to us is that there are a number of people in that city who need to be buried."—Editor J. D. Kernodle, in The Alamance Gleaner, Graham, N. C."

Comment to the same effect appeared in The Richmond Times-Dispatch and we know not in how many other esteemed contemporaries. We are under obligations to President Harper for giving us all this free advertising and incidentally securing for us several severe drubbings in many of the papers, Harper being the author of the now famous wish and not we ourselves. However, isn't a good undertaker entitled to the well wishes of his friends? We ourselves for example, want to do without him just as long as possible, but there will come a time when he will take possession in fee simple, have full control of all that remains of us. Since we can't then wish him well, or ill, why not send in our good wishes in advance? We do not care to wait, as do our contemporaries, till after we are dead to say the cheering word, or do the helpful deed. We want to do all in our power to brighten and to cheer and to help this dear world while we are here in it. Why will so many, even sensible people, put off saying good things about others, or doing something for others, until they themselves are dead and done for? Beloved, come across with your cheering word and good deed while you live.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Wm. Thomas Duke was one of the twenty-five charter members of the Suffolk Christian church, which was organized in November 1860, by Rev. W. B. Wellons, who remained the pastor till his death, February 16, 1877.

Brother Duke lived until February 8th, 1913, and passed away 6:30 P. M. at his home at Magnolia about three miles from Suffolk. He was married to Miss Christina Whitehurst near Great Bridge, in Norfolk County, Va., about twenty-five years ago. He left no children and his widow is left alone. He left one sister, Miss Nancy Duke, who resides in Portsmouth, Va.

He was buried from his church in Suffolk 3:00 P. M. February 20, 1913. Only one of the twenty-five charter members remains in the flesh. That is Senator James A. Turrentine of Burlington, N. C., one of the faithful and honored members of the Burlington church. He outlives all of that noble band who, in November 1860, organized the Christian church in Suffolk. The church has not done great things, but it has been a faithful exponent of evangelical Christianity, seeking to "Keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace." In my incumbency of the pastorate in this church I have buried eleven of that great twenty-five.

Although brother Duke resided three miles from Suffolk, he usually attended all the church services on Sunday. He would walk up for Sunday school, remain for preaching; then return to his home and come back to Christian Endeavor prayer meeting, remain for preaching, and then walk home. He kept this up till within a few months of his death, when he became too feeble to stand the walk. He was a member of the Sunday school class taught by Wm. H. Jones Jr., and he enjoyed his teacher and the other members of the class. It is a mixed class of old and young men and he never missed a Sunday when he could come. His zeal in the cause of Christ did not lag in old age; he seemed to renew his youth in the Lord.

He reminded me in the church of original pine trees—most all heart. He was "planted in the house of the Lord and nourished in the courts of our God. He brought forth fruit in old age."

The little home at Magnolia where he and his good wife had lived happily together is sad and lonely and he "will be missed, for his seat will be empty." "A judge of the widow is God in his holy habitation." Jesus knows how to comfort the widow for His mother was a widow and he remained with her until He was thirty; and he did not forget her when He was on the cross. W. W. Staley.

NORFOLK LETTER.

At Knoxville, Tenn. just without the northwestern fringe of the city limits, lies the great plant of the Brookside cotton Mills, employing nearly two thousand people, thus comprising a little city within itself.

The plant was founded when I was a boy eight or ten years of age. At first, it was less than one-fourth its present size, and with not more than one eighth its present capacity for production.

A year ago, chatting in his office with the President, I contrasted the size and output of the mill now with its small beginning.

"Time, and conservative management have done it" he replied. "No amount of capital alone could ever create an establishment of this magnitude at once, and place it upon a sound and sure footing. This concern is a growth, and not a creation."

The reply of President Maynald practically sums up the ideals by which we seek to be guided in our work at the Third Church.

Here, we are aiming at something solid, substantial and permanent. We realize that exceptional opportunities are ours for the founding in this city of a religious capacity whose ultimate influence shall be felt far and wide, provided we do not jeopardize the situation by unwise methods and undue haste.

There are two classes of workers in the world, inspired by two different sorts of ideals.

There are, first those who labor altogether in and for the present, and who are satisfied with apparent results, whether they possess any enduring qualities or not. If only they can make a show of success they are satisfied. The work of such men generally perishes with, if not before them.

Second, those who plan their work in large outlines, and are willing to wait, if need be, for the filling in of the details. Their specifications demand permanence and stability as prime considerations in all they do.

The latter is the ideal which we try to keep before us at the Third Church.

Further, we do not wish to be misled in our concept of what constitutes, especially in these modern times, real progress and usefulness in the work of the church. We doubt if some of the tests which are ordinarily applied in this respect, are true tests. We are very anxious to place the emphasis just where it should be placed, and to avoid as much misdirected effort as possible.

Of one thing, at least, we are dead-sure certain; it is no more possible to build up a strong and influential church, without time, and wise and conservative management, than it is a cotton-mill, or anything else. But, it is our failing in America that we become impatient, and want to do everything "in a hurry."

"That low man seeks a little thing to do,
Seeks it and does it.

This high man, with a great thing to pursue,

Dies ere he knows it."

We Americans also have a fatal predilection for big things without waiting for them to grow normally, and we are going to have them if we have to get a pair of bellows and inflate them.

"This concern is a growth, and not a creation." Memorize these words, Oh, ye hurry-boys.

As I talked with the President there in the office a year ago, I looked from the window and saw the first building, erected long, long before. Virginia creeper is now growing over it, adding repose and dignity to the appearance of age. Compared with the later and much larger buildings which almost surround it, it is very small, nevertheless, every cune of brick and mortar in it spoke of stability. From the time the first spadeful of earth had been removed to make place for the first foundationstone, absolutely everything had been "Put there to stay," and to form a sound and sure footing for a great business.

I glanced at the President himself. Every character-line in the strong, virile countenance spoke of stability, and granite-like firmness. Into that great plant, he had simply built himself and his own solid and enduring personality.

The men and women of the third church are the sort whose characters make it possible to do permanent and enduring work. We will go forward as rapidly as Providence shall open the way. Every phase of our work is in a most healthy and prosperous condition. We are looking forward to an earnest revival campaign, beginning somewhere about April, first, and for the success of this meeting we are making the most careful and thorough plans.

But, we shall not attempt to inflate matters, nor issue watery stock. We hope some day, in the Providence of the Master, to honor Him with a splendid new church building, but we do not think that He would be either pleased or honored, if we should handicap ourselves with a heavy debt to do it now.

Remember, a pile of brick and mortar is a "creation" but a large, earnest, consecrated and intelligent congregation can only be a growth.

Further, I cannot forbear to remark, in conclusion, that such a congregation

GETTING WORK DONE.

Normal young men and woman, boys and girls, are ever ready to do good and charitable things if older heads will but lead the way. If there is some special work the church wants done, why not give it to one of the Sunday school classes. If money is needed for painting, let one class raise that. If new song books are needed, let another class take that for its task. Is there a desire for a charity fund, let still another class undertake the work of providing for a certain class for the people.

If you can keep young people at work of definite things you have solved the problem of holding their attention and keeping them in the school. If you don't, they will drop out.

A COVENANT OF GOD.

Notes on Sunday School Lesson, For Next Sunday. Lesson text—Gen. 15: 5-18.

Time.—About B. C. 2250 (Sayce); 1913 (Ussher).

Place.—The Oaks of Mamre, near Hebron.

Persons.—The Lord, Abram, the people of Canaan.

Golden Text.—He is faithful that promised.—Heb. 10: 23.

Leading Thought.—Faith in God is rewarded.

Purpose of The Lesson.

The purpose of this lesson is to show how Abram (1) was encouraged by God; (2) believed in God; (3) was taken into covenant relations with God; (4) was given a new name—by God.

It has been thought that the immediate occasion of this coming of the Word of the Lord was a condition of extreme depression that came upon Abram after his victorious campaign to rescue Lot. He feared that overwhelming forces would return from the east to avenge defeat. God said, "Fear not, Abram; I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward."

Then Abram, although believing God, felt the need of more definite information regarding his promised posterity. He was old and childless. He received the definite promise that his heir should be not a servant, but a son.

In last Sunday's lesson we looked upon Abram's great possession; in this lesson our attention is called to what he yet lacked. He who looks upon this possession as the gift of God, naturally turns to God to ask for what he yet lacks, and is drawn nearer to God by his poverty than he was by his wealth. In this lesson Abram was making covenant with Lot; in this God is covenanting with Abram. Then Abram was the giver, now God is the Giver and Abram is the grateful recipient. In that lesson our attention was drawn to Abram's works of righteousness; in this it is turned to his faith in God which was the motive power of those works. In that lesson Abram was separated from the last of his kindred; in this he obtains from God the promise of innumerable posterity.

The Oriental View.

It is still the deep sorrow and bitter complaint of childless husbands and wives, "I go childless." Our religious differences are sharp enough and the enmities consequently upon them are evident as anything we have, and yet childish Moslem wife condescends to ask the prayers of a Christian priest and make a vow at a Christian shrine, that a child may be granted her.

The very day a couple are married we greet them with the salutation: "I wish you a blessed union, long life and children. May we see you next year with a baby in your arms." And all of us today sympathize with the great man when he groaned before the Almighty. "I go childless."—B. Syrius.

The most satisfactory sign.—At a time when to outward appearances the Reformation seem about to fail, Luther one day encouraged his co-workers thus: "I saw," said he, "a sign in the heavens." And when they all waited to hear him tell of some startling prodigy, Luther continued, "I was looking out of my window at night, and beheld the stars, and the whole majestic vault of God, held up without my being able to see the pillars on which the Master had caused it to rest. Men fear that the sky may fall. Poor fools! Is not God always there? That is his sign in the heavens,"

Question Review.

1. What was God's signature to his covenant with Noah (Lesson 6)? ((The rainbow.)

2. Where is this signature written?
3. What in the heavens did God refer to in making his covenant with Abram?
4. What was the multitude of stars to represent to Abraham? (The number of his descendants.)
5. How many stars are there? (No one knows.)
6. How many Jews, descendants of Abraham, are there?
7. How many Christians, spiritual descendants of Abraham are there?
8. Does God's covenant with Abraham still hold?

NOTES ON C. E. TOPIC, MARCH 2.

Subject: "The Ideal Christian. III. His Practical Service." Matt. 5: 13-16 (Consecration Meeting).

It is suggested that this be "An Observer's" Meeting. Have it so announced and let the leader state while one person cannot see all the opportunities of service, a number of people can see many opportunities.

The leader may point out that the practical man is in contrast to the dreamer; that he is one that makes dreams come true. He should emphasize the idea of definiteness. Other speakers follow the suggestions contained in the C. E. World.

Prayer.

Our Father, we praise thee for the Word of wisdom and instruction thou hast left us. We are thankful for the narrow way. May we strive day by day to put into practice the principles of the gospel. May we be living examples to the outside world.

Short Addresses.

Christianity is not genuine if it is not practical. It was never meant to be a side issue, or a mere luxury. The chief business of every man is to serve God. If he is not doing this when he is about his work or pleasure, then his business and pleasure are wrong.

James speaks of benevolence as being one of the characteristics of practical service. The relation between religion and practical service is so very closely related. The Bible does not merely associate almsdeeds with the Christian life. It makes them a part of it.

James has sometimes been accused of leaving out the spiritual side of religion, but you cannot study his message and hold that view. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

To grow into larger and more practical work we do not need to go ahead of any one, except ourselves. If we shall always try to do a little bit better than we have ever done before we shall find larger opportunities awaiting us. The main thing is to be faithful in little things.

"It is not the amount of service we render which secures for us the divine approval, but the disposition which holds us in readiness to do whatever our Lord requires. In the parable, they who worked but one hour, received the penny because they were waiting and went to work as soon as they received the invitation. They also serve who only stand and wait."

"There are two ways of enlarging our work. One is by cultivating twenty acres this year instead of last year's ten. Another is by more assiduous and intelligent cultivation, doubling last year's fruitage from that same field. We believe the second process to be more in harmony with divine ideas of spiritual husbandry, and commend it to ambitious presidents of Endeavor societies, superintendents of Bible schools and pastors of churches."

"Paul seemed to be consumed by a spirit of sanctified desire for souls and other trophies for his Master. We would have thought the harsh experiences of the 1st missionary journal would have extinguished his zeal for extending boundaries; but the second was farther reaching; and the third, in planning, seemed to encompass the known and even the half-known world. God forbid that age should chill our enthusiasm, contract our endeavors or narrow our sympathies."

ALABAMA LETTER.

The work in this section is in a much more prosperous condition than at the same time last year. The winter has been comparatively mild, thus allowing more activity along all lines of church service. Congregations have been better and interest generally more wholesome. With this advantage over conditions a year ago, this ought to be a most prosperous year in the Alabama Conference. We see no reason why it should be otherwise.

Already we have heard of increased activity in several of our Sunday schools. At Wadley we are having just now the largest attendance since the organization of the school in September 1911. While the school here isn't very large the interest manifested is indeed most gratifying. We have also a most encouraging report from the school at Antioch. Bro. P. F. Beard is the efficient superintendent at this place. In conversation with him recently he modestly stated that their school had never had such an opportunity as at present. And, too, the school at Pleasant Grove takes new life and interest with the reorganization there a month ago. Prof. Arnold Risen is superintendent. He is both capable and consecrated. The pastor, this writer, is greatly encouraged with the present outlook.

It is to be devoutly hoped that every school in the Conference will become thoroughly aroused and profoundly interested and that at a very early date. Our opportunities in this line of Christian service are almost unlimited, the fields are inviting and the doors open wide. There is imperative need of a Sunday school vision in our midst. God grant that it may come upon us with unmistakable evidence and irresistible power.

The Sunday School Convention of this Conference will be in session at Pleasant Grove on Saturday and Sunday, the 29th and 30th of March. The time to begin preparation for that Convention is now. Today is none too soon. Only five more Sundays until the Convention meets. Let each superintendent keep this matter constantly before his school. The success we attain depends not upon one, or a few, but upon the combined strength and the consecrated effort of all. Can we count on you to do your utmost for the approaching Convention? Remember the date. The fifth Sunday in March and Saturday before. Program will appear in The Christian Sun.

MARRIED.

Phillips-Milteer.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. David Milteer, near Holland, Va., was the scene of a beautiful marriage on the evening of December 24, 1912, when their only daughter, Laura Lee, became the bride of William Allston Phillips, of Plant City, Fla. Miss Minnie Howell was bridesmaid, the other attendants being Misses Erma Milteer and Sophia Howell, and Messrs. Emmett Benton and Jimmie Lee Norfleet. Miss Minnie Morgan sang "Yours." The wedding marches, Lohengrin's and Mendelssohn's, were rendered by Miss Blanch Haslett. The bride was attired in white messaline with crystal trimming and carried a bouquet of smilax tied with tulle. After the ceremony the bridal party with a few relatives and special friends retired to the dining room and partook of a delicious repast. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips will be remembered as former Elon students. Their home will be in Plant City, Fla. May their wedded life be one of increasing joy.

Shipe Hoffman.

In Powell's Fort on Sunday, January fifth, I solemnized the marriage of St. Joseph Shipe and Miss Ollie Belle V. Hoffman. The couple then drove to the home of the groom where a sumptuous wedding supper was served. The contracting parties are popular young people of the Dry Run neighborhood. The bride is a member of the church there, and is the attractive daughter of Bro. and Sister J. H. Hoffman, who are also members there. The groom is a well driller, and is at present engaged in West Va. May their wedded lives be happy and useful.

Holland-Duke.

Mr. Eley F. Holland and Miss Theresa Flora Duke were united in marriage by the writer at the Christian parsonage, Holland, Va., January 15, 1913, in the presence of a number of relatives and friends. The groom is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Holland and the bride the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Duke, all of Holland, Va. A supper was served to the bridal party at the home of the bride's father. They will make their home in the county, near Holland. May their married life be one of sweet peace and joyful service.

MITE BOXES.

(If there are any who have not had a clear understanding of the possibilities of the Mite Box, we ask of them a careful reading of the following article by Mr. Denison. It is hoped that a number of our churches may take up this method of work especially when it seems difficult to have an organization and regular meetings. Mrs. C. H. R.)

This Department is edited by Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., assisted by the other members of the Board, to whom all items of missionary interest and matter for the Department should be sent.

THE DATE FIXED.

May First, Nineteen Hundred and Thirteen.

After much correspondence with the Mission Office at Dayton, and a careful study of all the conditions here, the dates for our forthcoming annual conference and Quarter Century Anniversary Celebration are April 29, 30, May 1 and 2.

The Conference proper will begin on the evening of April 29th and continue through the 30th and until noon of May 1st, with its closing session during the forenoon of May 2nd. The afternoon and evening of May 1st will be devoted to the Anniversary Celebration.

The church in Japan, realizing her need of Divine guidance and power in the future toward which her face is now turned, asks the church at home, in Canada and the United States, and Porto Rico, to unite with her in making for four days a session of special prayer for her behalf. May we not ask that wherever possible our churches will gather in special prayer meetings, and that individual Christians who may find it possible to join in these public services, in their homes or wherever they may be, engage in prayer to God on behalf of all Japan, and for the Christian Church in particular, that we may all be so filled with the mind of Christ, and the fulness of His Spirit, that He will be able to work through us to His glory and to the saving of a multitude of precious souls?

Signed for the church

T. Kitanô, Conference President.
M. Sakurai, Conference Secretary.

Another society raises twenty-five dollars each year in this way which helps to support a Japanese pastor.

2nd: In churches where it now seems unwise to organize a Missionary Society, I am sure there is no church among us in which there is not one interested woman who may be appointed or may be a self-constituted Mite Box Superintendent. She should secure the boxes and distribute them far and wide among the church congregation—including men, women and children in her solicitation. At stated intervals—perhaps quarterly—this superintendent, in consultation with her pastor if she wishes, should prepare a splendid live missionary program and have a public meeting to which all the congregation is invited. Just before the close of the service, open the Mite Boxes, secure new Mite Box members and distribute missionary literature, tracts, leaflets, sample copies of the Christian Missionary and the like. An interesting program can be made up from recitations and readings from the Christian Missionary, stories in tract form and maybe occasionally some outside speaker—a neighboring pastor or a member of your Conference Woman's Missionary Board.

3rd: The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies are very prolific fields for the Mite Box work. Have a Missionary Committee in the Sunday school or Christian Endeavor Society who will look after the work in much the same way as described above. In many places Sunday school classes have a Mite Box as a class. After the regular Sunday school offering is taken up the Mite Box is passed each Sunday and each member of the class puts in such "mites" as she chooses. I know of one adult Bible Class that raises twenty dollars a year for missions in this way. Two young people's classes that I know of are doing splendid work along this line. Even the children's classes may become interested in this method and take pride in bringing an extra offering for their class Mite Box.

Now, my sister, interested in missions and in whose church no missionary work is being done, it is to you we appeal. Do not wait for the officially appointed but set about it at once to introduce the Mite Boxes in your church. The boxes can be secured for a nominal sum either from the General Literature Superintendent, Mrs. Emma S. Powers, 33 Gordon Ave, O. or from the President of the Southern Convention Woman's Board whose name appears at top of this page. Money thus raised should be sent to the Treasurer of your Conference Woman's Board with instructions as to how you wish it used, otherwise it will be equally divided between the general funds of Home and Foreign missions. Mite Box Superintendents in churches where there are no Missionary organizations will by virtue of their office be members of the Conference Woman's Board and will be entitled to the same privileges as the president of local societies.

It is of the Mite Box work to which I wish to call your attention just now. There are now many ways in which Mite Boxes may be used.

1st: In connection with the Missionary Society have in your list of officers a Literature and Mite Box Secretary who will secure Mite Boxes and distribute them not only among the members of the Missionary Society, but throughout the entire congregation to every one who is willing to contribute to missions in this way. Have a Mite Box opening at stated intervals—perhaps quarterly—when the contents of all the boxes will be turned into our treasury to be used for any special objects you may desire, such as the support of native work on the mission fields, maintenance of mission Sunday schools and the like. I know one society among us that secured nearly twenty dollars at a single Mite Box opening. One society is paying for the pulpit furniture in the new Ponce, Porto Rico church with the contents of their Mite Boxes.

Anniversary.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian church held its first anniversary meeting in the church Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 19, 1913. The attendance was quite good and all seemed encouraged in the work. The Mite Boxes brought in a nice sum to help on the pulpit furniture for the new church in Ponce, Porto Rico, which the church through its Societies gives to that church. Mrs. W. H. Denison of the Memorial Temple in Suffolk, was present by invitation and gave a fine address on Japan and its needs. She described its physical features, its societies, intellectual and political conditions, and its moral and spiritual needs.

She brought with her many genuine curios and fancy articles of Japanese handiworks which interested the society very much. All of this led up to the point of missionary interest which she sought to arouse in their hearts. The impression was good and all felt that her visit had brought the Society help.

The work of the Society for the past year has been gratifying to the officers and members and they enter upon the second year with renewed zeal and hope determined to know more, do more, and lay larger plans for the future.

Mrs. Hattie Savage accompanied Mrs. Dennison from Suffolk by way of furnishing physical support among strangers, and all enjoyed her visit.

Rev. G. L. Curry Sec. of the Graham Association and Rev. J. D. M. Personal notice will be sent to all the ministers just before the meeting.

Chapel Hill.

A beautiful slate roof is nearly completed on the Chapel Hill Christian church, for which we are thankful.

We lack about $1,000 of having enough money in sight to finish the building and seat it. Up to this time we have not begged. We have simply given the brethren, and sisters and friends an opportunity to help. But now we expect to give opportunities, ask and beg earnestly until this so much needed, is in hand.

We think we can find twenty-five brethren and sisters who will give $10.00 each, 50 that will give $5.00 each, 100 that will give $3.00 each, and 200 that will give $1.00 each. Now who will be the first to send any of the above amounts to W. G. Clements pastor, and Financial agent, Morrisville, N. C. Brethren and sisters we have no where to hold church services and can not have until we can get in the new house.

Memorial Temple.

This church has just closed one of the greatest, if not the greatest, revivals in its history. Intense interest has been manifested; unexpected success attained, and the people have been stirred as never before.

The meetings, which continued for three weeks, having been preceded by a preparatory week of prayer, were conducted by our able and beloved pastor, Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., of whom too much cannot be said in commendation of his untiring efforts, both in and out of the pulpit, to interest and reach the unsaved. He has made during these meetings some of the strongest and most varied appeals ever presented from this pulpit by one person. We feel while he had the hearty cooperation of a large body of faithful workers, that it is to him, more than to any other human agency, that we are indebted for the gratifying results obtained.

The Lord has indeed blessed us during these meetings. We have had splendid weather—an average of nearly two hundred; received 51 members into the church, making 73 additions during Dr. Dennison's pastorate, of less than nine months; many indifferent members have repented themselves to a more useful life, and several have been converted, but have not yet united with any church.

This church in general is in a flourishing condition, and the prospect is bright and encouraging.

The Sunday school is growing, having had an average attendance of over 240 for the last two months. The people have a mind to work, and with such a leader as we have, our motto and watchword, "Forward," is indeed a good one.

Yours in His service,
E. M. Albright, Church Clerk.

terms. It was decided in favor of the negative, represented by Messrs. W. J. and E. T. Cotten, while Messrs. W. C. Morgan and J. L. Farmer spoke for the affirmative. The oration by Mr. C. B. Riddle received hearty praise, as did the humorous pieces of Messrs. W. T. Dowd and R. S. Rainey. Mr. M. E. Woodward sang a beautiful tenor solo and Mr. V. P. Heatwole gave a cornet number and was encored. Mr. F. F. Myrick presided and C. W. Rountree scribed. The Judges of the debate and on the Orator's Medal were Rev. A. B. Kendall, Burlington, N. C., and Rev. J. F. McCulloch and A. Wayland Cooke, Esq., both of Greensboro. The Orator's Medal was awarded to Mr. E. T. Cotten. All in all it was a happy occasion and reflected credit on the Society and the College.

The following patrons were present at the Clio Entertainment and added greatly to its enjoyment by their presence: Mrs. D. S. Farmer and son, David, News Ferry, Va.; Mrs. J. E. Lawrence and daughter, Holland, Va.; Mr. N. A. Dalrymple, Jonesboro, N. C.; Mrs. J. C. Paisley, Gibsonville, N. C.; and Mr. F. L. Fuller, Concord, N. C.; Mrs. T. A. Moffitt, Ramseur, N. C.

So many alumni, friends, visitors and old students, all of whom we gladly welcomed and always welcome, came to do us honor by their presence the past week and especially during the holiday season that our limited space precludes individual mention. Our friends are always welcome.

Dear Children and Friends:

I had a very pleasant trip to O'Kelley's Chapel and Durham last Sunday. Tho' the snow interfered with both congregations some, I enjoyed the trip very much. Both these churches are giving one collection each month and are very loyal to the orphanage. The cash and subscriptions amounted to $24.00. Thanks.

Since our last report we have had the following donations: Mrs. J. H. Massey, two sheets; one box from Thomasville, Ky. containing many useful articles such as: coats for girls, girl's scarf, towels underwear, hose, ribbons, new goods; calicoes and gingham, belts, collars, books and toys.

Dear Uncle Emory:

We have been in the habit of sending our dues every five months and that is why you haven't heard from us before. Enclosed you will find one dollar and a quarter, which should have been sent in January.

We hope you will like the Orphanage work and will stay with us a long time.

You will hear from us again in June unless you prefer we should send our dues monthly. We will close with love for you and all the cousins.

Dear Uncle Emory:

This is a cold muddy night and we are just back from prayer meeting. We have had a young peoples' prayer meeting since we had such a good union meeting last summer. We are not so old so we go every time we can. I sleep on father's overcoat while we are there. Here is my dime for February.

Sincerely,

Dwight Hillis Lankford.

You are making a fine beginning and I trust you may grow up to be a great man. After all, it is the spiritual training that counts in the making of men.

Roxboro, N. C., Oct. 20, 1912.

Dear Uncle Jim:

Mother says I have the habit of being sick when company comes or of becoming sick after relatives arrive. I was taking medicine in Aug. when papa arrived and I was taken violently ill the day after grandma Cheatham, Cousin Daly Reavis of Tenn. and little cousin Pearle E. Farrabow came—I could't finish my dinner and said I was "sleepy."

I let Auntie dress (dress) me part of the time she was here. I wish she would come again. Two days after Auntie left, mother took us to Suffolk and grandma Cheatham's for a 12 day trip. We had a lovely time playing "Wif my fweet-heart, Marget West," and James and Charles Butler, Upsher Tucker, Marget and Annie May "Wawles" Pan and Papa, and Sarah Withers and listening to Minnie's Victrola.

We attended Sunday school and church and the Ladie's Book Club.

We were so glad to see Dada come in the train below Henderson.

I enjoyed picking up hickory nuts at grandma Teetam's.

As ever,

William Staley Cheatham.

P. S. To Uncle Emory I send 50 cts. for my Thanksgiving offering and 10cts each for Nov. and Dec.

I credit you with the whole amount as dues as I have no Thanksgiving department now.

Roxboro, N. C., Oct. 16, 1913.

Dear Uncle Jim:

As I do not owe you a dime for this month, I will send you 13 cts., because I am 13 months old today. I weigh about 19 lbs.

At my birthday party there were 4 babies younger than myself and some children about brother's age. We had malted milk, crackers and mints. One little boy would not drink the milk. Mrs. Carlton's children brought me a bouquet of ferns and cosmos and Alice Virginia Stephens brought a linen pillow case trimmed with tatting. Grandma sent 50 ct. piece by Annie for our birthday. Mamma gave me the same amount of money that she gave brother when he was 1 yr. old—a penny for my first month, 2 pennies for my second month, etc. until I was 1 yr. old. Now he will be the first child to write to the corner and tell how much mamma gave me?

Grandma Cheatham, one of Dada's 1st cousins and one of our 1st cousins visited us Aug 22nd. Annie spent a week with us in Sept. and it is needless to say we enjoyed having them. Dada went to South Carolina in July to buy tobacco on the Lake City market. We missed him so much that it made us doubly appreciate our company.

Sept. 30, Mother took us to Suffolk where we spent a very splendid week. Pon liked her little namesake as well as ever and I liked her. Emmie Jones must be a lovable girl; for like Brother I showed a fondness for her. From Suffolk we went to grandma Cheathams. Dada met us below Henderson and accompanied us there. I stayed with grandma more than I did with Dada. We came home 4 days ago and found a card on the floor just inside the threshold Uncles John and Bob Cook and two friends had been to see us that very day. Mother ran to the 'phone and 'phoned to the Jones Hotel. But they had left in Mamma didn't take Maude back, so we are without any help—an experience familiar to all house keepers, I guess. Mamma is busy.

We attended the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union in the church. Dear Uncle Emory:

There has been another long break in our letters. Our October ones have not been mailed. I have been ill for months; at death's door for weeks. Uncle Jim has left the corner. We regret it more than we can say. Yet we welcome you and wish you both health, happiness and service in your new field. I send 50 cts. for my Thanksgiving offering. Mother says she is so happy over my recovery that she wishes I were able to send $50. I also send 10 cts. each to pay for November and December.

Fondly,

Florence Harrey Cheatham.

I am sure you are thankful to be well again. I hope you are feeling good now. Your letter did not come in time to go in last week's Sun.

Put the Load Where It Belongs

IF you are to make the most of your time and opportunities, you must have efficient tools to work with.

You have enough hard, tiresome work without wasting your time and energy in such jobs as wood-sawing, water-pumping, grindstone-turning, and the like. Use an IHC engine to furnish power for such work. In far less time, and with practically no effort on your part, the wood is sawed, the stock watered, the tools sharpened, all at one-tenth the expense of hand work. Put the load where it belongs. Buy and use an and save money as well as hard work. It is the cheapest engine you can buy—because it costs less per year of service than others. It is so simple that it is practically trouble-proof. Perfect combustion makes it economical.

IHC oil and gas engines operate on gas, gasoline, naphtha, kerosene, distillate, alcohol. Sizes are 1 to 50-horse power. They are built vertical, horizontal, portable, stationary, skidded, air-cooled and water-cooled. Sawing, pumping, spraying outfits, etc. IHC oil tractors, 12 to 60-horse power for plowing, threshing, etc.

Look over an IHC engine at the IHC local dealer's place of business. Learn from him what it will do for you, or, write us for catalogues.

Children's Missionary Stories

STORIES are—yes, must be—used by every wide-awake worker among, or leader or teacher of, children.

MISSIONARY STORIES seem to have been the one field well-nigh overlooked until Mrs. Alice Moreton Burnett, Corresponding Secretary for the Woman's Board for Home Missions of the Christian Church, made a compilation of thirty interesting, instructive stories pertaining especially and directly to missions that are sure to be appreciated by workers, teachers, leaders, pastors, fathers, mothers—and the children.

Some of the Important Events of both Home Missions and Foreign Missions are also included, together with Suggestions For Junior Leaders.

They make a book 5 x 7 inches in size, 128 pages, red cloth binding—a handsome, attractive volume. Price 35c per copy postpaid.

publication having a circulation of less than 1,000 copies. Also all publications on which the circulation is not stated in the American Newspaper Directory. There are quite a large number of religious publications which make no reports to any directory and on which directory publishers find it practically impossible to get information.

It is likely in the thirteen Southern States the quantity of circulation of Religious Literature considerably exceeds 2,500,000 circulation. This is approximately one-fourth of all the literature published in the South.

From the above facts it is quite evident that the thirteen Southern States at least are growing more religious instead of less so, and are consuming a constantly increasing quantity of religious literature. Indeed the circulation of religious literature is growing more rapidly than the circulation of secular literature.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-eight years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 100 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

CHRIST'S WINSOMENESS.

A winsome voice my Master had,
He spoke and strong men rose
And in their fishing garments clad Stayed not for day to close.
And one who at the treasury sat
Looked up, and seeing, came
And all his gains and friends forgot.
At hearing of His name.
So winsome was my Master's voice,
They and the whole wide world rejoice.

A winsome touch my Master had,
The suffering ones arose
And, doing as He gently bade,
Pain vanished and their woes.
The sick and the heavy-laden came
And something in His face
Brought rest and healing strength. The lame
Crept close with stumbling pace.
So winsome was my Master's touch,
The whole wide world felt never such.

A winsome smile my Master had,
The little children rose
Though friends and followers forbade,
Him as their own they chose,
And eager ran to His embrace
And straightway had no fear,
For something in His loving face
Assured them they were dear.
So winsome when my Master smiled
His very own were man and child.

THE UNCLEAN THINGS.

Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean things. .2 Cor. 6-17.

Lot saved his life but lost his property because he mixed with the wrong crowd. Lot's one strong point was that he maintained a sort of personal regard for and individual faith in, Jehovah: his weak point, and that which cost him all his belongings, and came dangerously near costing him his life as well, was that he was not particular about the company he kept. Lot thought that a good man could run with bad company and make money. And what Lot wanted in particular was money, wealth, riches. Lot put the dollar first and the company he kept second. I have known men who went with bad company "to redeem and purify it." Nine out of ten such men go down to the level of the company they keep.

One of the great evils of strong drink is the company it brings one into. Take a decent and well behaved man who takes "an occasional drink." What sort of company does such an one have to keep to get his drink? He has to go, or will go, among the swaggerers and the swearers the sots and the staggerers, to get his supply. Take the cleanest man in the community and let him begin to drink, and as sure as faith you will sooner or later see that clean man keeping company with unclean—men going into foul and filthy places to get his supply.

A similar word may be said, with a slightly changed figure, of a card player. This person is in bad company immediately that he takes the card in hand. There is not a hand fair enough, there is not a finger graceful enough, in all this universe to redeem the playing card. The gambler and the dive laid hold on this device for passtime, profit or diversion long, long ago: and evermore in this world the playing card is his, and his symbol, and no amount of argument can make it otherwise. The fairest ladies of the land, and the finest drawing rooms of the rich may shuffle and deal the costliest hands ever made: but the glaring fact just abides all the same that the real, genuine, natural home of cards is the gambling den. Here they are handled with more deftness and more skill; here they are in their natural element and environment. Gambling and the low dive have made the gaming card unclean forevermore.

The basest and the foulest of men, and that too for the basest and foulest of purposes, have laid their hands upon, established their preeminent right to, the gaming card, and no amount of finery and flattery is going to dislodge them from their claim. The method and the handling of this device have made cards significant of evil, low, and base practice, and symbolizing the bad as they do, they are themselves bad company. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." If gaming cards have not for the centuries been a source of evil communications nothing has.

The lesson text warns us to keep good company. This is one reason why going to church, attending Sunday school, being at prayer meeting help so many—they throw us into good company.

Lot's wife, however, is a terrible warning to those who in body accompany the good, but in heart and soul long for the bad, the companionship of the wicked. She was at heart a woman of the world, a society woman of Sodom. She had no heart in the task she was trying, that of going away from Sodom.

Separate yourself from the bad, but do you, oh beloved, carry your heart with you in that separation.

J. J. SUMMERBELL DEAD.

This good and great man passed away at his home, 215 4th Ave., Dayton, Ohio., at 6:45 P. M. Friday Feb. 28. The end came after a few hours of suffering from a violent attack of heart trouble. Dr. Summerbell was born in Millford, N. J., in 1844, was the first graduate of Union Christian College, Merom, Ind., and was honored of the Lord and of his brethren with the highest positions of usefulness and influence in the Christian Church. He occupied, at various times, some of our most influential pulpits, and was for sixteen years editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, our general Church organ. Since retiring from the latter position, Dr. Summerbell had occupied his time writing, preaching, and lecturing as his bent of mind and opportunity and strength afforded. His recent book, not long since reviewed in these columns, and much of which appeared in The Christian Sun, in several chapters, "Mountains of The Bible," is a masterpiece of biblical insight, geographical description, and English composition. Possibly the latest manuscript for a book to be finished was that given in a series of lectures at Elon College in December on "Campbellism." He had spent much time in research and in composition on this work, and had he lived the same was to appear in book form. We trust his desire in this direction will be carried out.

Dr. Summerbell had distinctly a preacher's face and countenance. In a company of thousands you would have had no trouble in picking him out as a preacher. All his writings and public utterances were scholarly, dignified, accurate and logical. As a scholar and logician J. J.

Summerbell had few equals. All his work showed the hand, the mind, and the heart of a master. In all our lives we never met a more courteous, kindly and consecrated man. Sun readers will be the losers for Dr. Summerbell's going away. In this week's issue we present two articles from his pen, the one about Bro. Hess' health being received on Thursday, only the day before he died. This is possibly the last message this gracious heart and great mind ever wrote for public print and it was such a message as we would expect, that of manly concern and deep interest for another, brief, accurate, ample.

A great man has fallen. A noble soul has gone back to God. He served his day well. The night came early; but he must have already been weary from the great task of a full and fruitful life. God rest him. Our sympathy blends into mutual sorrow of the devoted wife, and the efficient son, Rev. Carlyle Summerbell, who survive him.

WOMEN IN MISSIONS.

Women ought to be interested in missions, if they are not: and they usually are, if given the opportunity. The lot of women is harder in Christian lands than that of men; but in non-Christian lands woman's plight is pitiable in the extreme, especially among the lower and peasant classes. There are millions of women in pagan countries today whose lot is no better than, in instances not as good as, that of beasts of burden. They are the burden bearers of the pagan world. More than this, they are reduced to conditions of sorrow, servitude and suffering which are inconceivable to us in a Christian country. Writing from memory it occurs to us that there are sixteen million widows in India, three millions of whom were widows before they were six years old. And widowhood in India means social ostracism, degradation, disgrace and reminders of inferiority throughout the whole life.

Women are wanting to vote in this country, and are going to do so some day to show that they are men's equals politically as well as socially. This may, or may not, prove beneficial to the race; but the desire and the tendency show how far women have come under Christian influence and inspiration. In millions of pagan homes(?) women are no more allowed to sit at the table with their husbands, or appear as their social equals, than dogs or pigs are. Wherever Jesus Christ is preached, and accepted as Savior and Redeemer, all this is changed and woman comes into her own.

Is it any wonder that women take a lively and enthusiastic interest in Christian missions when given a chance?

In our Christian Church we have not given the women a square deal in the matter of missions. We have seen to it that even in this department of Christian activity, the men shall have the say so, first and last. But our Women's Missionary Societies, now springing up in all our wide-awake churches, are an evidence that the women are going to take a part and have a say in mission work. God speed the day when every Christian church in all the land will have an active and up-to-date Woman's Missionary Society to study missions, teach missions, talk about missions, give to missions.

Our Woman's Board of the Southern Convention is calling for a conference of the women from societies and churches to meet in session at Elon College in May to discuss missions, and to make plans for prosecuting the work with greater enthusiasm and efficiency. If this is to be a success the women must make up their minds to attend this meeting in great numbers, and learn together of the great work to be done amongst us.

SOLEMN SUMMONS.

President Woodrow Wilson may fail in his undertakings to govern this country aright: but no one can doubt the man's honesty and integrity of purpose, and his solemn determination to do his best. Especially is this true since his inaugural address yesterday, delivered, it is estimated, before 100,000 people. That address is a classic, and some of its sentences will live. We must give place here to the closing paragraph, for it expresses a sentiment in which every patriotic citizen of every party will join:

"The feelings with which we face this new age of right and opportunity sweep across our heart-strings like some air out of God's own presence where justice and mercy are reconciled and the judge and brother are one. We know our task to be no mere task of politics but a task which shall search us through and through whether we be able to understand our time and the need of our people, whether we be indeed their spokesmen and interpreters, whether we have the pure heart to comprehend and the rectified will to choose our high course of action.

"This is not a day of triumph: it is a day of dedication. Here muster not the forces of party, but the forces of humanity. Men's hearts wait upon us; men's lives hang in the balance; men's hopes call upon us to say what we will do. Who shall live up to the great trust? Who dares fail to try? I summon all honest men, all patriotic, all forward-looking men, to my side. God helping me, I will not fail them, if they will but counsel and sustain me!"

That is a manly utterance and could only come from a great mind and a clean, patriotic heart.

COMMENT.

One distributing agency in Charlotte, says a Charlotte contemporary, sells annually 1,500,000 gallons of coca-cola, and the sales of this beverage in the State amount annually to 6,000,000 gallons. Our Legislature is proposing to tax this drink in the sum of five cents per gallon which would give a revenue of $30,000, annually to the State treasury. Estimating ten bottles to the gallon, there are consumed sixty million bottles of coco-cola in this State annually, which at 5cts. the bottle amounts to three million dollars a year the people of our State are swallowing down in a beverage which helps none and hurts many.

—Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey was inaugurated 28th President of the United States Tuesday, March 4th amid shouts of enthusiasm from thousands of patriots gathered from over the country. It was said to have been the greatest throng that ever gathered to witness and participate in a similar ceremony. This is the second President Princeton has given to the nation, James Madison having gone from that place just one hundred years ago. Mr. Wilson goes into the White House under favorable auspices. He was chosen by an enormous majority in the electoral college, his public utterances since his election have made him more popular than when elected, and his plain common sense manner united with his staid and sound Presbyterian faith and practice, commend him to a people who wish him well in the gigantic task before him.

The women are going to vote. Many of the most "progressive" have made up their minds to that, and this is a day of "progressiveness." You need not take an easy snooze on your dignity and say women suffrage is all wrong, and will not work, and will greatly hurt, and so forth. Many women have made up their minds to vote, and others are doing so every day. So, sooner or later, very likely sooner, they are going to vote.

"General" Rosalie Jones and a few faithful walked all the way from New York to Albany to present a petition to the Governor asking the franchise for woman. The same "General" with her faithfuls then marched all the way to Washington to present a petition and bombard the capitol with their demands. Washington went wild. Thousands thronged the thoroughfares to catch a glimpse of the suffragettes and to join in the general jubilation. Pennsylvania Avenue was not wide, nor large enough to give room for the suffragettes, their adherents, followers, apostles, and shouters. The inauguration of the President created but little more notice and comment than did the appearance and performance of the suffragettes. Even four years ago such an event would have been impossible. Woman suffrage as an idea is growing. We ourselves do not see how the ballot is to benefit the sisters, but our opinion is not worth the ink it takes to write it. The sisters have made up their minds, or are doing so, to exercise the franchise. And you may count ultimately on their doing so.

This is evidently a very strong anti-American feeling in Mexico. Last Sunday this feeling manifested itself along the Texas border in a pitched battle between some troops of Mexicans and Americans, in which four of the former were killed and many were wounded. In Texas we are told, and across the line, this feeling of national animosity runs high and may yet produce a very embarrassing situation for President Wilson to handle. The advocates of peace have yet a great task before the lamb and the lion shall lie down together, especially if the lamb is to lie down on the outside of the lion.

—The limit in sky-scrapers has not been reached we presume: for the latest is the biggest and highest of them all, Woolworth Building, New York. This is the loftiest business structure on earth, being 57 stories, totalling 750 feet high. There are 27 acres of floor space, 34 elevators; the material in it weighs three hundred and sixty million pounds, and the cost was $13,000,000. There is no "corner" yet on the air and sky, hence the immense saving in having 27 acres of floor space on less than half an acre of land. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, or shall do.

—In this world of change and vicissitude no one can tell what awaits or will befall, in the whirl of the wheel of fortune. Mr. Taft's private secretary, Mr. Hilles, who received a salary of $7,500 a year while at the White House goes to New York with an insurance company on a salary of $20,000; Mr. Taft who at the White House received $75,000 a year, goes to Yale to teach law at $5,000. Still there is a great deal of compensation in being "a teacher," a real, living, dignified Professor—especially since Professor Wilson has become President, and another "Professor" somebody has married Mrs. Grover Cleveland.

RESURRECTION OF THE BODY.

The Bible teaches the resurrection of the body; and it is a precious doctrine. To antagonize it indicates doubt of the power of God, or of his possible intention to confer so wonderful a blessing on the righteous man.

But such a salvation would be far more brilliant at once, and far more glorious permanently, than for God to allow the body to gory forever to disappear.

The body is precious. What a loss to us here and now to lose an eye, or a foot, or an arm! As age comes on, the body becomes more precious. We labor for its comfort; we plan for its development. The hand becomes cunning with the machine, and the ear becomes sensitive to harmony or discord.

By the shape of the features we observe the growth of intellect or moral power. The beloved face of the mother so belongs to the body that when it is laid in the earth, the assurance that the spirit lives serves only partially to check the flowing tears.

The Bible, in teaching the glorious doctrine of the resurrection of the body, opens up visions of a perfect salvation, that not only brings joy to the heart but challenges the most subtle intellects of scientists for many periods of eternity. How shall God give sight to the risen body of the blind man, who groped on earth for many years in darkness, while still preserving the identity of the body? How shall God make the humpback stand in erect freedom, but still in his transformed body reveal the patience with which he bore his affliction through life? How shall God make the scar on the soldier's hand beam with heavenly glory and yet reveal to us our brave defender? Scientists in heaven will study the divine process in these things, whereby God shall turn the mark of the smallpox into some form of beauty, to compensate the sufferer, while still catching the eye of his friend for recognition. To Thomas, Jesus proved his identity by his scars.

What new sciences, in fact, will startle the man of knowledge, who shall enter on the study of God's way of turning disfigurements into decorations, deformities into treasures, and ugliness into beauty! In heaven my father's crooked finger will somehow be preserved, but changed gloriously into some new use, because of the injury borne through lifetime without complaint, or even mention.

We sometimes stand in amazement at God's way of changing oxygen and hydrogen into water in this world; but it is no more wonderful than the way in which by his heavenly forces at the resurrection morning he will turn the decayed, and probably vanished, human body into spiritual resemblance to and gratifying sameness with, the forms and features we have loved and cherished.

God is good, and God is great. That is, the true God. There is nothing too good for him to do; and there is nothing that will baffle his power and knowledge. If you doubt the resurrection of the body under the government of your incompetent duty, why not come over into the kingdom of Jesus and worship a God great enough to raise the dead?

S. S. ASSOCIATION.

The Thirteenth Annual State Convention of the North Carolina Sunday School Association will be held in Greensboro April 22-24. The International Sunday School Association will provide two speakers for this Convention, Franklin McElfresh, Ph. D., of Chicago, Superintendent of Teacher Training in North America, and Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, Newark, N. J., Superintendent of the Elementary Division. These great leaders insure a feast of good things for the Sunday School people of all denominations of the entire State, in addition to the splendid home talent which will be used.

Hon. Jeter C. Prichard, of Asheville, is President of the Association; Hon. R. B. Glenn, Winston-Salem, W. H. Sprunt, Wilmington, and C. W. Tillet, of Charlotte, are Vice Presidents. The General Executive Committee is composed of thirty representative men of the State. The duties of the Central Executive Committee is to direct the work of the association, and the members are as follows: W. A. Harper, Elon College, Chairman; N. B. Broughton, Raleigh, Vice Chairman; Dr. C. W. Byrd, Greensboro; R. P. Phillips, Greensboro; R. G. Vaughn, Greensboro; G. T. Stevenson, Winston-Salem; A. E. Tate, High Point; Geo. W. Watts, Durham.

This is one of the general religious organizations that undertakes to sympathetically and vitally relate the religious forces to the end that the highest and best may be reached by all of them without in any sense interfering with the plans of the denominations. In other words, it is a federation of the denominational forces that they may in this School of Methods, mechanics and dynamics, put themselves in the best shape for serving the Kingdom of God, as it is represented through the local school and the church.

The World's Sunday School Association, of which the State Association is a part, will hold its Eighth Convention next July 8-15, in Zurich, Switzerland. Five ships, chartered especially for the purpose, will carry the delegates from all over the world, and can be attended at moderate cost, with interesting side-trips arranged to suit all tourists wishing to go to other parts of Europe and the Orient.

Those interested in either of these conventions should write to the North Carolina Sunday School Association, Greensboro, N. C., for further information.

EASTER TIDINGS.

Easter holiday is fast approaching; and the people, in general, are busy making preparations for it. Some are looking forward to the time with bright anticipations. The goddess of Fashion is already whispering to many and saying to them, "What new suit shall I get for Easter?"

Dear friends, while we are anticipating a pleasant time and are busy preparing for the adornment of our bodies, let us not forget what the first Easter morning really meant for us. The One who arose from the tomb on that glad morning does not condemn the proper adornment of our bodies, or merry-making with our friends; but he wants us to put on the proper adornment of heart and commemorate the day with due honor to Him.

Our risen Lord has prepared a bountiful suit for each one of us. This suit far surpasses any that Fashion may suggest; and it is not only appropriate for the condemnation of Easter, but it is perfectly adapted to every season of the year. This is the pure white suit of righteousness trimmed with faith, hope, and charity. It is the loveliest and most becoming suit that can be worn. It gives proper adornment to the heart and always makes our faces shine and look beautiful.

Friends let us put on our full suit of righteousness and continue to wear it; then as we commemorate each successive Easter morning we will honor our risen Lord by wearing a suit just like His. He says, "Be ye holy: for I am holy."

FILLING THE RANK.

By Mrs. Fred Bulloch.

A few weeks ago the "Sun" had an article with the above heading, telling of the departure of a native of one of the countries now at war with Turkey to fill in the ranks of an army depleted by death and disease.

The thought came to me as I read it "How many of us stand ready to fill in the ranks of the army battling for God and Right. The line seems so pitifully thin sometimes, the breaks in the ranks so obvious and those who ought to fill those breaks sit with hands idly folded, eyes closed and ears stopped to the cry for succor.

I read recently of a Greek in Toledo, Ohio who had saved two hundred dollars during his residence in this country. It was all he had, yet he had gladly drawn it out to carry him back to the Fatherland to help fight her battlers. He would give his all for the love of but a small portion of this world; how many of us would give up one thing, one little hope or desire or habit or pleasure to aid the great Fight of Right. We kneel and pray "Thy Kingdom Come" but if we meant it with one-half the fervor shown by the Greek, God's kingdom would be here ere one generation passed from this earth.

We can easily see why our neighbor should fight; we know the pastor should always be armed for the fray we are convinced our brothers should give of the abundance of his time or money, but as for ourselves, oh that is a different matter. I heard a minister say once there was only one verse in the Bible which he believed every one knew, and that was "I pray thee, have me excused." Shame to us if this be so; with the greatest Captain of all Time the greatest Country (Heaven) of which the world can know.

The dearest Home to which heart can aspire to fill our breasts with patriotism's purest fires, we linger and loiter and fail so miserably to "keep step" with our great Commander.

"The light is on, oh Christian soldier
And face to face in stern array
And colors streaming

The right and wrong engage today
The fight is on, but be not weary

Be strong and in His love hold fast.

Look not back but buckling on the whole armor of God, taking the sword of the spirit and casting aside all "superfluity of naughtiness" let us keep an ungroken front to the foe, as we "press toward the mark of the prize of the calling of God in Christ Jesus.

NORFOLK-PORTSMOUTH LETTER.

The work of the churches of this vicinity has been very encouraging during the month of February. The attendance at the church services has been above the average and deep interest manifested in the work in all of the different congregations. The Memorial Temple has just closed a revival that has put new life into the church and added to the church roll forty-eight new names, which make a total of seventy-seven that have joined the church since Dr. Penison came to the field last June. Last Sunday morning a service for the new members was held; of the 77 there were present 53. Everything possible is being done by the pastor to maintain the evangelistic spirit. A league has been formed, composed of about sixty members, who are pledged to try to win at least one soul each per quarter.

The Lambert's Point church raised during the month $50.00 on its church debt and the Memorial Temple $225.00 on parsonage, which takes up the last note.

The Sunday schools were well attended during the month as will be seen from the following figures; Memorial Temple, 252; Lambert's Point, 149; Portsmouth, 122 and South Norfolk, 113. These figures are the averages for the month. The above schools added to their rolls 67 new scholars. Berkley and the 3rd Church, Norfolk had no report as their pastors were not present at the Ministers' Conference during the month. We hope they had much to encourage their work and are thoroughly enjoying the fruits of their labors.

The subject of "Developing Leaders in the Local Church" was the topic discussed at our last conference. The fact was brought out in the discussion that the first and most important thing in those being prepared for leadership in the church was a deep sense of responsibility. Until we feel the weight of God's work upon our hearts and are willing to bear the burdens peculiar to it we have not learned the first lesson of leadership. The heart must be in the work. The pastor must lay the facts of responsibility upon the hearts of his people. This can be most successfully done in heart to heart talks and in conferences of two or three. The day is at hand when we must have trained leaders in the work of the church, trained in heart as well as in mind.

Portsmouth, South Norfolk, Lambert's Point and Rosemont are preparing for revival services in the near future. Let us pray that the good work may reach all our churches and we may see a great awakening in them all.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Our much beloved brother, Rev. J. H. Barney, Clearville, Pa., was the first to reach us with a dollar with which to send The Sun a year to the good sister who loved The Sun but was not able to subscribe. Another dollar came in a letter from some generous heart who wanted to do good but who did not care for the name to be disclosed. Just the dollar in currency folded in a piece of paper without name or comment, save the clipping from The Sun. This latter will be used to send The Sun a year to a dear soul I happen to know wants the paper, but is unable to subscribe and is too modest to say so. The two will be used to good purposes and for the year.

—Job work has begun in our Publishing House: but the heaviest and most important press, the two revolution Babcock Optimus, has not arrived though the order was placed first of November. The builders in New London, Conn. wired us last week that as they had finished the machinery and were testing it out in the factory one workman threw on a belt before the word to start was given by another, and the result was a smash up. They promise now to have the shipment ready in a week, and be here to install it for us as soon as freights will bring it here. This will explain why the new and greatly improved Christian Sun will not appear before April 1st.

—The decision to increase the number of shares of stock in our Publishing House Company from two hundred to three hundred, at $50.00 each, par value, seems to have been a most happy and agreeable one to our people and friends. Of the one hundred extra shares offered more than fifty have been taken, leaving less than half hundred shares yet offered. This writer is kept at the office and the desk by the pressure of many duties, and can only get out a day, or a few days, now and then. If others who wish this stock, and have the capital to invest in what promises to be a perfectly safe and wholesome enterprise would write us, it would certainly prove a great personal saving of time travel and expense to us.

—North Carolina can't quite figure it out as to why her citizens who are invited into Presidents' cabinets are all given the Secretary of the Navy portfolio. Four North Carolinians have been in as many different cabinets, and all have been Secretaries of the Navy, as follows: In Jackson's first term John Branch was commissioned March 9, 1829: in Fillmore's administration William A. Graham was commissioned July 22, 1850: in Pierce's administration James C. Dobbin went in March 7, 1853; and in William Henry Harrison's administration George E. Badger was commissioned March 5, 1841.

Mr. Josephus Daniels who goes into President Woodrow Wilson's cabinet as Secretary of the Navy is therefore the first cabinet officer this State has had since 1851, and is the fifth in the State to be a member of the cabinet and to be likewise Secretary of the Navy. North Carolina, an inland State, seems to be an adept in procuring naval officers.

—Mr. P. H. Fleming writing from High Point March 1st "I received three members into church fellowship at Asheboro Jan. 13th making five since we reorganized. I hope to arrange for a protracted meeting at Asheboro to be held sometime in April. At High Point we are negotiating for a lot. I plan to begin a protracted meeting here fifth Sunday in March."

—A Burlington, N. C. Correspondent gave this information to the paper Feb. 28: "

Rev. P. H. Flemming, who for 15 years was pastor of the Christian church in this city, but resigned some two years ago to accept work elsewhere, will move back to Burlington and make this his home. He owns a lot on Church street, near the Christian parsonage, and is having material placed upon it preparatory to building in the early Spring. During his long pastorate here he made many friends, not only among his own congregation, but in all denominations, who are glad to see him and his family return."

Bro. Fleming is now situated at High Point, being in charge, as Conference and Convention missionary, of our work there and at Asheboro. The above plans in no wise interfere with the work in which he is at present engaged, so far as we are informed.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I am going to tell those who read this letter about a visit I made to a woman on her eightieth birthday. It occurred on the 18th of this good month of February, 1913. The woman's name is Mary L. Felton. Her maiden name was Clark before she married Jethro Felton. She resides at Magnolia, three miles from Suffolk, with her son, S. J. Felton, and it was at his house I dined on the day above named. Four of her sons and some of their wives were present.

Mrs. Felton is a widow with a large offspring. She was the mother of eight and six of them are living: Joanna, S. J., John S., J. C., Thomas E., W. J., are living; Elizabeth and Richard are dead. By marriage seven have been brought into the family, making 15 in the first step from Mrs. Felton. There have been 39 grand children born and 30 of them are living. By marriage nine have been added to the list of grand children, making 48 in the second step from the grand mother. There have been born into this family 35 great grand children, 26 of whom are living. Adding these three groups together gives a sum total of 98; subtracting the 16 brought into the family by marriage from the whole number 98, leaves 82 as the total number of Mrs. Felton's own descendants—62 living and 20 dead.

This family dwelt in Gates Co., North Carolina, but four of their children now live in Virginia. So far as I know, they are all members of the Christian church and most of them are noted for piety and church loyalty. One of her sons, James C., is a member of the Suffolk choir and a Deacon in the church; and one of her grandsons, C. J., graduated from Elon College last June and has been honored with the position of tutor in the College this year.

I told Mrs. Felton she would have to live two years more to overtake her own children, as she had lived only 80 years and had 82 children; but they have such a start, I doubt whether she will ever overtake them.

It was a great pleasure to sit at the table with this good woman on her eightieth birthday, the table surrounded by her children and their wives, and served in part by her grand children. "God setteth the solitary in families," and it is beautiful to see a pious old mother in the home of children, looking down from eight decades on the children of three generations.

Family life determines many of the great problems of human society. It is the unit that really involves all the complex questions of church and state. Character, education, enterprise, government, economy and loyalty, are all factors in the true home. God has several times put all human interests in the family. Noah's family was the repository of all human interests in the time of the flood. Abram and his family was the spring out of which came the Hebrew nation. Christianity was in the keeping of Joseph and Mary. Had these families failed history must have been written in red ink. Family life in these times is in danger of losing its foundations and its importance. Modern civilization invades the family and demands the attention, the service, the obedience of the young. The only remedy for this loss is to develop all the fundamentals of modesty, purity, obedience, charity and honesty in society that of right belong to the family. A loftier public sentiment, morality, temperance, and dignity must be cultivated in public places, assemblies and service.

NORFOLK LETTER.

Let us be good, true, kind and sympathetic men and women first, and preachers, doctors, lawyers and business men afterwards.

The end of all our work and effort as Christians should be to show others how to be humane.

No doubt, being weak and imperfect as we are, it is hard to avoid it, but candidly, I feel that the deadly taint of "professionalism" often makes the dear milk of "human kindness" to curdle in the mouths of those for whose good we are really seeking to work. Sometimes, I fear that we allow the "preacher" in us to become so prominent that the "man" is not permitted to exert the influence for good that he should.

The "professional" air in the ministry is especially objectionable to the world at large. The reason for this is found in the fact that, although I have never seen the distinction made, yet, in clerical ranks, as elsewhere, "professionalism" tends unconsciously toward the building up of the "caste" system, which always separates men from their fellows. But, the spirit of our Lord Christ is eternally opposed to the caste idea. Many ministers, whose dress, habits, and general deportment make their calling "stick out" all too patently, would be grieved to have it charged that they are aiding in the building up of a clerical caste, but they are, nevertheless.

A good motto for preachers, as for everyone else would be, "I dare be all that a true MAN ought to be, and he who dares more is no man."

Again, let us be men first, and preachers, doctors and lawyers afterward.

I have an idea that a minister should know all classes of people, and all ranks of life so well and so intimately that he can mingle with these classes and in these ranks, and among those whom he finds there without offending them by a spirit of "patronage," or pious condescension, things which even sinners loathe with utter loathing. Said Paul, "I became all things to all men, if by any means I might win some."

If we are as large-hearted and as kind as we ought to be, then we shall be remembered for these, long after others have forgotten our gifts, talents and graces in other ways. They may, and will forget our sermons, our writings and our eloquence but they will remember our love. For the sake of our love for them, men will forgive our defects and our shortcomings.

Down in Tennessee, never was any man loved by the people of the entire State, regardless of party affiliations, as was the late Senator "Bob" Taylor. When the wires bore the news that he was no more, there was mourning in village and hamlet and city, from the Watauga, to the Mississippi, and when his remains were laid to rest in old Gray Cemetery in Knoxville there were literally "acres of people" present in saddened and sorrowful mien.

And yet, "Bob" Taylor never ranked as a great statesman. In real intellect and brilliancy Tennessee had a dozen sons who were his superiors. Furthermore, he made no loud pretensions to piety. In his habits and conduct there were recognized deficiencies, which, in one of less heart-power than he, had been counted grave indeed.

But still he was the idol of the people, because he loved them. He was the "apostle of sunshine" whose chief ambition was to spread joy and gladness everywhere. Money he cared not for save as it ministered to this end. His honors as thrice governor of his State and later as its representative in the Senate at Washington sat upon him lightly. His chief claim to distinction is that he was simply a great-hearted man who loved his fellows.

So may we be. God help us that we may place the emphasis where it belongs; namely, upon those qualities of love and unselfishness, that touch of pitying compassion, which makes the whole world akin.

Henry Spencer Booth.

FRANKLIN NOTES.

It was our good fortune to visit Elon College, and assist in a series of meetings for eleven days. It was indeed a revival of religion. We arrived on the bill Jan. 27th, and it was a feast of fat things to be there. There have been many changes since we were there a student, but all the changes have been for good. Electric lights are a great improvement over the old smoked lamps, and steam heat is better than carrying an arm full of wood up two flights of stairs. We do not envy those enjoying these advantages, but we rejoice with them.

Many are surprised that such large numbers are reached in meetings at Elon College, but it is the most natural thing at all, for it really is a Christian institution. The members of the faculty and the President are Christians, and are ready for any personal work. During the meeting it was a common thing to see members of the faculty talking to a student about his soul. I was present several times, and heard the earnest prayer of the teacher for the scholar. I have never seen so many personal workers in any meeting.

The student body is much larger than we ever saw it, but it was almost like a great large family, for they all seem to love each other. There are more ministerial students than were ever there before, and we feel that this is a healthy sign. We can say with Dr. Cuyler, "Would that I could lift up my voice in every academy, college, and university on this broad continent. I would say to every gifted Christian youth, 'God and humanity have need of you.' He who redeemed you by His precious blood has a sovereign right to the best brains and the most persuasive tongues and the highest culture."

We appreciate the many kindnesses shown us during our stay. Our faith in the institution grows stronger all the time, and we believe it is destined to be a great institution.

C. H. Rowland.

Pounded.

I gladly confess to an unexpected pounding. It came about this way: On the last night of the old year we had a Christmas tree for our Sunday school at the parsonage. About one hundred were present. We had some recitations and special songs. After the presents were given out confectioneries were served and we thought everything was over. Bro. D. S. Hogg, Supt. of the school said that there was something else on the program. Then they began to bring out boxes, and bundles and made the preacher and his family unusually glad. There was flour, sugar, meat, pickles, soap, etc., and about $15.00 worth of dry goods. We haven't a large membership here, but we have some faithful souls who love their pastor, and delight to make him and family glad. I'll try and be a better pastor.

H. W. Elder.

Pastor Surprised.

On Tuesday night Feb. 11th, 1913 members and friends of the Rosemont Christian church came to the home of their pastor, Rev. Daniel A. Keys, and family in south Norfolk, and give them a great surprise, and a very large pounding.

They loaded them down with the good and substantial things of life. There is seldom seen such a happy people as assembled on this occasion. The evening was spent in social greetings and many fine selections of music were rendered by Mrs. Etheridge, Mrs. O. S. Mills, a solo by Mrs. H. Roland Morrison and several choruses.

After an evening of enjoyment in this manner the happy company returned to their homes at Rosemont.

The pastor and his family appreciated these tokens of kindness, and hope that these kindly relations may last for many years.

FOR THE SUPERINTENDENT.

Can a superintendent so introduce his school to the lesson that instead of seeming a stranger to them, it will seem like an old friend whose further study will be interesting? Here is an illustration: A visitor of one school says that he once went into the class study with a sort of dread, until a new superintendent was elected. The new officer always took three or four minutes to give the lesson setting and acquaint the school with the characters in such a happy, attractive way that everyone wanted to learn more about them. This will help folks who have come to Sunday school without having studied their lesson, and who do not believe they have time to study it and will probably help them in studying it in the future. The one thing that makes the Sunday school worth while is the study of the Bible to build character. Then, let's exalt Bible study in the presence of the whole school.

FOR THE TEACHER.

It was once said by a shrewd and discriminating observer, that no one ever went away from a meeting in which he had taken part, and called it stupid. This may seem to be a sweeping statement, but the principle asserted is true, as a general thing, as few will deny. A part in any performance, naturally involves an interest in it, and when one is actually interested, the critic spirit is held in abeyance. Besides, "the instinct of self-preservation" forbids remarks that might, at least by implication, assail the performer.

For this reason, among others, it is to the teacher's advantage to draw out the many, instead of confining the chance to take part to himself. Those who might indulge in some faultfinding, in the case of a lecture by one, are likely to lose such disposition in the interest of the interchange which includes an entire class.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Suggestions and Comment on S. S. Lesson for Mar 9

Subject.—The destruction of Sodom.

Text.—Gen. 19:1-3, 12-19.

Time.—B. C. 1897 (Ussher); "B. C. 1944—within a century or two"—(Beecher). About B. C. 2235 (Sayce).

Places.—Sodom, Gomorrah, Zoar, "the land of the plain."

Persons.—Angels, Lot and family, Abraham.

Golden Text.—Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, And touch no unclean thing.—2 Cor. 6:17.

Leading Thought.—God warns us to keep away from evil.

The purpose of the International Committee in making this the quarterly temperance lesson is that the wickedness and destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah should be used to teach truths regarding the degradation and destruction wrought by the use of alcoholic drinks. The cities of the plain were cesspools of iniquity and had to be destroyed. The saloon is the breeding place of every kind of wickedness practiced in modern times. It must be destroyed.

One day to Abraham in the door of his tent there appeared three strangers, whom he welcomed heartily and entertained generously. It proved that one of these was the Lord, and two were angels. Yet again God renewed the covenant that Abraham and Sarah should have a son who should be the heir of the promises.

As his celestial guests departed, Abraham courteously accompanied them for some distance, and the Lord told him of the impending doom of the Cities of the Plain of the Jordan. Then followed that wonderful intercessory prayer that reveals so much regarding Abraham as the Friend of God and of God as the Friend of man.

To-day we learn that because of their iniquity Sodom, Gomorrah and neighboring cities were suddenly, awfully, completely destroyed.

And this is our quarterly temperance lesson. The use of alcoholic drinks is a most prolific source of iniquity. In the days of Noah, in the days of Lot, during all history, it has brought destruction to estate, to body, to mind, to soul. It destroys for time and for eternity. And it is just as destructive to-day as at any time in the past.

OBJECT LESSON.

An apple which is partly rotten. Cut out the rotten spot. Why did I cut the apple in that way? To save what was good. Did I destroy the rotten part by taking it out? No, it was already destroyed. When fire burned up the Cities of the Plain, of which our lesson tells, it took away from the earth that which had already become bad through and through. All the good that was left was saved. The story tells who the people were who escaped.

A burning match. How great a fire is it possible to kindle with this tiny match? A waste basket full of paper. A furnace fire. But the fire may not always stop with a little fire. Children playing with matches have burned down their homes and even a whole block. Intemperance and impurity are playing with fire. The beginning of ruin is a little thing at first—a first drink, an impure wish cherished and then indulged. To-day's story shows the end to which sin led a group of cities long ago.

BIBLE VERSUS JUG.

The credit of actually winning an election is claimed for a party emblem in the little town of Benton, Ky., where a local option election was held. The campaigners for license adopted a jug as their emblem. The Prohibitionists later adopted the picture of an open Bible with the words "Holy Bible" in big letters across the top of the pages as the emblem of the anti-license forces. The people may be thirsty, but they are pious, and it is related that when the open Bible and the jug of whisky were pictorially placed before them they couldn't vote against the Bible, even though they favored license. The choice between the two touched them in a vulnerable spot, and the election went very dry.—New York Sun.

LESSON ANNOUNCEMENT.

Last Sunday's lesson told of God repeating the promise of a son to Abraham. Next Sunday's lesson tells of the birth of this son, of his happy boyhood and of the strange command Abraham received to give him up, though he meant everything to him.

Try to recall this week what is the hardest thing you have ever done for conscience's sake, and whether doing the hard thing made you stronger and happier. Also try to think in what way you have earned promotions, either from grade to grade in school or to positions of trust in the business world.

Then come next Sunday and study together the story of how Abraham became worthy to be called "The Father of the Faithful."—Hageman.

For HEADACHE—MICKS' CAPUDINE.
Whether from Colds, Heat, Stomach or Nervous Troubles, Capudine will relieve you. It's liquid-pleasant to take—acts immediately. Try it. 10c. 5c. and 50c. at drug stores.

NOTES ON C. E. TOPIC, MARCH 9.

Subject: Obeying Conscience.—1 John 3: 18-24. (A Leaderless Meeting).

It is suggested that this be a leaderless meeting, that everything be spontaneous. One will announce the first hymn, another will offer the opening prayer, another read the scripture and so on. Everyone will take a part without having to be introduced. Let there be no pauses.

Some one should make the opening talk, being well prepared, defining particularly what conscience is and what is meant by obeying it. Have others to define conscience; others tell of its application.

SUGGESTIVE ILLUSTRATIONS.

"A nail driven too near a compass may make a false guide; a secret sin will do the same for the conscience." Study carefully the Word of God.

"A bell-bouy that gets loose is transformed from a means of safety to a peril; so is an unanchored conscience." Bible knowledge is the anchor.

"A soldier, carrying a dinner bucket, dropped his hands to his sides when a waggish friend shouted 'attention!' and lost his dinner. Our obedience to conscience should be as instinctive as that."

"A conscience in good conditions responds as readily to slight suggestions as a bicycle well oiled and balanced responds to the bending of the rider's body."

INSPIRING POINTS.

A good conscience is a continual Christmas.—B. F.

Trust that man in nothing who has not a conscience in everything.—Sterne.

A disciplined conscience is a man's best friend. It may not be his most amiable.—A. Phelps.

He will easily be content and at peace, whose conscience is pure.—Thos. A. Kimpis.

Conscience is merely our own judgment of the right or wrong of our actions, and so can never be a safe guide unless enlightened by the word of God.—Edwards.

There is no class of men so difficult to be managed in a state as those whose intentions are honest, but whose consciences are bewitched.—N. B.

I verily thought with myself that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth.—The Apostle Paul.

Brethren, I have lived before God in all good conscience until this day.—The Apostle Paul.

The conscience is the sum total of all of one's instruction and experience to the present time.

Your conscience will depend upon what you have been taught to be right. Your conscience tells you to do right, but does not tell you what is right.

But if any man lacketh wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.—James.

Fulton.

Bro. Jacob Fulton was born March 18, 1840 and died December 3rd, 1912. He made a profession in early life and joined the church at Salem Chapel. I visited him about one month before his death and read and prayed with him. He was very appreciative and was anxious for me to visit him again. He talked very freely about dying and was fully resigned to death. His faith was strong in his Savior. He has gone to his future home while he leaves to mourn their loss, a widow, four sons, three daughters, two sisters and two brothers, and many relatives and friends.

This writer preached his funeral in Salem Chapel church to a large congregation. May the good Lord bless all the sorrowing ones.

REPORT OF BOARD MEETING.

The W. H. and F. Missionary Society of the W. N. C. C. met in called session at Elon College, N. C., Nov. 29, 1912. By common consent Mrs. W. H. Carroll was appointed president, and Mrs. T. A. Moffitt Secretary and Treasurer. The vacancy caused by the resignation of Mrs. T. E. White was supplied by Miss Myrtle Lawrence of Elon College.

During the session the ways and means of promoting missions in the conference were discussed, and the conclusion was reached that the responsibility of organization rested with the pastors, as it had been proved by past experiences to be utterly impossible to get the ear of the churches through the various secretaries. The Treasurer reported $14.02 sent to Mrs. Walters for the first quarter.

There being no further business the Board adjourned to meet on call of president.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Rev. J. F. McCulloch, Greensboro, N. C., occupied the College pulpit at the eleven o'clock hour Sunday and delivered a magnificent sermon. Dr. McCulloch is a favorite with Elon congregations.

Mrs. Crew and daughter, Danville, Va., visited their relative, Mrs. J. H. Farmer, Saturday and Sunday.

The local graded school has been incorporated and placed in the hands of a self-perpetuating corporation of Trustees. It is believed that this step will insure a more permanent basis of support for the school.

The deep well gave the College considerable trouble last week and from Tuesday till Saturday night was out of commission. Water had to be hauled in wagons to run the plant and furnish drinking water. It is working beautifully now and no further trouble is anticipated. Warm weather helped us greatly in our misfortune.

Dr. T. C. Amick took this writer's place on the program of the N. C. Peace Congress in Raleigh, Saturday, speaking from the theme, Christianity and Peace.

Mr. J. M. Saunders, Durham, N. C., superintendent of the Christian Sunday school of that city, is visiting Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Boone.

Prof. R. A. Campbell has gone to assist in the induction of Mr. Wilson into the Presidency and in that function will be assisted by Mr. V. P. Heatwole, Mr. J. C. Parsley, and Miss Kathleen Brothers and Eugenia McCain of the student body.

—We felicitate our friend, Prof. A. Lucius Lincoln, Charlotte Court House, Va., on his election to the position of State Examiner of Elementary Public Schools for Virginia. The position is one of honor and opportunity, carrying with it a handsome salary and the privilege of getting in touch with the schools and educational work of the State. Lucius is an Elon College graduate who has made good as teacher and principal in high school work, and merits the confidence and the distinction shown him. He may be counted upon to fill with due honor to himself and credit to the State the position to which he has been chosen.

—Have you had "missionary day" in your church, Brother Pastor, that day and event about which so much was said, and upon which you made with yourself a solemn resolution at Conference last fall? The year slips by.

TO PLAY THE PIANO.

Only a few years ago our music teachers were accustomed to tell their impatient pupils that "There is no royal road to learning," by which they meant that "hard practice" was the only way to learn to play the piano.

That was before the invention of the self-player piano which everyone can now play, no matter whether they have ever taken music lessons or not. In the Ludden & Bates self-player piano which is now offered by the Christian Sun Piano Club, the piano has reached its acme of perfection and world-wide usefulness. The treasures of music are no longer locked in Pandora's box. The chain of mechanical difficulties which bound the pianoforte and limited its use to the elect few has at last been broken and the "King of Musical Instruments" now becomes the property of the whole people, irrespective of talent, education or age.

It requires no prophet to foresee the tremendous significance of this great invention to future generations. Our children will be brought up in an atmosphere of art which will exert a profound influence upon the development of their tastes and the formation of their characters. They will be as conversant with the masterpieces of the world's great composers as we were with the silly gossip of the town.

The player-piano adds one more delightful attraction to the home and gives it one more powerful weapon of defense against the allurements of the streets.

For full particulars of the Club's attractive offers, including the exchange of old pianos for new player-pianos, address the managers, Ludden & Bates, Christian Sun Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

Don't Fool With Wood Shingles

Buy STEEL Shingles

They Cost Less, Last Longer, Are Easier to Put On and Are Fireproof

Too much bother to put on. Rot out in a few years. And they multiply by 10 the danger of fire. Thoughtful men are nailing STEEL Shingles right over their old wooden roofs.

And those putting up new buildings are likewise careful to choose STEEL SHINGLES. Edwards STEEL Shingles come in big sheets of 100 shingles or more. Don't have to put them on one at a time like wood shingles. Just nail the whole sheet right over old roof or on sheathing. No extras, no painting, no tools needed. And money can't buy a more handsome roof.

Absolutely Rust-Proof

Don't judge Edwards Steel Shingles by common galvanized iron roofing—the kind that rusts. We have invented a method that absolutely prevents rust from eating a foothold, as 100,000 delighted owners of Edwards Roofs have found. It's the famous Edwards Tightcote Process.

Protection From Fire

Don't take chances of fire from defective chimneys, flying sparks and lightning. Roof your buildings with these STEEL Shingles and make them safe. Remember, nine out of every ten fires start with the roof. We specifically guarantee every Edwards Steel Shingle Roof against lightning. This guaranty is by a $10,000 Cash Bond.

We sell direct from factory to user, thus saving you 40%. And our business is so big that we cut our profit-per-sale to about half the maker's usual profit. And we pay the freight. Amazing as it may seem, these STEEL Shingles actually cost LESS than wood shingles.

Dear Children and Friends:

We are all well at this time except from colds, which are general. We are glad to be favored with good health. It seems from the way the boys get busy with their hoops they are all feeling good; while at night they "bark."

I am glad the people are getting interested in the water and sewerage for the Orphanage. Just continue to talk it. It is an actual necessity. One of the large girls said yesterday, while pumping water to wash the clothes for our "family," "If I had a thousand dollars I would put the water works in right soon." I mention this to give you another suggestion, other than the necessity for the sanitary conditions.

Since our call for sheets we have received five; and fruit continues to come in. You can scarcely imagine how much you have helped us by sending "one can" of fruit.

Uncle Emory.

Donations.

Miss Annie Williams 3 sheets and candy for the little folks. Mrs. J. W. Holt, 2 cans of fruit and 1 can of preserves. Ladies' Aid Society, Union church, Surry, Co., Mr. Willie Myrie, 1/2 bu. peanuts for children. Mr. Myrie is a ministerial student at the college and instead of going home Christmas for this vacation he gave the money to the children, 25 cts each.

Chipley, Georgia, February, 23, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I am late this month but will try and do better next time. I am still going to school and I'm learning fast. We sure have a nice time at school "playing ball." I hope you and the cousins enjoyed your selves Sunday. I went to preaching Sunday and my little "cousin" came home with me. We sure did enjoy our selves.

Love to all,

Rosa Shortt.

P. S. You will find enclosed ten cents my dues for this month.

Sunday was a very pleasant day with us. Since we have our new song books the services in the afternoon are enjoyed so much more.

Our girls play at the swing and the boys roll hoops.

Chipley, Georgia, Feb. 23, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I was so glad to see my letter in print, I am awful late with my dime. But better late than never, I hope you and "aunt Lovie" and the cousins are well and enjoying your selves. I am having a nice time helping "my mamma" feed her little chickens. We are raising chickens for the "Preachers," so you must visit me. Mamma gave me one "hen." She sure is a fine one she is my pet.

I will close with love to you and the cousins.

Elberta Shortt.

That is such a smart girl; but my! what a "temptation" you put before me, I will be very glad, indeed to come and see about those chickens. I am "true" to my profession when there is chicken on the table.

DIED.

Wright.

Mrs. J. M. Wright, whose maiden name was Cornelia Ann Wallace, died Feb. 13, 1913. She was born the 9th day of March, 1850, and was married to J. M. Wright March 15, 1868. To this union were born eleven children, ten of whom survive her, and they were all with her during her last illness. She has been a consistent member of the church for more than forty-six years, and for the last eight or ten years had held her membership with Christian Union church. Her life was an open book, and was read by all who were personally acquainted with her, and gives us the fullest assurance that she is not dead, but asleep in Jesus.

The thought of her departure from our presence makes us weep. While we shed the tear of sorrow on account of her departure, we feel that those tears should be mingled with tears of gratitude to the many kind hearts and willing hands in Biscoe and the country adjacent, who so kindly and tenderly rendered every assistance necessary for the comfort of our dear companion and mother. May the richest blessings of heaven rest upon them all.

Her Husband and Children.

Bailey.

Captain Quincy R. Bailey died of heart failure at his home near Zuni, Virginia, February 1st, 1913, in his 57th year. For years Mr. Bailey was in the service of the Norfolk and Western Railroad; but had retired to a farm near Zuni.

He was married three times. His third wife, who was Lula C. Miles, survives her husband without children; though they had adopted a little boy. By previous marriage there were five children. Wilborn, Hugh, Corper, and Ada living and one dead. Hugh resides in Suffolk with a wife and two children.

Mr. Bailey was a good man, a good husband, and a good neighbor. His remains were carried to Disputanta, Va., and buried in the family cemetery at the old homestead in Prince George County, Va. He was a member of Ivor Church.

Heaven's blessings upon the children and the widow. His last words were "I must go, my school is out."

W. W. Staley.

McCoy.

Miss Maggie Lee Munford was born February 15, 1890, married to J. B. McCoy November 30, 1910, and died in Suffolk, Va., February 5th, 1913, near her 23rd birthday. She was a member of the Suffolk Christian church. She had been in declining health for months, but expressed her willingness to depart, trusting in Jesus Christ as her Savior.

She was the daughter of B. L. Munford and wife and she left no children. On Friday February 7th we carried her remains to Mount Carmel church where the funeral services were conducted and her remains were buried.

Her testimony on the dying bed that she was willing to go is the greatest comfort to her loved ones.

W. W. Staley.

McAdams.

At her home, near Long's Chapel, in Alamance county, N. C., January 18, 1913 sister Catherine E. McAdams died after an illness that continued for about six years, in her 84th year. Sister McAdams became a member of the Christian church at Providence, Graham, in her youth. She was the daughter of Henry Trolinger, a brother of John Trolinger, married Benjamin McAdams January 18, 1849. Her husband died December 9, 1901. Her only son, John, preceded her to the grave. All now lie in the old cemetery at Haw River.

Funeral by

W. S. Long.

Clapp.

Sarah Klapp, closed her eyes in the sleep of death February 7th, 20 minutes past 8:00 P. M. If she had lived till June 25th, she would have been 90 years old. She was stricken with paralysis and lived 53 hours, during which time she never spoke nor swallowed, and then went to meet God. Father preceeded her to the spirit land about 14 years ago in his eighty-second year. She was a member of the Christian Church at Apple's Chapel. She was the mother of ten children, eight of whom survive her. Viz. Mrs. Mary J. Christman, widow; Rev. P. T.; J. M., of Riek Hill, S. C.; Rev. S. B.; Mrs. Maggie Ellington, widow; Mrs. Martha Huffines; Robert L. of Bentwood, Md., and Mrs. Sudie Apple, widow. In the absence of the pastor, Deacon Milton Brown, a former student of Elon College, read the funeral and burial service.

A Friend.

February 11, 1913.

Brooks.

M. V. Brooks was born Sept. 1 1841, and died Jan. 22, 1913 in the seventy-second year of his age. He married Martha M. Siler June 1872; and to this union were born nine children, eight of these, with their mother, survive him. He was a member of Park's Cross Roads church, and had been a member about forty years. The large congregation, present at his funeral, full of sympathy for the grief-stricken family, showed the high esteem in which he was held. Rankin Parks of Siler City came too late for the funeral. He had been associated with Bro. Brooks from boyhood, and there was an understanding between them that he should deliver an eulogy at his funeral.

The funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Bro. Way. The Lord comfort the sad family.

T. E. White.

Teague.

Margaret Teague, daughter of Simon Cox, was born Apr. 1, 1883, and died Jan. 21, 1913. She married Jesse Teague, and to them were born four children. The youngest, an infant of a few days, died the day of sister Teague's burial. She prepared for life and death at an early age, professing her faith in Christ, and accepting Him as her personal Saviour. She called her family around, and gave them her parting blessings. Hers was a triumphant death.

She leaves a husband, three children, a father and mother, five brothers and one sister who mourn her early death.

She was buried at Shiloh, and a large congregation attended her funeral.

T. E. White.

Holland.

Miss Martha E. Holland, daughter of the late Lemuel Holland and his wife Nancy, departed this life at the home of her brother R. F. Holland, near Holland, Va. on Jan. 24th, aged 73 yrs. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the home, and the remains placed in the family cemetery at her childhood's home near by. Miss Martha was a good woman, a faithful and loyal member of Holy Neck church, and, possessed a strong Christian faith. Her life was largely spent in service for others, caring for aged mother and ministering to the needs and comfort of the sick in her large family connection and community. For years she had lived under an ever growing malady that she knew meant death, yet always cheerful and resigned. Truly a good and useful woman is gone. Such are the salt of the earth. May God bless and sanctify her memory to the good of her loved ones.

N. G. Hewman.

Haslett.

Thomas K. Haslett departed this life at his home near Somerton, Va., January 6, 1913, aged 73 years. He leaves a widow, two sons, Claude and Joseph Haslett, Suffolk, Va., and one daughter, Mrs. Seth Marger, Holland Va., two brothers, J. A. and J. D. Haslett, and two sisters, Mrs. Sarah Howell, and Mrs. Elizabeth Darden.

The deceased was noted for his honesty and integrity. He was a member of Holy Neck church for many years, and we believe he was ready when the summons came. He was busy about his business when he was taken ill, and in a short time passed away. The funeral services were conducted at Holy Neck church by his pastor, Dr. N. G. New-man, and the writer. May the bereaved ones be kept and comforted by our Heavenly Father.

C. H. Rowland.

York.

William Henry York was born January 6th, 1859, and died December 19th, 1912, being fifty-three years, eleven months, and thirteen days old.

Bro. York was united in marriage to Miss Mary Edwards, September 9, 1880. To this union there were three children, two of whom died in infancy. He united with the Christian church at Park's Cross Roads about fifteen years ago. For twenty-eight years he suffered with asthma, and at times it was with great difficulty that he got his breath. Because of his affliction he did not go from home but very little for several years before his death.

Bro. York leaves to mourn their loss a wife, one daughter, Mrs. W. G. Frazier, two grand children, an aged mother, four brothers, three sisters, and many relatives and friends. A large number gathered at Rehoboth M. E. church where the writer conducted the funeral services, and his remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery at that place. The bereaved ones have our sympathy in this hour of bereavement.

L. I. Cox.

Johnson.

Mrs. S. M. Johnson departed this life January 4th, 1913. She was a well known and esteemed Christian lady, having lived in Berkley for ten years, at No. 302 Chestnut St. She had been a great sufferer for about two years, and during the past year she has been confined to her room. Mrs. Johnson was a native of Isle of Wight County, Virginia, and moved from Windsor, Va. to Berkly Ward, Norfolk, Va.

She was the daughter of Mrs. S. A. Ely and the late Stephen Ely, and was in the 52 year of her age. She is survived by her husband, Mr. J. H. Johnson, and six children, Mrs. W. C. King, of Suffolk, Va.; Miss Lillian M. Johnson, J. Sankey Johnson, Myrtle Va.; J. Moody Johnson, S. Wharton Johnson and Cecil D. Johnson, one grand son, John Robert Johnson. Also two brothers, J. L. Ely of Suffolk, and S. L. Ely of Berkley, one sister, Mrs. W. C. Varner, of Ivor, Va.

Sister Johnson was a member of the First Christian Church, having transferred her membership from Antioch in Isle of Wight Court House, where she had been one of the most active and useful members.

The funeral took place from her home at ten o'clock Monday, January 6th, conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. M. Roberts assisted by the writer. Every available space in the parlor was taken by the beautiful tributes of flowers. The interment took place in Forest Lawn Cemetery, Norfolk.

About ten days before her death she wrote for me to come down to see her. I spent Sunday afternoon, December 29th, in her home. Surely but few suffered as she, yet she was patient, thoughtful, of her family and friends. She planned her departure in every detail: scripture to be read, songs to be sung, and requested me to assist in burial service when she should finally make her departure. The devotion shown to her by her family in her long weary months and lonely nights of heart ache and suffering is but another example of true parental affection, and of the highest type of home training.

Thus one by one, earth's families are broken, and transplanted to that home not made with hands, but eternal in the heaven, where the lame man shall hop as an hart, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

B. F. Black.

Hines.

Mr. Sylvanus Hines departed this life January 16, 1913. He was born October 4, 1831. He had been growing weaker for some months before he died and hence the end was not a surprise to his friends. During his weakness and suffering the Christian religion was his comfort. He frequently expressed his desire to depart and bewith his Savior in whom his trust was fixed.

A large gathering of friends was present at the funeral services conducted by the writer. He leaves to mourn his departure a wife to whom he had been married more than 46 years, and six living children.

R. H. Peel.

Young.

At a Special Communication of Youngville Lodge No. 377, A. F. & A. M., the undersigned were constituted a committee to draft resolutions of respect to the memory of Brother William T. Young. The committee respectfully submits the following Resolutions:

Whereas, the Supreme Architect of the Universe has once more visited our ranks, and in infinite wisdom and tender love, has invited from the labors and cares of this life into the realm of the celestial our beloved, faithful and esteemed co-worker, Brother William T. Young, who laid down the working-tools of this life December 1st, 1912.

Therefore, Be It Resolved,—1st. That we as members of Youngville Lodge, deeply lament the death of Brother Young; he was ever a faithful member of our fraternity, always punctual in attending the meetings of the Lodge, always diligent and cheerful in the discharge of his duty at a true Mason, and always glad to speak a kind word for the good of the Craft. The Records of Youngville Lodge No. 377 show that Brother Young was a charter member of the Lodge, and was for many years Chaplain of same. And we as members of the same will endeavor to follow his example in Christian love, and fidelity to the sacred tenets of our Fraternity, so that when we shall come to the end of our toilsome journey, we may welcome the Death Angel and fear no danger.

2nd. That, we commend his bereaved family to the great Master whom he loved so dearly and served so faithfully, and we extend to them in this hour of sorrow our heartfelt sympathy.

3rd. That, a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Lodge, 3rd. That, a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Lodge, a copy to the family, a copy to the Franklin Times, The Orphans' Friend, and The Christian Sun, for publication.

Eland G. Mitchell,

Jenadus C. Winston,

S. E. Pearce, Committee.

Died, at his home near Haw River, N. C., Jan. 28th, 1913, Anderson Reaves Thomas aged 81 years and 20 days.

He was a member of the New Providence Christian church and had been for more than sixty years. A good man has passed from labor to rest. A loving husband and devoted father has been taken away. A noble citizen is of earth no more. He lived the religion that he professed and when death came he expressed himself as ready to go—he said good-by his family and friends about him and and bade them meet him in heaven.

He is a nephew of Joseph Thomas, the White Pilgrim.

In 1845 he married Miss Emily C. Rippey and to them were born twelve children, eight of whom are living. His wife passed to the Spirit land in 1910.

The funeral services were conducted at Long's Chapel, by the writer, in the presence of a large audience; and we laid his body to rest in the cemetery by the side of his wife. His grave was covered with beautiful flowers. The Lord comfort those who mourn.

P. H. Fleming.

Bro. S. S. Franklin was born Oct. 3, 1880, and died Jan. 19, 1913. He professed faith in Christ some nine years ago, and died in the hope of everlasting happiness. He left to mourn their loss a father and step-mother, four brothers and three sisters, a wife and four children with a host of relatives and friends. His remains were laid in the cemetery at Little River Presbyterian church Jan. 21, to sleep the long sleep of death. Funeral by the writer.

J.S. Carden.

Feb. 18, 1913.

Brown.

Louis Cotton Brown was born in Lewiston, N. C. in 1859. On October 18, 1901 he was married to Miss Maggie Henderson. He was at that time located at Driver, Va., where he was engaged in business. He made a profession of religion and united with Berea, Nansemond Christian church, in 1902. About two years ago he moved to Churchland, Va., where he was engaged in business. He was stricken with pneumonia about the first of January, 1913, and died on 15th day of that month. His funeral was conducted at Churchland Baptist church, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Vernon Panson of Norfolk. His body was laid to rest in Oak Grove Cemetery, Portsmouth, Va. Brother Brown had a large circle of friends, and will be greatly missed. He left a devoted wife, one sister, Mrs. W. H. Ferguson and one or two half-brothers. May the Lord graciously bless the bereaved family.

I. W. Johnson.

Klapp.

Mrs. L. W. Klapp, widow of the late Irwin Ludwie Klapp, departed this life on the 7th of February, 1913. She had been in feeble health for several years, but three days before her death she suffered from a stroke of paralysis from which she never regained consciousness. She lacked but little of being 90 years old. She was held in high esteem by her neighbors and friends, being well known in Guilford and Alamance counties in which she spent her life. She was a member of Apple's church from early girlhood to her death. She was the mother of eight living children: Mrs. Mary J. Chrisman, Greensboro; Rev. P. T. Klapp, Elon College; James M. Klapp, Rock Hill, S. C.; Rev. S. B. Klapp, Greensboro; Mrs. M. L. Huffines, Gibsonville; Robert E. Klapp, Washington, D. C.; and Mrs. Ludie Apple, who lived with her at the old home.

The funeral services held on the second Sunday at Apple's Chapel, were largely attended by sorrowing friends who came to pay their last tribute of respect to one who in a long life was loved and honored.

HOW GOD WINS MEN

Those who live the gospel they profess are doing more to persuade others to turn from sin than those who content themselves with making many appeals to those about them to become Christians while they are careless in their every-day living. Ask the members of any Bible class what led them to Christ, and see if the majority do not say that it was the earnest, consistent life of some Christian.

Calvin H. French, D. D., tells of a professor in a small college who gave his strength and time for years to personal friendships with his students and daily prayers for their spiritual welfare. Some of those who graduated from that college during his life are now strong and useful Christians, lawyers, ministers, or business men. "How did he do it?" one of these was recently asked. "I do not know," was the reply. "He never spoke to me about being a minister, yet I know that I would not have become one except for him. I think it was just the way he lived."

In like manner a former student of the president of a small Dakota college has said: "No one could be in his class four years without becoming a real Christian. Of eleven young men graduated from that school while he was there, eight became ministers, two of them going to the foreign-mission field."

It is the life that tells. God's plan for winning men was made known when Jesus said to his disciples, "Ye are the light of the world."—Westminster Adult Bible Class.

GOD'S DESIRES.

I desired mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings.—Hos. 6:6. (Golden Text for Sunday, March 16.)

The object of all sacrifices recorded in the Old Testament was to make man obedient to God, and show man the proper method of approach to God. God did not delight in the blood of beasts, but in the willing and servile obedience of those who slew and offered the beasts. God had desires. He has desires yet. His supreme desire is that men shall bend their wills to His will and in all things shall obey Him. "And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."—1 Sam. 15:22.

Now God does not desire, as some monarch would, according to our interpretation of His Word, that men should obey Him—just for the sake of seeing His will obeyed: but God's mercy is greater than man's, and God's wisdom more sweeping, comprehensive and complete than man's. He knows we will be more merciful, wiser, better, more charitable, kind, considerate, if we obey His will than if we go according to our own will.

God did not desire that Abraham should commit a revolting crime, really kill his own son. But He did desire that Abraham should be willing to do what he was divinely commanded to do, however hard and trying the ordeal might be. God tests us, tries us, searches us; but never more than we can bear if we but trust and obey Him. We need not fear the outcome, the consequences, however dark and dreadful seems the way, if we but hear and obey the voice of God.

No life has ever yet known fully the depths of God's mercy until it has been sorely tried and tested. God tries us with sore and deep trials not because He means to be cruel, but because He wants us to be kind, generous, gracious, faithful.

But there is a deeper point yet in the lesson and in the text. God is Himself first of all a Father. There is no conflict between God the Supreme Sovereign, and God the gracious Father. And Abraham was taught this salient fact when he raised his hand to slay his son Isaac. God wanted the sacrifices of a broken and obedient will; but He did not want the offering of a murdered son. The tender affection of Abraham for his son, the fatherly feeling, the natural paternal love were all precious in God's sight and He would not have these severed. God was to be henceforth to Abraham, not only King, but Father.

Sonship was respected, esteemed by both alike—God and Abraham. God is the one true, faithful, merciful, loving Father of us all.

DAVID LIVINGSTONE.

When God wants a man to undertake some peculiar and hazardous task He raises Him up one, just fitted for that sort of thing. I am thinking of David Livingstone, the task he undertook, the work he wrought, and his peculiar fitness for the life he lived.

I will pick a paragraph from Powell's "The Last Frontier," and print it here to this effect:

"About the time that the nineteenth century had reached its turning point, a strange tale, passing by word of mouth from native kraal to native kraal, came at last to the ears of a Scotch worker in the mission field of Bechuanaland. It was a tale of a waterfall somewhere in the jungles of the distant north; a waterfall so mighty, declared the natives, that the spray from it looked like a storm cloud on the horizon and the thunder of its waters could be heard four days' trek away. So the missionary, wearied with the tedium of proselyting amid a peaceful people and restless with the curiosity of the born explorer, set out on a long and lonely march to the northward, through a country which no white man's eyes had ever seen. It took him three years to reach the falls for which he started, but when at last he stood upon the brink of the canyon and looked down upon the waters of the Zambezi as they hurtled over four hundred feet of sheerest cliff, he was so awed by their majesty and their beauty that he named them after Victoria, the young English queen. Before he left the missionary-explorer carved his name on the trunk of a near-by tree, where it can be seen today; the name is DAVID LIVINGSTONE."

In this way David Livingstone was led to discover the "Victoria Falls of the Zambezi," the greatest, the most magnificent on the globe, and incidentally to explore, and so open up to the world, the interior of the Dark Continent. Livingstone, the missionary, had in him the blood of the explorer and the true spirit of wanderlust. Had Livingstone been a missionary only he would have remained on the border of the great continent where there was enough of pagan darkness to engage him all his days, heaven knows. But God needed a geographer as well as a preacher, a scientist no less than a missionary. In Livingstone all these qualities blend, and reach their climax.

This man's life is worth knowing. There are none others like it in all the annals of true greatness. Born a poor Scotch lad, reared in a cotton-mill from ten years of age and schooled in all the hardships and deprivation known to the frontiersman and the explorer, he died in a hut a thousand miles from sea or civilization and then found sepulture and rest for his weary body in Westminster Abbey among the world's illustrious dead; and today we are told that more people, in going to the Abbey, enquire for Livingstone's tomb than for that of any king or warrior or statesman buried there.

He was born March 19, 1813, at Bantyre, Scotland, and on May 1, 1873, his attendants found him dead, in a kneeling posture by his bedside at Ilala alone in his little hut in the great interior there. Those faithful attendants understood that this man deserved Christian burial and since they were unable to give it, bore his body a thousand miles on foot that they might reach the sea-shore and send their precious burden to the land of his loved ones where proper respect might be given the remains of the one they adored. Livingstone at ten was put to work in a cotton mill, his parents being too poor to school him. By study at night, and at odd moments, he prepared himself for a missionary, the vocation to which in early years he felt himself called. At the age of twenty-five (1838) he was accepted by the London Missionary Society and two years later (1840) being licensed as a physician, he was sent to South Africa. For eleven years he labored as a missionary pure and simple. Then the spirit of the explorer got the upper hand of him—and he went out to see what that great continent was and to open its unexplored expanse to the whole world. In 1853 he went out on his last exploring tour across the continent—1500 miles, and back again. From 1858 to 1864 he was engaged in the work of exploring at the head of a government expedition. He was hailed as the world's greatest explorer: Honors were showered upon him—to which he paid not the slightest attention, making it a rule of his life never to read anything written in praise of himself. And he never forgot his calling and true mission in the world. "As far as I am myself concerned," he writes, "the opening of the new central country is a matter for congratulation only in so far as it opens up a prospect for the elevation of the inhabitants. As I have elsewhere remarked, I view the end of the geographical feat as the beginning of the missionary enterprise."

Livingstone's dream, the redemption of Africa, was not realized in his day, but it is being realized as the years go, and all true missionaries, all good and great men everywhere may receive inspiration from this wonderful life and from the motto he gave some school children in his native Scotland: "Fear God and work hard."

MISSION RECEIPTS.

The Mission Treasurer's Report for February, printed elsewhere, is not such as to cheer the heart much. We are hoping and expecting that the report for March will give a far different showing. "Income for Home Missions $119.93. Income for Foreign Missions $200.57. Paid out for Home Missions $52.00. Paid out for Foreign Missions $829.22." We ought to be ashamed, heartily ashamed, each and all of us, that the income was so small during the month; and that the need for the output was so meager. We of the Christian church just ought to be spending five times that much for missions on any and every month of the year; and we ought to have the money in hand to spend.

But, ouch! the situation is different. Bills payable and due on accounts (less cash on hand) $10,543.25. Due on salaries and bills (approximately) $2,108.73. Add these two accounts, due, and there seems to us an indebtedness of $12,651.98. Brethren and beloved this will never do.

Our candid opinion is that our dear people are not being given a square deal at this business of missions. There is honesty, integrity, economy and all that, in handling the matter, and no one doubts. But we of the Christian church are not burdened about missions. We preachers are not preaching missions; teachers are not teaching missions, writers amongst us are not writing about missions, and thinkers are not thinking about missions. Speaking generally we of the Christian church have not learned our first lesson in missions. We do not realize the great need of missions; and we certainly do not know our strength in giving to missions; and we are not realizing the blessings God has in store for us if we but do our part in helping evangelize the world.

We shall have to get this matter of missions in a far better and more effectual way yet before we fetch the larger results or enjoy the better blessings. Not till we burden ourselves with missions will God bring to us His blessings from missions.

OUR PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Seventy-five shares of the additional one hundred shares of stock in our Southern Christian Publishing House have been subscribed for. There are to be in all three hundred shares of stock at $50.00 the share par value. Of this amount friends have subscribed for two hundred and seventy-five shares. There remain, therefore, only twenty-five shares more of this stock to be taken. The terms of payment are one-half in 30 days from time of subscription and the remaining half 90 days thereafter. To our thinking here is one of the very best opportunities for men and women who have a small amount of capital they can spare, to invest with every promise of safety and security, in an enterprise that must grow and develop into vast proportions as the years come and go, and one, too, that must of necessity prove a source of pride and profit. With a plant being equipped capable of doing $10,000 worth of work a year, and with $10,000 worth of work a year to be done, somebody must prove derelict to duty, and managers must prove inefficient and stupid indeed, if efficient work is not done, and a substantial profit realized. At any rate, beloved, we are resolved to try; and putting our dollars and our deeds together we reckon not with failure, and looking to the future adopt the good Livingstone's motto: "Fear God and work hard."

MR. TAFT'S LAST FLING.

Many regretted exceedingly that Mr. Taft, almost as a last act of retiring from the presidency, felt called upon to veto the Webb liquor shipment bill, a measure which undertakes only to give any State the power to control liquor when shipped from without the State. This act adding nothing to the fame of the retiring President as both Houses of Congress preceded to pass the bill over his veto by more than two-thirds vote. But, Mr. Taft is not to be censured too severely for this act. It must be born in mind that President Taft was first of all a lawyer and a judge. Here is, to our thinking, the truest and the most kindly and charitable word we have seen on the subject, from the New York Christian Advocate, and it incidentally analyzes Mr. Taft's character in a marvelous manner:

Mr. Taft's veto of the Webb bill was thoroughly characteristic. In the composition of the late President the lawyer predominated. On the judicial bench his mental qualities would be invaluable. In the chair of the Chief Magistrate they were often a hindrance to statesmanship. The famous bill against the shipment of liquor into States which have adopted prohibitory laws is a measure in the interest of public morality. This fact undoubtedly impressed Mr. Taft, whom we understand to be a temperance man in precept and practice. Yet he was unwilling to let the bill go through with his indorsement because he regarded its constitutionality as questionable. His misgivings were confirmed by the opinion of the Attorney-General. It is not for us to dispute such an authority, though we remain unconvinced of its justification. At any rate Mr. Taft might have deferred the question to the judgment of the Supreme Court. But that was not the way. No one doubts his honesty; many will question his wisdom. He was evidently more jealous of his reputation as a constitutional lawyer than of his record as a philanthropist. He wished to retire from office with his fame for judicial balance unimpaired.

COMMENT.

—The Greensboro Daily News:

"That bill to regulate the morals of the people of Guilford County may be all right, but we've always been of the opinion that the morals of Guilford would compare favorably with the morals of most any section of the country." There is the strongest test of the need of regulation. The immoral and the hard in heart are always comparing themselves with others and saying, "We are as good as you."

—The North Carolina legislature adjourned sometime this week, after being in session sixty-three days, more or less. The newspapers are under renewed obligations to this body for a great deal of first-class reading matter, top of column and along beside of. But what did the Legislature accomplish for the State? Search us. And, as the papers seem to get along fairly well without the Legislature's being in session, we respectfully suggest that our General Assembly do assemble hereafter about once in four years. The next time a candidate asks us to vote for him to go to the Legislature we expect to ask him, "What for?"

—The curious got a good jolt from President Wilson last Sunday. That official, as is his wont on the Sabbath day, was making his way to a nearby church to worship at the eleven o'clock hour. But, presto! a glance from a distance showed him that those who had gone to see, rather than to worship, had overflowed the church, filled the adjacent streets for blocks and were being managed by the police. A word to his driver carried the President and his good wife to a half-filled church a mile away where he was permitted to worship God in peace and quiet like other folks—while the curious were left to battle it out with the crush and throng and police as best they might. We could wish with all our heart that all who go to church out of curiosity should suffer a like or a worse fate.

NORFOLK LETTER.

"Where's Teddy?" some one is said to have asked the other day during the Wilson inauguration ceremonies. Whereat, the retiring president, near-known as "Billy" is also said to have "smiled" of the usual Taftian productions as one who could echo, "And where, indeed is he?"

Before long, as things go in this mundane sphere, the query, "where's Teddy?" voiced by some prankish wag in Washington, whose already hilarious spirits had been additionally aerated by the spectacular events of March, Fourth, may possibly become as common as that other query, "Has anybody seen Kelly?"

Can it be possible? Is it true that the lapse of less than five brief, fleeting years has withered with the blight of forgetfulness, and already dimmed with partial obscurity the once marvellous and prodigious personal popularity of the Strenuous One? It would seem to be even so.

The gradual passing from view of those who have held the high places of earth and been much in the public eye is a sad but significant reminder of the transient and ephemeral nature of all things human and man-made.

Suppose you try to recall the names of men prominently before the nation not later than ten or fifteen years ago; men of tremendous power and influence in all ranks and walks of life, feared, envied and truckled to by their fellows, and then observe how infrequently their names are mentioned today. It will be a splendid object-lesson in the fleeting nature of Fame, for which so many poor, deluded ones sell themselves, both soul and body.

For instance, who knows what has become of Chauncey Depew? Is he dead or alive? How long since anyone has heard of his making one of those witty after-dinner speeches for which he was famous the land over?

Personally, I haven't heard anything from the former great chieftan of Tammany Hall, Richard Croker, for a long time. He, together with "Boss" Tweed, once had more than his share of space in the great dailies of the nation, but, in the inexorable iconoclasm of Time they have "dropped out" of the game. Pardon me, it may be owing to my own stupidity but whether these two precious politicians of "ye olden days" have crossed over the Styx and are making artful efforts to bribe Judge Osiris, or are still roaming "hither and yon" over the earth, reflecting bitterly upon the devious and uncertain days of life I cannot tell.

If the fame of "Uncle Joe" Cannon does not outlive that of his illustrious predecessor as Speaker of the House, "Tom" Reed, then the lean, lank, farmer-looking old gentleman will soon pass into limbo of obscurity.

You may need to be reminded already that Jay Gould was the name of one who was reckoned, once upon a time, as being one of Wall Street's greatest financiers. You have possibly, even now, forgotten that H. H. Rogers built the Virginian railroad. The name of E. H. Harriman is still familiar, but that of Stuyvesant Fish is fading rapidly. Many people do not know whether John L. Sullivan was a pork-chucker, a great singer, a noted evangelist or a prize fighter. Such is human glory and renown.

Yes, Teddy will pass with the rest of us, far less celebrated than he. Not that he was not, is not a great, good and useful citizen, but Time, the mighty Leveller will lightly toss over his deeds and achievements the mantle of obscurity and he will be forgotten. The only hope for any of us that when this earthly tabernacle is dissolved, we may all have a house not built with hands, "eternal and in Heaven." So may it be.

Henry Spencer Booth.

THE LIVINGSTONE CENTENNIAL.

All of our churches should be preparing to observe the centenary of David Livingstone. Every home should have a copy of this man's life. Every boy and girl should read, "Livingstone the Pathfinder."

The following, taken from The Christian Missionary, is given, believing that it will be helpful in preparing your program. Let every one be informed concerning this hero of the Cross.

"A few suggestions may be of help to some of you in the preparation of your program. If possible, have the meeting in the evening, so that men and women, young and old, may profit by its inspiration. Use just as many ferns and palms as possible in the decorations, and red hangings and draperies. The African natives are very fond of red. Have two or three mottoes containing famous sayings of Livingstone hung in conspicuous places. Home-made ones will prove just as effective as boughten ones. The following sentences may be used: "Anywhere, provided it be forward;" "Fear God and work hard;" "I will place no value on anything I have or may possess, except in its relation to the kingdom of Christ;" "The end of the exploration is the beginning of the enterprise." An outline map of Africa should be prepared containing Livingstone's three great journeys. Such a map will be found in many of our biographies. Call attention to the fact that the illustration of his journeys forms a rude figure of a cross. If possible, have a portrait of Livingstone which shall be placed in your Endeavor or Sunday school room. A little ceremony connected with the unveiling and presentation of the portrait might be made very impressive.

The devotional meeting should include the reading of the one hundred and twenty-first and one hundred and thirty-fifth Psalms. These were the Psalms read by Livingstone at family prayers on the morning that he left for Africa. Papers may be prepared on "Livingstone's Preparation," "Livingstone the Missionary." "X-ray Points" might follow the papers, consisting of a few questions which might help to clinch the important events. "Sharp Shooters" would add variety—short facts or incidents written on cards and read by the members.

Prepare as souvenirs of the meeting cards 2x3 inches. At the top draw an outline map of Africa, with a cross in red ink in the center. Below write the following lines from the hymn which should be sung in closing:

'He climbed the steep ascent to heaven,
Through peril, toil and pain,
O God! to us may grace be given
To follow in his train.'

Alice V. Morrill."

FUNERAL OF DR. J. J. SUMMERBELL.

The funeral of Dr. J. J. Summerbell was held from his late home in Dayton, Ohio, on Tuesday morning, March 4th. There was a large gathering of friends and of the clergy of Dayton and vicinity. The services were under the charge of the Rev. Hugh A. Smith, pastor of the Dayton church. By special request the Rev. Dr. O. W. Powers sang the hymns, selections which were favorites of the deceased. The addresses were by the Rev. Messrs. Smith and Crampton, the Rev. Dr. Hale, of the First Reformed Church of Dayton, as Representative of Ministerial Association of Dayton. The addresses were very appropriate and of a high order of merit. The prayer was by the Rev. Henry Crampton.

Dr. Summerbell had for several years been afflicted with angina pectoris, an affection of the heart, which was always attended with agonizing pain and from which his decease might have been expected at any time. But for his own fortitude under suffering and the affectionate and tireless care of his devoted wife we should have lost him years ago. On the last day of February he went down town to our Publishing House to attend to some matters in connection with his new book, which the House is getting out. He returned and seemed about as usual. In the afternoon he was at his desk looking over the manuscript of the book when the seizure came. The physician was summoned and restoratives were administered but to no avail and in two hours a great man had gone. His son, Dr. Carlyle Summerbell arrived on Sunday and his cousin, Dr. Martyn Summerbell, on Monday. The interment occurred on Tuesday afternoon at Spring Grove Cemetery, near Cincinnati.

A pleasing feature of the services was the reading by Dr. Hale of a minute of the Dayton Ministerial Association extolling Dr. Summerbell as minister, author and man in very appreciative terms.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Dr. W. S. Long visited the College last Wednesday and Thursday and read certain chapters of his forthcoming book on Systematic Theology to a number of his ministerial brethren. A special committee, of which Dr. Long is a member, appointed by the Board of Trustees, also had a meeting during his visit and decided on certain recommendations to the Board in respect to the Chair of Theology which has been talked of for so many years. This special committee also requested Dr. Long early in April to give an institute here on Systematic Theology and he agreed to do this. This institute will be open to ministers and ministerial students.

There is genuine sorrow here over the death of Dr. J. J. Summerbell, whose visit in December endeared him so completely to all Elon. He has ever since the extraordinary session of the Convention at Graham in 1888, which promulgated the College, been Elon's warm supporter and friend.

Elon has heard with pleasure of the selection of Mr. E. S. Everett, class of 1893, as Commonwealth's Attorney for Nansemond County, Va. Mr. Everett has been a successful lawyer for many years, but up to the time of his appointment had never prosecuted a case. He was exceedingly successful, however, in defending cases.

We also rejoice in the promotion of Mr. R. W. Malone, Burlington, N. C., to the position of Asst. Cashier of the First National Bank. Mr. Malone was a student here six years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Ward, parents of Mrs. T. C. Amick, have moved into their new home, adjoining their daughter's residence. We extend a cordial welcome to our midst.

Mr. V. O. Roberson, Belew's Creek, N. C., County Commissioner of Forsythe Co., was a visitor here Saturday.

Miss Myrtie Cox, Columbia, S. C., is home for a few days to see her mother, Mrs. L. I. Cox, who has been quite ill, but is now convalescent.

Mrs. M. A. Atkinson entertained the Book Club Saturday afternoon and served dainty delicacies to her guests.

Winter Term examinations began Saturday the eighth and close on the 15th instant.

The Ladies' Missionary Society had an enthusiastic meeting Sunday. They are studying "Western Women in Eastern Lands."

Mrs. Grace Connelly, Chicago, Ill., sister of Mr. J. R. McNally, is, with her daughter, visiting her brother's family here.

Mr. W. C. Purcell was called to Greensboro Sunday morning to see his mother, who on Thursday last was carried to the hospital. She is reported as doing well, and her many friends wish her speedy recovery.

Mrs. Justus Everette, sister to the Sun's editor, had the misfortune to lose her husband by death, of ptomaine poisoning at her home last Thursday, Palmyra, N. C.

Mr. Everette visited Elon last summer and made many staunch friends, who regret his death in the prime of vigorous manhood.

Elon students of former days will be interested to know that Mr. Littleton Barber, a prosperous hardware merchant of Gibsonville, N. C., has recently become a benedict, wedding the daughter of Ex-Sheriff Jones of Guilford County, and will join us in wishing him well.

Dr. W. T. Herndon has gone to Zebulon, N. C., to visit his son Carl, who has been sick of pneumonia for two weeks. Mr. Herndon's friends will be pleased to learn that he is somewhat better and will wish a speedy abatement of his ailment.

Mrs. Compton, mother of Mrs. J. C. McAdams, now in her 73rd year, is quite ill at her daughter's home.

W. A. H.

Robert Reynolds.

Whereas, it has been the will of our heavenly Father to take from our midst Brother Robert Reynolds, we as a church and as individuals desire to record our appreciation of his life and to express our great sorrow at our loss. For many years our brother had been a devoted Christian. His love for the church was seen in his constant attendance upon divine worship.

Stricken down suddenly and unconscious from the first, there was no opportunity for a parting message. While loved ones miss him they sorrow not as those without hope.

Resolved: First—That we extend to the grief-stricken family our deep sympathy and earnestly pray that God's promises may sustain them. Second—That a copy of these resolutions be placed in the minutes of our church, a copy sent to his family and a copy to The Christian Sun.

Committee:

Mrs. T. L. Pierce,

Mrs. O. C. Stagg,

Mrs. Clarence Edwards.

ARE YOU A WOMAN?

Baltimore, Md.—Mrs. W. H. Ison, at 1419 East Madison street, writes: "For several years I suffered, off and on, from female troubles, until finally I was taken down and could do nothing. The pains I experienced, I shall never forget. I lost weight till I was only skin and bones. I believe I would have been in my grave, if I had not tried Cardui. I shall praise it as long as I live." Many women, like Mrs. Ison, are weak and discouraged, on account of some painful ailment. Are you one of these sufferers? Cardui will help you. Try it today. Any druggist.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Alamance Gleaner, Graham, N. C.:

"Last Sunday morning Misses Mary Lou Pitt, Ethel Clements and Linda Barnes, of the music department at Elon College, sang at the Presbyterian church. Everyone who heard them was delighted."

—We turned out some as nice job work from our own plant last week as anybody could desire. Our equipment is the best, our workmanship experienced, our prices honest and moderate. Give our House a trial order when you have anything to print.

—Under date of March 7th, Rev. W. D. Harward, Newport News, Va., sends this sad message: "Bro. P. E. Slade, of the Dendron church, who has been here several weeks for treatment, died last night and the remains will be taken to Wakefield tomorrow for burial."

—Now, beloved, one and all, we have a splendid equipment for all sorts of printing, letter heads, circulars, catalogues, bill heads, envelopes, etc. Our motto is "As nice work as can be had and a fair profit on all work done." Give us a trial order and see whether we make good. Address Southern Christian Publishing Co., Elon College, N. C.

—We are earnestly desiring that all our pastors be in readiness to make a simultaneous campaign in all our churches for new subscribers to The Sun just as soon as the paper is printed in our own House and is enlarged and improved greatly as it will be shortly. All our pastors say they love The Sun and want to see it in every home represented in the church. Good! We shall soon see if all mean what they say. A desperate effort is being made to enlarge and improve it. We ask the approval of the people by an increased subscription list.

—Rev. J. Lee Johnson, accompanying his brother, J. Beale Johnson, both of Cardenas, N. C., left last Monday to attend the Bible Conference at Atlanta, Ga., now in session there. Both Drs. G. Campbell Morgan and Len G. Broughton have come over from London for the Conference which in later years has come to be a second Northfield. Every man who preaches needs to get off now and then and study the Bible with his fellows and hear the Word expounded by others. All of us ought to attend Northfield, or something like it, now and then. There is information and even more inspiration in it.

—Rev. G. O. Lankford, Wadley, Ala., writes this cheering note: "The people of Alabama greatly rejoice in the wonderful progress of the Southern Christian Publishing Company. * * The future of our publishing interests in the South seem full with the promise of success and progress." By a singular coincidence, and because of their loyalty, as well as good foresight, the first and the second shares of stock to be subscribed for in our Publishing House were taken by two Alabama brethren and the third nearby, just over the line in Georgia. Our brethren in Alabama and in Georgia have ever been the most alert to every enterprise that speaks of church progress, and ready to take an active interest.

—One beloved and active pastor informs us that The Sun has had so much to say about the missionary situation lately that he is taking a special collection for missions in all his churches, and the same will amount to somewhat and will soon be sent in. Now that is fine. We just wish every pastor who reads The Sun would do likewise and resolve to take at least one special collection for foreign missions and help us in raising that special fund of $2,500 we are undertaking in our churches to raise as a special fund this year. Take your special collection for foreign missions, Brother Pastor, send it in to J. A. Mills, Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C., who will forward it for you without cost or percent to Dr. J. G. Bishop, Treas., Dayton, Ohio.

—Bro. Warren H. Denison, Memorial Temple, Norfolk, baptized 30 members by immersion on a recent Sunday evening. "Our Sunday school has averaged 250 since Jan. 1. The people here work heartily with me in all the work; they are a spiritual people, and a missionary people, and they are kind and thoughtful of the pastor and his wife. We cleaned up the last $225 note on the parsonage the other Sunday in shorter time than it takes to tell it. Some sweet day we will tell you about the addition that we must have for our Sunday school." We rejoice with the good people of Memorial Temple that they have found in Dr. Denison and his good wife leaders who push the work, and go forward with all that makes for progress in the King's cause.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The question of temperance is as old as the time since the flood and will, no doubt, remain as an unsolved problem for centuries yet to come. We have been dealing with temperance in its grossest forms, and have hardly entered the field where refined Christian conscience ought to determine the subjects and aims of this Bible grace. The chief object of attack is the saloon. That the saloon is in no way a Christian institution is proved by the attitude of government toward it and the common thought of men. Civilized government in cities, states, and nation regards the saloon as a business to be regulated, watched and feared. Beyond this stage of the temperance causes there is an open field for the cultivation of temperance "in all things" and by "all people." If that field could be entered first, of course the saloon would go with our campaigns and elections; but we must rid society of the saloon before we can do the finer work. The abolition of the saloon is civic work led by Christian men; and every Christian man should line up against the institution so full of evil to human society.

Suffolk has been "dry" under "local option" for four years; but an election has been ordered for March 31 to "try to get the saloon back." The growth of the city in these four years, in all the factors that enter into progress and thrift, has been such as to win doubters into financial confidence in "dry" conditions. The assessed value of taxation, in Suffolk, in 1909 amounted to $3,345,881.30; in 1912 the taxable values had reached $4,299,235.95, an increase of $953,354.65, nearly a million dollars. Of course there would have been marked gain if the saloon had remained, for there has been general progress all over the country; but the increase proves that the absence of the saloon has not set the city back financially; and that is the argument the "wets" use against the "dry." In the election soon to be held the issue is a single one; "shall the saloon be permitted to come back to Suffolk?" It has no connection with politics, no party color; no question is involved but the single moral question of the return of the saloon. To my mind the duty of Christian men is so plain in this case that defeat would seem an impossible supposition. Nobody would think for a moment of taking out electric lights on the streets and returning to oil lamps for street lights, although there is no moral question involved. Public sentiment would express itself if the city Council were to propose the change. Men, women, and children, would speak. It is their duty to speak on this subject, not only in Suffolk, but in every town and city. Again, if the City Council were to permit by ordinance cattle to run at large on the streets, and pig sty to be built in the city, many people would object. It would be against public interest though it might benefit individuals. In such cases public interest controls. The public has a greater right to bar the saloon.

The ministers of Suffolk work in harmony on this subject and oppose the return of that institution which almost every state is trying to outlaw, and we believe that all thoughtful Christians will feel that we could do no less. The revenue from taxable values has increased in four years nearly 60 per cent. No doubt the growth of temperance sentiment among the Christians has been as great. The grown-ups who drank have not made much gain in temperance views, the grown-ups who could not read four years ago have not learned to read; but hundreds of children have. This movement does not undertake to change the personal ideas of men so much as to educate a new generation in sobriety and a public sentiment that will keep out the saloon. What the temperance people of this generation ask for is that the voters will give the new generation a chance to grow up without the saloon.

W. W. Staley.

Our Million.

Great enterprises take great plans, large finance, wide vision. There is no greater enterprise than that of foreign missions. The church always has had and probably always will have the leadership in the really great world problems. The building of the Panama canal is a breakfast spell compared with the problem of giving the gospel to the whole world. The church's one main business is to evangelize the world and to do it now before the present one thousand millions who have never yet heard the fact of salvation through Jesus Christ shall pass from this life into Christless graves. Have we forgotten that one hundred thousand pass each day into Christless graves when Christ has commanded us to give them the gospel and we have men enough, money enough, Bibles enough, to do it, if we want to?

After a world survey made by the Laymen's Missionary Movement the task yet uncompleted was placed before the missionary organizations of the whole church. Each was asked to figure out as definitely as possible the proportion that rightly belonged to it according to its denominational membership, the mission spirit of its people, its present work, its financial ability, its equipment for preparation of men and all such matters as should rightfully be considered. Then each organization was asked to put that conclusion before its constituency showing its fair part of the task in addition to its present work at home and in the fields abroad. The Mission Board of the Christian Church, our own board, carefully considered the matter and decided that we as a church were responsible for at least one million of the unevangelized. The Mission committee at the last meeting of the American Christian Convention considered the matter. That committee consisted of sixteen persons; and the Convention, one of the largest and most representative we have ever held, and one which gave the subject of missions a full share of consideration voted "That we assume one million souls as our share of the unevangelized world." There is no question that at least as many as that are dependent upon the Christian church for their first knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ. That means that in addition to our present work at home and abroad we are under deepest obligation to give the gospel and Christian training to at least ten on an average for every member now on our church rolls. That means that if a church has on its roll one hundred members it is responsible for its present work at home, in Porto Rico, and Japan, and one thousand who have never heard; or if your church has two hundred members that your part is two thousand aside from your full part in the present fields and your local community. This can never be done unless we get it on our hearts and pray and plan for it. It can never be done by merely raising our foreign mission apportionment for conference. It will take general church offerings for that work after careful and faithful preparation and education; it will take many personal gifts if we as a church are to do what is our part and which we have assumed as our share. To illustrate: Say that the Memorial Christian Temple has 350 members. That means that it has a responsibility and duty to evangelize 3,500 heathen besides all its present work at home and abroad; do you suppose that the thirty dollars that the E. Va. Conference apportions to it for foreign missions is going to begin to touch its part of the work? How about your church and its apportionment? How many churches are making special church offerings? How many are having a day for foreign mission gifts with an appeal and interest that grip the hearts of our people? How many are sending in to our Mission Treasurer personal gifts for this work now at hand? They are dying every day, without Christ, and we are playing at missions abroad. It's time to wake up, time to pray, time to plan, time to give.

SUN READERS NOTICE.

There are, I am informed, a number of members of the Christian denomination now living in Richmond, and it is very likely that more will come here from time to time. Now it would seem that the time has arrived for some steps to be taken toward establishing a Christian church here. I am at present studying at Union Theological Seminary and plan to spend another year here, and I shall be glad to look up the members of our church and, if possible, bring them together that they may get acquainted with each other and consider the prospects for a church of our faith in Richmond. Will all who know Christian church members living in Richmond please send me their names, and if possible their addresses?

Summerbell.

Whereas: It has pleased Almighty God to allow the removal from this earth of Dr. J. J. Summerbell, the first graduate, life long friend of and honor to this institution, and at the time of his death a non-resident lecturer in the biblical course of the College, an ever loyal and faithful worker in the Christian denomination;

Be it resolved: First—That we express our sympathy to his wife and family and other relatives and friends; Secondly—That we express in this public way our appreciation and recognition especially of his long years in the Gospel Ministry; of his work as editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty for twelve years; and his constant defense of the principles of the Christian Church.

Thirdly—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family; one to The Herald of Gospel Liberty, one to The Christian Sun, and one to The Merom Herald for publication; that these resolutions be read before the student body and be spread upon the minutes of the faculty.

FAITH AND OBEDIENCE.

Some Platform Helps for the Superintendent.

S. S. Topic, March 16—"The Test of Abraham's Faith." Scripture—Genesis 22: 1-13.

Time.—According to Sayce, not far from 2200. About 1872 (Ussher.)

Place.—Beersheba, Land of Moriah.

Persons.—Abraham, Isaac, two servants.

Golden Text.—I desire goodness, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings.—Hos. 6:6.

Leading Thought.—What God asks from us is goodness.

The purpose of this lesson is to show how God tried, tested, proved Abraham's faith. This was the supreme crisis, also the supreme triumph in the experience of the Friend of God, the Father of the Faithful.

As corollaries the lesson shows (1) that Isaac's faith was also tested and proved; (2) that the slaying of human beings as a sacrifice has no place in the worship of God. The sacrifice that God asks parents to make of their children is not to destroy their lives and make of their dead bodies a burnt offering, but to give them to him and to help them to give themselves to him for the more abundant life, the noblest, gladdest, most virtuous living.

At length, was born to Abraham and his wife Sarah, the long-promised son, and the parents named him Isaac, signifying laughter. Isaac was the child of God's promise. Isaac proved to be of gentle disposition, an obedient, tractable, lovable child. Abraham settled at Beersheba, and had thus lived for some twenty years, happy in the service of God, happy in the blessing of having a son, when suddenly the severest trial of his life fell upon him, caused by God's directing him to sacrifice that son.

Object Lesson.

A piece of twine. Try to break it. Did you ever jerk a piece of twine that way before using it to tie an express package or package for the mail? Why did you do it? Did you want the string to break? No, but you wanted to be sure it was strong enough before you trusted it to keep your package safe. What are some other things that are tested before using? Cables for elevators, boilers, anchor chains. Tests are not meant to destroy or harm. They are given to articles that have an important work to do. It is for the same reason tests and trials come to us. They are not to make us fall, but to prove whether we can be trusted with important work.

A watch open to show the works. What keeps these wheels moving? Something behind all the moving wheels furnishes the power. It is the mainspring. The mainspring is far more important than the engraved gold case which we see most of the time. There is a mainspring which controls the actions and words of every one of us. It is the most important thing about us. The motive back of the outward acts is all important. The Golden Text for today tells about this. "I desire goodness more than service."

A ring or an article made of gold. When pure gold is tested by fire. What happens? It remains pure gold. When gold mixed with impurities is tried by fire, what happens? The impurities are destroyed, the gold is purified. The gold of character is purified by testing. Trials never destroy the gold, they only destroy the weak and worthless elements in our lives and make us purer and better.—Hageman.

Some Sacrifice.

Rev. Jno. F. Coeván in the C. E. World gives the following in his comment on the lesson:

The Ladies' Home Journal for last September tells how a minister's wife economized to save $850 a year out of a $1,500 salary, to send a son and daughter to college. On the $650 remaining, with home perquisites, the father had to keep himself presentable among the prominent men of the town, and his wife had to appear in the best society, and the daughter at home had to continue in school and keep up her music-lessons.

This mother dismissed her maid, sold the horse, and worked out a complete schedule of minimum expenses, which allowed the three at home $8.39 a year for amusements, which included even the Christmas decorations.

Friends called them foolish, and said that they would better put the children to work than to slave out their lives for that college nonsense. "But," says the mother, "we had studied 'values,' and made our choice."

I give this in some detail as a typical case. It illustrates the Abraham spirit in which thousands of fathers and mothers are denying themselves to give to society their sons and daughters. Sample the sons of ministers who are in prominent public positions, whose fitness to serve has been born of such sacrifice, and tell me whether it is not fragrant of the Abraham faith.

Take such men as Grover Cleveland, William Lloyd-George, Dr. Wiley, Woodrow Wilson, President George Vincent of Minnesota University, the late Senator Dolliver, and his successor, and scores of others equally prominent, who have been laid on the altar of public service by Abrahamic fathers.

NOTES ON C. E. TOPIC, MARCH, 16.

Topic—"How May Every Sabbath Be the Lord's Day." Jer. 17:21-27.

This is to be a question meeting. The first question is an individual one: "Do I use the Sabbath as I should?" The second is: "Is the Sunday in America or in my own community what it should be?" Third: "What can we (I) do to remedy conditions?"

Other Questions.

1. What is God's day for?
2. Why should the day be given to God?
3. Why should we meditate on the Sabbath day?
4. What is an ideal Sunday?
5. Of what special value is the Sabbath to the individual?
6. What can the home do to conserve the Sabbath?
7. What can Endeavorers do to conserve the day?

Some Questions Answered.

Write on the blackboard, or on a large sheet of paper, the words, "How to Make Ideal Sabbath." Then have members speak on the following points, adding others of their own, if they desire.

1. Christ healed on the Sabbath, claiming the Sabbath for the service of man. Sunday is a day of liberty for service. Religious work is rest, because it is different from week-day work, and because the joy it brings is itself food for the soul. No Sabbath should pass without an attempt to do some good to somebody.

2. The Sabbath is for fellowship. First of all it is home day. What attention do we give our homes on Sunday? Sunday should be the family day. The rest of the week we are scattered; on Sunday we should get together for some hours at least.

3. Some part of an ideal Sabbath should be given to good reading. The Bible comes first, of course; then some good book. Devotional books are not sufficiently read. The experiences of saints is a stimulus. What books have we found helpful?

4. Some time may be profitably spent in writing letters to the sick, especially to confirmed invalids who are liable to be forgotten. There are topics enough. If the invalid is a church member, there is church-news to write; if a friend, there are always cheering bits of information about other friends to speak about. Then there is room for a message of cheer and a kind word that will lead the thought to Christ.

5. Hospital visitation, when possible, is an ideal way to make the Sabbath the Lord's Day. A group of Endeavorers can do this work, can sing for the patients, visit from cot to cot, distribute tracts or good magazines, and bring with them an atmosphere of good cheer.

6. An appreciated service is to write letters for the sick or the aged on Sundays. Some of them cannot write, or write with difficulty; and they want to send messages to sons and daughters in distant towns. They will prize an effort to write their letters.

GREAT C. E. CONVENTION.

Already about 75 speakers have been obtained for the Los Angeles (Cal.) convention of the forces of Christian Endeavor. Some of the names noticed are Hon. William J. Bryan, Hon. James A. McDonald, John Willis Baer, LL. D., Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, Rev. Jno. B. Shaw, A. L. Phillips, D. D., President Ira. Laidrith, Rev. Howard B. Grose, President T. A. Watkins and ever so many others.

Special rates will be given from all points of the country by the railroads. Many institutes and special features will be conducted. Many able people are set down as leaders of divisions and departments.

New Method of Flesh Reduction Proves Astonishingly Successful.

Johnstown, Pa., Special.—Investigation has fully established that Hon. H. T. Stetler, of this city, has reduced his weight fifty-seven pounds in an incredibly short time by wearing a simple, invisible device, weighing less than an Ounce. This, when worn as directed, acts as an infallible flesh reducer, dispensing entirely with dieting, medicines, and exercises. Many prominent men and women have adopted this easy means of reducing superfluous flesh, and it is stated that the inventor, Prof. G. X. Purns, of No. 17 West Thirty-eight street, New York, is sending these outfits on free trial to all who write him.

A SPECIAL TONIC.

Cora, Ky.—Mrs. Iva Moore, of this place, says: "I was so weak, I could hardly walk. I tried Cardui, and was greatly relieved. It is a splendid tonic. I have recommended Cardui to many friends, who tried it with good results." Testimony like this comes unsolicited from thousands of earnest women, who have been benefitted by the timely use of that successful tonic medicine, Cardui. Purely vegetable, mild, but reliable, Cardui well merits its high place in the esteem of those who have tried it. It relieves women's pains, and strengthens weak women. It is certainly worth a trial. MRS POWELL ALMOST DEAD.

Dry Ridge, Ky.—"I could hardly walk across the room," says Mrs. Lydia Powell, of Dry Ridge, "before I tried Cardui. I was so poorly, I was almost dead. Now, I can walk four miles and do my work with much more ease. I praise Cardui for my wonderful cure." Cardui is successful in benefiting sick women, because it is composed to ingredients that act specifically on the womanly constitution, relieving headache, backache, irregularity, misery and distress. Only a good medicine could show such continual increase in popularity as Cardui has, for the past 50 years. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic.

THAT MASS MEETING IN MAY.

It was hoped that a number of women would have expressed themselves as to whether they were in favor of a meeting of our women at Elon College in May at the time of the meeting of the Woman's Missionary Board of the S. C. C. Some few have so expressed themselves so and we hope that every Woman's Missionary Society will elect or appoint a representative, and that every woman interested in the work, and that can attend, will be present. We very much desire that every member of the Conference Board may be there. The date of the meeting will be announced soon. In the meantime, let us all begin to plan and to pray for the meeting. There will be several matters of great interest that will be brought up. All is concerning the changing of our Conference Boards from a Board appointed by the Conference President to one made up of representatives from the Societies. Another matter that needs to be made clear is the relation of our work to the S. C. C. In our work to be directly affiliated with the Woman's Work of the A. C. C., or not? These and other matters of importance will need to be acted upon. Let us be thinking and planning for the good of the cause.

NOTES OF PROGRESS.

To those interested in the progress of organized work for missions among us there are some signs of encouragement. This week's Sun gives an account of a Girl's Society organized in the Suffolk Christian church. Mr. Rountree writes that they have recently organized their society in the Greensboro church one for the women, one for the young people and one for the children. He also reports that they are studying "The Call of the World," and that they will observe "Livingstone Day" on March 16th. Not long ago, Mrs. Denison, Miss Brickhouse and Mrs. White from "The Temple" went over to Lambert's Point, and Mrs. Denison made a talk. At the close of the meeting, some twenty indicated a desire for a Society in that church. We hope to have a report of their organization soon. There are some other churches, if not already organized, at the point of organizing.

And there are still others that should be considering the matter. There is a need for the efforts of every woman and child in the cause of world-wide missions and every woman and child needs the cause of missions to help in the developing of her Christian character. Would that the plea might strike to the heart of every man, woman and child in the ranks of our church.

Suffolk Young People in Front Ranks.

The first Young People's Society in the South to be enrolled in the Young People's Missionary Department is the Girl's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian church. This Society was organized Feb. 24, with 25 charter members. The following officers were elected for the first year: Miss Mamie Holland superintendent; Miss Ethel Shoop, president; Miss Virgie Holland, vice-president; Miss Phoebe Artman, recording secretary; Miss Ruth Turner, treasurer; Miss Mary Andrews, corresponding secretary; Miss Mamie Kelly, Pianist.

An interesting program was rendered. Miss Katie Brinkley sang "Father Be Near," and Miss Garland Farrar read a story of a Chinese girl, "How Long Must I Wait?" Mrs. Dick, president of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Suffolk Church, was present, and gave a talk on the missionary work.

The following were appointed a committee to draw up a constitution and by-laws: Miss Susie Holland, chairman, Misses Virgie Holland, Virginia Shoop, LeCharie King, and Eloise Crocker.

Without doubt, these young ladies are very much in earnest. See how many of their number they have put to work at the very beginning. Miss Holland and Miss Shoop have written most enthusiastically regarding the work, and it is evident that this Society means to aim for the highest, the members rendering service with heart and soul.

Margaret H. Brickhouse,
Supt. Young People's Work for Missions.

LONGINGS OF THE MISSIONARY HEART.

As the old year slips into the distance and I think upon past experiences and thus seek to gain new courage for the duties of the present by meditating upon God's love and care as manifested in these experiences, there comes upon me with surprise the fact that ten years have passed since my call to the mission field and a deep sense of gratitude that so much of good has come to me during these years intermingled with some trying and bitter experiences.

But as I look back upon the years of my life, preceding my call to mission work, and recall the vivid experience of that final decision made out alone in the quiet of summer woods, it was not love of the Christian church that was the motive force, but it was the love of and pity for poor suffering souls in the blackness and despair of heathen darkness. I believe there are few who have proven more loyal than I have to the Christian church and I think a proper amount of church pride is commendable, but as we can and do become selfish in our motives as individuals, so it might be possible as a church.

And so it seems to me that if our ministers first, and through them each congregation, could have their hearts and minds awakened to the awfulness of the need of this great mass of suffering humanity about us—both at home and abroad—our missionary finances would be solved, because it must have been pity for our condition and love for us that prompted God to make the sacrifice of His Son for our redemption, and we are created in His own image. Once let our people see and realize the pitiable, helpless condition of the heathen and they, too, will pity, love and give.

Personally this vision is still a vital force in my life and not for one instant in all these years have I doubted that God called me to go, but the why of the circumstances and conditions that have hindered I shall probably never know, until that final day when all mysteries are explained. Amid these hindrances and suffering on account of ill health, and as the New Year dawns I find my courage strong to follow Longfellow's plan to look not mournfully into the past, but wisely improve the present and go forth to meet the shadowy future, without fear and with a brave heart. I am content to go or to stay as God directs, but my burden of prayer in the matter of our impending missionary problem is that God will so move upon the mind and hearts of our ministry, both North and South that our ministers and leaders may have clearer visions of the needs of the heathen world to-day that their congregations may catch the vision and will need no appeal except this one cry for light from those that "sit in the region and shadow of death," to call forth such a response in pity, love and means as will greatly bless the heathen world and honor God our Father who has so richly blessed us the past year, and will continue to cause His rain to fall upon the just and the unjust through the days, weeks, and months of the coming year.

Dear Children and Friends:

As is well known Chatham County is famous for rabbits. Well, that may be true, but there is something else to be said of Chatham also; that is, it has a great many good people. It was my happy privilege to be with some of them last Sunday—at Hanks Chapel and as a result of my visit there I present a long list of donations. And I have the promise, from one of our most loyal laymen, of a car load of lumber when we want to do more building. We want to do the building all right; and, it is needed very badly, but we are not in a position to do it. We are working to be able to put in the water and sewage and are just about ready to do it. But we will have to have some more help.

With the money received from week to week into the general fund we are able to live and are paying some on our bills. It is enough to make us "stir some" when we are threatened with "sight drafts."

We are equipping our tables with good heavy china ware as we get able—you will notice—the list of donations.

Very truly,

E. M. Carter, Supt.

Donations.

Collected by Mrs. Woodard, Supt, cooking department: 1 set knives and forks, 3 cans corn, 7 cakes soap, 1 cake chocolate, 1 can lye, 2lbs. sugar, 1 doz. cups and saucers, 18 plates, 3 bowls, 1½ doz. teaspoons, 2 kitchen spoons, 2 box baking powders, 1 doz. prs. shoe strings, 1 spool thread, ½ doz. machine needles, 1 dish pan.

Six cans peaches and 1 can preserves by Mrs. Patric Dixon, E. J. Lester and Cicero Jones of Mt. Bethel Ch.

We are in need of quite a lot of garden seeds, if you have more than you need.

Dear Uncle Emory:

We are having rainy weather and it is hard on little boys to have to stay in doors. But mamma says the rain will make the plants and flowers grow. Our pomegranate and fig tree are putting out their leaves. You, Uncle Emory, know how they look. We send our dimes with love.

It certainly is "hard" for boys to stay in doors, especially when there are 25 or 30 of them. And I know of those trees. but the figs are better when cooked in sugar.

Chipley, Va., Feb. 25, 1913.

Dear Cousins:

Here comes a little Georgia girl who has never written you before. Listen cousins, Uncle Emory is my brother and we miss him, sister and the bobbies so much.

I go to school at Oak Grove. I like to go. I am in the fourth grade and like spelling best. My teacher's name is Prof. Rob't. H. Sivell.

I will say good bye for this time and come again soon. Enclosed find my small offering 25cts. Love to Uncle Emory and the cousins.

Your Cousin

Frances Floyd.

"Sister" and the babies are getting along nicely. Regina speaks right often of "going to Chipley." I am glad you like to go to school.

Sanford, N. C., March 3, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I will write my letter and send my dime for March. I am glad it is so near summer. I like it best because the flowers bloom and the trees are green. I will close, I hope the cousins are well.

Your niece,

It is an inspiration to be among the flowers and we shall try to live by their example, to cheer the world with beauty and fragrance.

Amazing Prices on STEEL Shingles

The demand for Edwards' "Reo" Steel Shingles has become so big that we now sell them from factory to user for less—actually LESS—than common wood shingles. And we pay all freight! LOOK INTO THIS A ONLY SAVING PROPOSITION BEFORE ROOFING YOUR BUILDINGS. SEND POSTAL TODAY AND GET FACTORY PRICES.

No Trick to Put Them On

You don't have to nail these steel shingles, like wood shingles, ONE AT A TIME. Put on as high as 100 at once, for they come in big sheets ready to nail on sheathing or roof. It's ten times easier than putting on wood shingles. No extra materials to buy, no painting to do, no tools to borrow. Your hired man can do the job with a hammer.

Absolutely Rustproof

Please don't judge Edwards' Steel Shingles by common galvanized iron roofing—the kind that rusts. We have invented a method that absolutely prevents rust from ever getting a foothold, as 10,000 delighted owners of Edwards' Roofs have found out. It's the famous Edwards' Tightcote Process applied to genuine Open Heart Steel.

Protect Your Buildings from FIRE

Don't take chances of fire from defective chimneys, flying sparks and lightning. Roof your buildings with these Steel Shingles and make them safe. Remember, nine out of every ten fires start with the roof. We specifically guarantee every Edwards' Steel Shingle Roof against lightning. This guarantee is backed by a $10,000 Cash Fund.

Cheaper Than Prepared-Paper Roofing
 Edwards' Steel Shingles cost less, far LESS, than prepared-paper or composition roofing. IF YOU PUT THE COST PER YEAR. And that's the right way to figure.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Henderson.

The work here is progressing as well as could be expected. The congregations have been unusually large during the winter. I don't believe there is a more loyal membership in the Eastern North Carolina Conference. Those who know how thinly populated the community is and how high those rocky hills are, know something about the courage it takes to attend church and Sunday school. Notwithstanding this they go every Sunday. At our last appointment the ground was almost totally covered with snow, but the attendance was almost as large as in favorable weather. We have an evergreen Sunday school, a nice Baraca Class and four other classes. The interest is good year in and year out. At our last appointment Bro. Sim Poythress resigned as superintendent on account of having moved to Chapel Hill, and Bro. Cleveland Lindsay was elected to fill the vacancy. The school voted to give a monthly offering to the Orphanage. If you want to hear some good singing go to Damascus. They certainly do sing.

Damascus.

The work here is encouraging. This is my first year at Henderson and my first experience with a real town or city church as pastor. I have received one good member into fellowship since Conference, and there are other prospects of uniting with us soon. The congregations are increasing at each appointment. There is much interest and enthusiasm on the part of both men and women. We are working now to seat the church with nice oak curved pews. The order for same has been made and we have in sight among the members only some over $200 to pay for same. The pews will cost us about $400 to install them. If you want to help a people who are trying to help themselves, send me or Bro. C. D. Horton, Henderson, N. C., any amount you will.

A few Saturday nights ago while the Committee was discussing plans and means by which to seat the church a few good women slipped into the pastor's study and organized a Ladies' Aid Society with a membership of seven. They had grown last Sunday to twenty-six. They are hustling. God bless the good women. We have a choir practice every second and fourth Saturday nights. The singing is improving nicely. We hope to soon have a good choir. We are doing things in Henderson. Won't you help us with your means and especially with your prayers?

I will write about Mt. Carmel soon. I missed last appointment on account of

Buy an Engine with Reserve Power

FARM power needs are seldom the same for any two days together. You never can tell when extra work is going to come up, or extra power will be needed. For this reason it is best to buy an engine a little larger than you ordinarily need. The engine with ten to twenty per cent of reserve power will often save enough to pay for itself just by its capacity for carrying you through emergencies.

I H C Oil and Gas Engines

are large for their rated capacity. They are designed to run at the slowest possible speed to develop their power because that increases the durability of the engine. A speed changing mechanism enables you to vary the speed at will. Any I H C engine will develop from ten to twenty per cent more than its rated horse power. You can use it to run your feed grinder, pump, grindstone, repair shop tools, cream separator or any farm machine to which power can be applied.

I H C engines are made in all approved styles, vertical, horizontal, stationary, portable, skidded, air cooled and water cooled, and in 1 to 50-horse power sizes. They operate on gas, gasoline, kerosene, naphtha, distillate or alcohol. I H C tractors are built in sizes from 12 to 60-horse power. See the I H C local dealer. Greensboro.

The ladies of the First Christian Church of Greensboro held an "Acquaintance Social" in basement of the church last Thursday afternoon from 3 to 5. 135 were invited. Many were there. It was in a most informal manner. A delightful program consisting of a talk by the pastor, solos by Miss Annie Lee Clymer and the pastor, violin solo by Miss Cagle, and reading by Miss Bronna Clymer were rendered. Grape juice punch with nabiscos were served.

At 8 o'clock the Junior Philatheas held their monthly meeting.

Monday night, March 17, the men will hold a banquet. Dr. W. A. Harper will speak.

Corinth.

Saturday before the third Sunday in February when we reached the place at the regular hour of our appointment we found that our building had been rolled back and made a school building of. So we are without a church building at present. Our people at Corinth need a larger building, but they need some help to build it. So I am making my first appeal through The Christian Sun because I feel that we need the co-operation and help of The Sun's readers in this great undertaking. I feel that we have no better people anywhere than at Corinth. They are poor people, brethren, and I know they will appreciate your help as much as anybody.

So we feel that there are many of our brethren who would like to help us. We will appreciate any amount. Send your donation to J. D. Dollar, Roanoke, Ala., Star Route, or to J. C. Harris, Wadley, Ala., R. F. D. 4.

Yours in His service,

GRACE'S CHAPEL.

The first business meeting of the year has been held at Grace's Chapel. While the congregation was small, at the business session yet on Sunday the church was about full. The deacon's report showed some progress but more is anticipated during the next quarter. A nice organ has been placed in the church and the music is much improved.

The Sunday school is alive and succeeding nicely.

Bro. Jones from Ephesus Baptist church was with us last second Sunday and preached a very practical sermon.

POPLAR BRANCH.

Our first quarterly conference has been observed. The congregation is improving. The deacons urge that more members of the church be present at the Saturday service. The Sunday school has been re-organized and we trust is working well.

This church is very small in membership, but the people are unusually kind to their pastor and he has every reason to believe they are supporting him by their sympathy and prayers.

ANTIOCH.

On Saturday before the third Sunday in January we met in the first regular business session of this church for the new year. The pastor was very much pleased with the deacon's report. It showed the church was making progress and the members in brotherly love, and harmony with each other. The floor has been nicely carpeted since our last appointment and a beautiful cover purchased for the pulpit. We feel the Sunday school is also working well at Antioch.

At all three of the above named churches we have a committee appointed on music, which means that our singing is to be improved and we trust made more interesting. We have also appointed a missionary committee to assist in missionary work. May God help us to labor together in love and unity for his glory and our good.

Wakefield.

It is always pleasant to remember, and be remembered by, our friends and loved ones, both in sickness and in health, in poverty and in wealth. Since this golden thread of pleasure has been woven in the fabric of life, and can be made stronger by giving and receiving, would it not be well for all men to strengthen their giving powers, and be in such spiritual condition that God could give to them the things that would count for spiritual uplift and power. Last Sunday at New Lebanon Christian church just before the preaching service our brother John Price, who has been unable to work for some time, was mentioned to the congregation, and the writer suggested that a donation from the church be sent to him and his family. At once all took a part, and a committee was appointed Messrs O. V. and O. J. Cokes, to take the provisions, which were given in abundance to the brother as an expression of our interest, and of our prayers that he be restored to health, and given back to his family and to the church.

On the 28th of Jan. the Burton Grove people had gathered up a big pounding and that day brother E. W. Carroll came to the writer's home with about everything a family would need to eat, and presented it to their pastor as an expression of their appreciation of his work among them. Burton Grove has a small membership, but the writer has never served a more loyal and liberty loving people in all of his pastoral work.

The writer wishes to thank all these good people for their kindly and most substantial remembrance, and pray God that he may become more like Christ. May God bless them in their church work, and give them health and wealth.

C. C. Jones.

ALABAMA LETTER.

Dear Bro:

I will write a few lines, for the first time since our conference convened last fall. I am preaching at Antioch, Beulah, New Hope, McGuire's Chapel and La Grange, and am preaching monthly at Abanda.

I am at La Grange on the 3rd Sunday in each month. We are holding our services now in the New Union Church at Elm City. Our people had not commenced their building when I was there last. We have secured a nice lot near the public school building. I feel that our cause is looking up some at La Grange. But they need to locate a preacher in their midst. No man can do the work that is needed to be done and go only once in the month.

On the 4th Sunday and Saturday before I am at New Hope. Here we have good congregations and good services. They also have a flourishing Sunday school. In the afternoon of the 4th Sunday I go to Abanda and preach at 3:00 P. M. We have a good many members here and at no distant day we may have a church at this place. 1st Sunday I am at Beulah 11 A. M. and Saturday before. Our church here has suffered a great deal from removals and withdrawals the past two years. We still have a very good membership, and the Sunday school is doing well. In the afternoon of the 1st Sunday I go to McGuire's Chapel, and preach at 3:00 P. M. This church is unfortunate in not securing a pastor for Saturday and Sunday in each month, but they are helping the Sunday school up and seemingly doing the best they can. There ought to be a great work done in that community and I trust that it may be done during this year. I go to Antioch 2nd Sunday in each month.

The church here is doing very well. The weather has hindered us somewhat during the winter. The Sunday school is taking on new life and bids fair to be better than ever by the time spring opens up. My wife and I are under many obligations to the Sunday school at this church for a nice Christmas present, consisting of a set of silver tea spoons, half set of table spoons and a nice large rug, many thanks to you all. I should like to know if our Sunday school convention could meet 5th Sunday in March? Who can answer.

DIED.

Carr.

Mrs. Rebecca Carr, widow of the late James A. Carr of Isle of Wight Co., Va., died January 22, 1913, at the age of 71 years, 6 months and 9 days. She was married to Mr. Carr in 1865. She died at the home of her son, W. E. Carr, Magnolia, Va., while there on a visit. She was sick only a few days, and her death was a great shock to the family. She left four sons and three daughters—seven living children, and 35 grand children, and 2 great grand children. She was a faithful and consistent member of Colosse Baptist church, with which she had been identified for many years. The funeral service was conducted by the writer, and the remains laid to rest in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Suffolk, Va. It is always sad to witness a funeral scene when mother is taken away. Her life may have lost its activity on account of age or infirmity, but her presence is a benediction and blessing to her children. May the Father guide and bless the members of this bereaved family.

I. W. Johnson.

Roberts.

Lemuel P. Roberts died at his home near Isle of Wight Court House on January 20, 1913. The deceased was sixty-three years of age, and was a charter member and deacon of Isle of Wight Court House church. He had spent many years in faithful and efficient Christian service.

He was married in October, 1896, to Miss Ella Bland. The Lord did not bless this union with children, but Bro. Roberts opened his home to those who were homeless, and by the side of his grave those who had shared his love and protection weepingly attested his fatherly love. The funeral services were conducted by the writer and the interment was in Round Hill Cemetery. He leaves a widow and many relatives who mourn his departure.

May the Lord command his blessings upon the bereaved ones.

Stanley C. Harrell.

Resolved: First—That in his death this church has lost a faithful and zealous member, an efficient and loyal officer, and our Sunday school a wise and consecrated member.

Second—That recognizing his valuable services to his church and community; his unflinching faith in Christ, and his unfeigned loyalty to every call made upon his time and talents and his love and interest in every phase of Christian work,

HE IS RISEN

In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre. And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow: And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men. And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here, for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay. And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you. And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run to bring his disciples word.

And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him. Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshipped him: but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.—St. Matthew 28: 1-10; 16-18.

IN ALL THY WAYS.

In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and he will direct thy path. Prov. 3:6.

Very many will read the story of Isaac and Rebekah and regarded it as a romance in which the two parties, particularly interested, won out, got married and were ever afterwards happy, as all good and obedient young people deserve to be. Others will read the story and say "Well, God works out matters to suit Himself, and His plans are fixed, and there is no use in trying to alter them; that it was just intended from the beginning that Isaac and Rebekah should be brought together as husband and wife and that is all there is to it."

And both opinions will be equally erroneous. Two young people did come together and were married and were happy, and God's plans were carried out. But, back of all this romance, back of all these plans and purposes there was consecration to duty, willingness to obey God, Abraham's faith, Isaac's prayerful meditation, Rebekah's submissiveness and filial affections.

God's plans were carried out and His purposes effected, but there were human hearts ready to respond, and human hands willing to perform, and anxious souls seeking to obey. God's plans are always carried out when men and women get ready, become willing, to hear His voice and obey His will. "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He will direct thy paths." Solomon was exercising divine, as well as human wisdom when he uttered those words. God will bring things to pass for us according to His plans and purposes when we trust and obey Him.

Hundreds and thousands of people stagger on to the grave and to eternity expecting God to effect His purposes and carry out His plans through and by them without their showing any disposition to consult His desires, know His will, and obey His commandments.

Martin Luther, the great Reformer, was asked, "Now, Pope and cardinals, prophets and kings all against you, what will you do?" He replied: "Put myself under the shelter of him who said 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.'" God's purposes were carried out and his plans effected there, for Luther, trusted, believed, obeyed.

I wonder if parents pray enough that their sons and daughters may be well mated? I wonder if unhappy marriages are not brought about because of indifferent parents, parents who themselves do not seek God's will in all their way and are not themselves sufficiently consecrated to God's will and way? I wonder if many young people do not plunge headlong into matrimony without asking God anything about it? Without consulting God's will and wish? Counting only their own youthful fancies and their own feelings? Wonder if increasing divorce courts are not in a measure due to the fact that parents and off-spring no longer consult God's will about wedlock?

THE RESURRECTION.

It makes no difference now that the word Easter is derived from the old Saxon word Eostre, meaning a Saxon goddess to whom special offerings were made annually in the Spring. It makes no difference that Easter succeeds in the minds of many churchmen the old Jewish Passover. It makes no difference, furthermore, that a decree had to be issued at Nicaea in 325 A. D. to fix the date of Easter. Just mix up the date, the word and the history of the event all you wish, and say that it all sprang from a pagan origin and has been perpetuated by Catholic practice, the bold, bald fact now stands out that Easter stands for, represents, and is intended to celebrate the Resurrection of Jesus the Christ.

There is not any other fact in history like the Resurrection, nothing on a parallel with it, and nothing to compare it to. Jesus, our blessed Lord and Savior, had stood over the grave of the dead and had said "Come forth," and the dead arose. But no one stood over Jesus' grave and called Him forth. He had power in Himself which was mightier than death, and death through Him was conquered. He became indeed the first fruits of them that slept.

In this act Jesus showed that time and eternity are one. Time does not end any more, and eternity begin. Eternity has already begun. The terms are not different, save for the conveniences of speech. When our blessed Savior came from the grave He proved that time had no power, no mystery, no dread that eternity did not possess and solve, and that time was only the beginning of an eternity already here.

Here is the world's hope. Our dead in Christ are not gone beyond us. They have already entered the larger realm and room marked Eternity, and there await us. Unless we believe in the Resurrection we are doomed forever to be miserable. Easter bids us look up, take hope, be glad and rejoice in the hope of near companionship of our dead departed.

NOT A REPRESENTATIVE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Spencer, N. C., correspondent of the Raleigh News and Observer recently gave notice that a series of debates would be held in the Baptist church of Spencer beginning March 26th, between the pastor, Rev. J. L. Vipperman, D. D., and Rev. J. B. Briney, D. D., of Louisville, Ky. There are to be eight debates between these distinguished brethren, and may the Lord give them both inspiration and perspiration in their forensic contest. The subject for debate will involve "Campbellism," and the Rev. Dr. Briney, who will argue for the Campbellites and uphold the Campbellian banner is put down in the correspondence as representing "The Christian Church."

In looking over the roster of Christian ministers we find no such name as that of Rev. J. B. Briney. What the correspondent meant, or should have said was, we presume, that this Christian brother represents the Disciples church. This church is different in many particulars from the Christian church, and the fact that Rev. Alexander Campbell, founder of the Disciples church, fell in with, and preached for a season amongst, some of our Christian churches and ministers in his early ministry does not entitle his followers to the name which he refused to take, owing to his peculiar belief in baptism in particular, and several other scriptural points, which wholly differed from the position and principles maintained by the Christians. The interest we have in this particular debate is that the papers herald the Louisville debater as a representative of "the Christian Church." No accredited "representative of the Christian Church" in the ministry would be found debating with a Baptist minister; for Christian character, not theological dogma or forensic combat, is the test of fellowship in the Christian church. We wish the brethren concerned all the excitement, hilarity and rich trophies their debate deserves, but let them debate as Baptist and Disciple.

REV. C. A. POSTE DEAD.

This good man fell on sleep, after a brief illness from pneumonia, at his home Franklinton, N. C. Sunday, morning March 16. Bro. Poste was known to many Sun readers, having held pastorate in the South and having been identified, in one way or another, with Franklinton Christian college for several years, he having recently moved to Franklinton and taken charge there looking to enlarging the plant there and adding many salient features to the institution's usefulness. His last pastorate, before going to Franklinton, was Lewisburg, Pa., to which place his remains were carried for interment.

Bro. Poste was in his seventy-first year, and was up to the time of his last illness actively and zealously engaged in the work. He was a modest, gentle Christian spirit, and endeared himself to the people wherever he labored. A man with his three score and ten years full of faithful and efficient service has gone back to God and those who know him realize that the rich reward of the faithful awaited him. His departure will be deeply mourned and his place of service will be difficult to fill.

—We are more than pleased to note the progress of our good work at Reidsville under the leadership of our zealous and efficient brother, Rev. L. I. Cox, pastor. A very desirable and ample lot has been purchased on a prominent and accessible street for $500, and the same is paid for with the exception of $117.50 which amount, however, is covered with good pledges. We have a membership in Reidsville of something like twenty-five, which it is hoped can be organized into a local church at no very distant date. Pastor Cox reports some very loyal and active members of the Christian church there, who are exceedingly anxious for a church house of their own name and choice, and to this end they are willing to contribute to the utmost of their ability.

—Rev. L. I. Cox is in Richland, Ga. assisting Rev. H. W. Elder in a series of meetings this week and next. Bro. Cox besides being a competent and successful pastor is an evangelist of influence and power.

HIGH TESTIMONY.

Much is being said just now of President Wilson's religious bent of mind, his moral utterances, and the character of the men he is inviting to help him in the big task of government which his fellow citizens have called him to.

For years Rev. T. N. Ivey, now editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, lived in the same town, labored in the same church and Sunday school, with Mr. Josephus Daniels, who has been made Secretary of the Navy by President Wilson. Dr. Ivey knows his man and at first hand, and thus speaks of him editorially in a recent Advocate:

"The new Secretary of the Navy is Mr. Josephus Daniels of North Carolina. His eminent ability in the field of journalism and politics is fully equaled by the soundness of his moral character and the inflexibility of his loyalty to God and his country. Mr. Daniels has behind him a good old Methodist mother, from whose denominational faith and pious teaching he has never departed. He is a Methodist layman, a Sunday school teacher, whose face may be always seen when the people gather to worship. That he will prove equal in a most brilliant way to the demands of his responsible position in Mr. Wilson's Cabinet is not doubted by any one who knows him. He fully merits his new position, and the high office is safe in his hands."

THE UNIVERSITY FACULTY.

The court has spoken, and the demands of the law have been satisfied, in the matter of the four young men accused of hazing at the University last Fall when young Billy Rand, a freshman, was killed. One of the four was declared free by the presiding Judge, no evidence being adduced against him. The other three were tried before a jury of their peers who having heard all the evidence and the plea for counsel, declared these college students guilty of "manslaughter." The sentence was four months in prison. The court gave the commissioners of the county the privilege of hiring the boys out which of course will be done, and the parents will of course employ their sons.

But these young men will carry with them through life, besides their loss of citizenship, the thought that a court has declared them guilty of man slaughter, responsible for the death of a fellow citizen.

This ought to be as a deterrent and serve to stop the practice of hazing at our University; but it will not do so unless the faculty of that institution shall back up what the law of the land has done with their tireless and unrelenting effort to stop this evil, and illegal practice.

As soon as ever the faculty at our University shall say that hazing must stop, and then bend every energy and effort to express by deed what they say by word, hazing will stop. Other institutions with as manly men and as self-willed pupils forbid and prevent hazing; why not our University? Mr. President and gentlemen of the University Faculty, the law of the State and the citizens the the State have put it up to you. The future, the near future in particular, will be watched with keen interest and your attitude in this matter will be weighed in the balances.

ROYALTY AND THE BOOK.

At least two members of Europe's royal family are constant readers and close students of the Bible. The Emperor of Germany not infrequently speaks or writes pointedly of the worth and merit of the Bible as a guide to daily conduct and practice. He was trained to read the Bible from his youth up and has never lost his deep interest in its divine precepts. Furthermore, king George V. of England makes it an invariable rule to read the Book daily. The secretary to the king recently wrote, in answer to an enquirey, this striking letter, which we commend to parents: "I have had the honor of submitting your letter to the king, and am directed to inform you in reply that it is quite true that he promised Queen Alexandra as long ago as 1881 that he would read a chapter of the Bible daily, and that he has ever since adhered to this promise." That is fine promise for any boy, prince or peasant, to make his mother, if he will always keep the promise as King George has done.

COMMENT.

—Dr. Friedrich F. Friedmann, a German physician, claims to have discovered a tuberculin that is neither toxic nor virulent, that will cure tuberculosis. It is claimed that by injecting the tuberculin into the system of a consumptive patient, the deadly bacilli of tuberculosis are attacked and destroyed. Dr. Friedmann claims to have spent twenty-three years in research work and to have completely cured himself and many others after consumption had advanced considerably. He is lecturing and giving demonstrations in several cities before audiences of distinguished physicians, and is also applying his remedy to many patients. The belief obtains in many quarters that his discovery is a marvel and a wonder and will do all that is claimed for it. Time will tell; but if the facts pan out as claimed this will prove the greatest help to man of any discovery in many a decade. The "white plague" is yet the dread of mankind and if Dr. Friedmann has discovered the remedy millions will call him blessed.

—Today, March 19, is the one hundredth anniversary of the world's greatest explorer and missionary, David Livingstone, and among the very greatest men of all the centuries. He was born in an humble Scottish cabin March 19, 1813. All men everywhere are indebted to this man for the life he lived. He was a hero, and if you have not read his biography, buy or borrow one and read it. His was a fearless and a romantic life indeed.

—At any rate Bro. Henry Spencer Booth spoke a word, for the profession of preaching in this week's Sun, which will find wide audience, and win ready assent. Dr. Staley and Brother Booth are at their best this week and cover a range of thought and scope of diction that would do honor to the biggest journals in the land. Thank you, brethren, for some four or five thousand readers will enjoy you this week.

ALABAMA LETTER.

At New Harmony the first Sunday instant and Saturday before we had two inspiring services. Due to the inclemency of the weather the attendance was hardly normal, but those who were present seemed to earnestly heed the message that were, we trust, of the Lord. On Sunday Rev. J. H. Hughes worshiped with us, to our great delight. Bro. Hughes reports his work as making encouraging progress.

Last Sabbath we held only one service at the Wadley church, there being a continual down-pour at the evening hour. At eleven o'clock however, the congregation was good and a deep interest was manifested in the gospel message. The outlook here is hopeful.

For sometime I have been thinking of suggesting to the ministers of the Ala. and the Ga. and Ala. Conferences the idea of holding a Pastors' Institute some time this spring or the early part of summer. The need for such a meeting is imperative. It is a need that all will admit. That the pastor often needs the counsel of his fellow laborers no one will deny. A few days' conference, say even two days, would wonderfully benefit and strengthen us for the work we have to do. The preacher needs, and must have, not only information, but inspiration. The conference suggested here would afford opportunity for both. We have our problems and unless we solve them it is a foregone conclusion that they will remain unsolved. The laity is not going to unravel these things for us; we must do it ourselves. The reasons for such a meeting are too numerous to mention.

Now, Brother Pastor, what say you? Why can't we meet for mutual counsel about the first of May? Or would some other date be more convenient? Let me hear from you at once as to what you think of my suggestion. I mean business. I am in dead earnest about this matter. A program of topics that vitally concern our work could be arranged and, too, I would like to extend an invitation that you meet at Wadley. If you want this institute, it is with you to make it possible. Shall I hear from you as soon as you read this? I hope so. The Lord lead us.

G. O. Lankford.

Wadley, Ala., March 14, 1913.

—Says Charity and Children: "Once a month preaching is mighty near no preaching at all. No church in the world can do much growing under such a system." Which statement is worth thinking about. "How come" once a month preaching?

FOREIGN MISSION DAY.

The Foreign Mission Committee of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference at a recent meeting decided upon seven points of interest to the churches and pastors of that conference and ask the hearty co-operation of all to carry out the plans. One of these points is that each church set apart a definite Sunday in the near future to be known as Foreign Mission Day, when all the services shall emphasize that important work. The sermons, prayers, songs, addresses shall give as much inspiration and education on that day as possible to this particular work. It is hoped that previous announcement may be made of the service and the spirit of preparation and prayer for it to be marked. Each church will select its own date. The matter of a special foreign offering is left optional with each church. We want all the people of this conference to know more of our foreign work, understand its needs, growth, plans. We need to pray that our young people may fit themselves and listen to the call of the Lord to this great work; we need to pray that our own children shall be called of God to the great fields. It is probable that many of the churches and friends will want to help in a financial way in this time when the funds in the foreign work are short of meeting the present imperative needs. The committee hopes that you may have a day of blessing when you observe a special foreign mission day soon.

NORFOLK LETTER.

If ever the Church of the Living God needed strong, virile, level-headed, clear-sighted men as leaders, she needs them today.

Within recent years a great deal has been said, both in the religious and secular press, with reference to the scarcity of candidates for the ministry. It is alleged that one reason for this scarcity is in the fact that as a calling, the ministry has but little to offer to men in the way of opportunity for the development of that initiative and resourcefulness demanded in law or commerce, and that hence, those who enter it, become, sooner or later, weaklings and figureheads, a fate from which every enterprising and cleanly ambitious man shrinks with repugnance.

We are ready to admit that with reference to the restrictions thrown around the ministry in some churches such a conception may be, and frequently is, justified, but considering the ministry as a calling, apart from purely denominational and ecclesiastical checks and restraints, there is no ground for it. Upon the contrary, there is absolutely no vocation upon earth which offers so many and splendid chances to the strongest and most capable men to be truly useful and helpful as the ministry does at the present hour. The truth of it is, especially under modern social conditions, the job is too big for the best and most talented men. It makes unprecedented demands upon men for the use of every ounce of energy, power and scholarship which they possess. Compared with the delicacy, the tact, the expenditure of nervous force, the range and scope of intellectual activity demanded, neither the law nor any other profession surpasses the requisition made upon him who, standing in a modern pulpit, would, in these times of feverish, restless turmoil, so deliver the message of hope and salvation as to cause the hurrying, pleasure-mad throngs to heed and obey. Truly, the task is a colossal one.

In its performance, no talent which the brightest and brainiest of men may possess will come amiss. No possible amount of knowledge which he may be able to amass and store away, concerning any branch of human interest or conduct, but can be brought to bear, sooner or later, upon his work.

The modern minister should zealously cultivate breadth, as well as depth of scholarship. He should seek to know what the representative men of his own times are thinking with reference to the problems of our own day. He should not be afraid of independent investigation of these problems, aided by a knowledge of what others have and are thinking and learning. He should accord to the "authorities" in the educational and scholastic worlds, the respect which they deserve, but refuse slavish and servile obedience to them, at the cost of his own individuality and convictions.

He should make of himself, the most forceful, convincing and logical speaker possible. It is a mistake to suppose that the days of public-speaking are over. So long as time shall last, and wherever the sons of men foregather, either in the marts of trade, in council-halls, or in religious assemblies, he who can express his thought lucidly, tersely and cogently, will not fail of a hearing, nor of power and influence.

He should be, and more than ever, must be, in this age of print and books, a writer, provided, of course, he aspires to the widest influence to which he is entitled. Here, in Norfolk, no pastor, possibly, reaches more than four or five hundred each Sabbath, with his voice, but on Monday morning, extracts from his sermon, published in the daily paper, will reach thirty or forty thousand, scattered through many states. Some difference there.

And, of course, he must be a great, big-hearted, kind hearted Christian man, above all. He must not faint, nor become weary under the burden of the old world's sin and sorrow. Unfailing optimism and hope eternal must be his, to see, behind the Shadow, the real Substance of things, and beyond Today's wreckage and failures, a brighter, happier, sweeter Tomorrow.

Henry Spencer Booth.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Rev. B. E. Turner, Professor of Practical Theology in the White Bible School of New York City, visited Elon Wednesday, spoke to the ministerial students that evening, and addressed the student body at chapel service Thursday morning.

Visitors to the College this week have been Dr. P. H. Flemng, High Point, N. C., who is building a fine residence in Burlington; Rev. J. C. Robinson and Mr. G. S. P. Holland, Suffolk, Va.; Mr. W. R. Roberson, Washington, N. C.; Mr. R. S. McCauley, Chapel Hill, N. C.; Mrs. L. M. Clymer and daughters, Greensboro, N. C.; and Mrs. S. W. Chandler and son, Virgilina, Va., who is at present on a visit to her parents, Dr. and Mrs. G. S. Watson.

Miss Flora Thompson should now be addressed at Richland, Ga., and the envelope should read Mrs. Troy Bishop. The change of name occurred Dec. 25, 1912, but knowledge of it reached here this week, and while we are late in expressing congratulations, we are thoroughly sincere and wish this happy pair every joy with long life.

Rev. L. I. Cox, Treasurer of the College, is to conduct a two-weeks meeting for Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga., and leaves for that place today, Monday. Bro. Cox made a great impression on our Southern brethren during his visit to them last fall. He would have gone a week earlier, but his wife's sickness prevented.

The Easter Season bids fair to be replete with good things. Friday evening will occur the Inter-Scholastic Declaimers' Contest, Saturday evening the Annual Psi-chelian Entertainment, and Monday evening the first installment of Freshman-Sophomore debates.

Prof. Campbell spent two days this week in Gastonia, N. C., leading a band there during a gala season. He has a wide reputation as a band director, the band he played with in Washington during the inauguration receiving special mention.

In death, as in life, Dr. J. J. Summerbell has demonstrated his love and abiding interest in Elon College. His presence and stirring appeal in the Graham (1888) Convention had much to do with the promulgation of this institution according to first President Long, and during all the intervening years he gave constant evidence of his untiring devotion to our interests, visiting the College many times and sending the Library many books of inestimable value. His most memorable visit occurred last December, when with such gentleness, yet convincingness he held up to view the weaknesses of Campbellism. His devotion receives a fitting close in the bequest to the College by his will, just published, in the sum of $1,500, subject to Mrs. Summerbell's approval. We thank God for a life and a devotion such as his.

Prof. N. F. Brannock broke up his old home school in Northern Alamance last Friday night, using as his theme How to Succeed.

THANKS.

Dear Brother Editor:

A few nights ago I answered a ring at my door bell and found the porch and steps full of people, who came trooping in, about thirty-five in number, members and friends of the Winchester Christian church, carrying sundry mysterious looking packages, which they deposited in the dining room.

After spending a couple of hours in a social way, they departed, leaving our larder full of good things to eat and our hearts filled with joy and gratitude for these good friends and this substantial expression of their friendship.

W. T. Walters joins me in heartfelt thanks to everyone who had a part in the donation.

HISTORY OF THE LADIES' AID SOCIETY OF BETHLEHEM CHURCH.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Church was organized in February, 1890, for the purpose of raising funds for the church, and to make the work more effectual. A Constitution and by-laws were adopted and the first meeting was held Feb. 16, 1890, with ten charter members.

Miss Addie Rippey, now Mrs. Shelton, was elected first president, and Mrs. Keren A. Pritchette, secretary.

The first work they did was to buy the pulpit chairs at a cost of $8.39. When our church tower was built we gave ten dollars towards it, and five on the bell. They gave $7.85 toward kalsomining walls of church, $6.98 on chandelier and part on organ.

From the best reports I can get we have paid $135.12 for missions. Since September, 1904, we have collected $229.55 by dues and subscription. We have paid out $254.47. Part of this was raised by subscription. We bought a new carpet for the floor in the year 1911 at a cost of $64.20, and through subscriptions and otherwise we papered and painted the walls and ceiling at a cost of $55.82.

The number of members increased since organization until now we have 51.

In December, Rev. J. W. Holt brought a picture of Rev. Alfred Iseley to our church, given by Mr. John Iseley of Burlington. It was put up in the church, and in February we decided to get three others, one of Rev. Albert G. Anderson, one of Rev. T. W. Strowd, and one of Rev. J. W. Holt.

Rev. A. Iseley and A. G. Anderson are deceased. They helped to establish and extend the influence of this church in its earlier years. They were both noble men and their memory is honored and revered. The others are still in the work, and the last named, Rev. J. W. Holt, is the present pastor. In behalf of the Ladies' Aid Society I wish to present the four above mentioned pictures to Bethlehem church. They each have a card showing the date and number of years of service.

Ida Simpson.

March 16, 1913.

Having a trip to Florida thrust upon him, great and good as it was, is not the only good fortune this writer has enjoyed. My people were not to be outdone by another; so they showered a good, substantial pounding upon us, such as an editor would have been glad to receive. A barrel of flour, a stand of lard, hams, old and new, a turkey, sugar, coffee, eggs, canned goods, potatoes, sausages, etc. Our pantry is full and our hearts are glad. God bless such a people, and as they have ministered to our material needs, may we, in a fuller and better way, minister to their spiritual needs and welfare.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Our young people of Suffolk, Va., under the leadership of that zealous Christian worker, Miss Mamie Holland, evidently means business in the matter of missions. Following is an account from Suffolk in The Virginian Pilot of Norfolk of a recent meeting:

—Among the speakers at Trinity College, Durham, N. C. for the commencement in June is Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary, known as the discoverer of the North Pole. By the way what has become of the other reputed discoverer, Doc. Cook?

—The Southern Baptists have decided to inaugurate a campaign to raise in three years, a million dollar loan fund over and above their regular gift to Home Missions. Their present loan fund is less than $100,000. The United Presbyterians have a church Loan Fund of $3,500,000, the United Methodists one of $1,500,000, the Disciples one of more than a million. Our Southern Christian Convention at its last session projected a Loan Fund which is growing some, but which could and should be readily increased to $100,000 by proper personal effort.

—Our Methodist brethren of the Western N. C. Conference were the latest in the field of Orphanage work, but they are forging ahead and making up lost time with a vengeance. During the past year the Orphanage, located at Winston-Salem received two timely and princely gifts, one of $10,000 and another of $5,000 from two interested and loyal laymen.

—Under date of March 11 Rev. W. T. Walters, Winchester, Va. writes "I have been laid up with La Grippe for two weeks, but am better now and hope to fill my appointment Sunday." Put it down that Bro. Walters has not had a genuine case or he would not have spelled it after that French fashion. The genuine article is spelled grip, and you will know it for all time to come when it gets you. We know.

—Rev. Martyn Summerbell, D. D. Lakemont, N. Y., under date of March 6th, writes this personal word of our late lamented brother, Dr. J. J. Summerbell:

"We have lost a great and good man. His service has been important and yet unrequited. He always gave, and far more freely than he received. He had a great heart and a great intellect. He had the courage of his convictions, and when he gave himself to any cause it was absolutely without reserves. We shall miss him in all our gatherings, from which he was never absent unless from causes beyond his control. I am very glad that the South had him for the recent course of lectures, for its memory of him will always be the sweeter for the experience."

—Rev. C. H. Rowland attended the Bible conference in Atlanta, Ga. last week. This heartless brother writes us from the conference "You just ought to be here. Good is not the word for it, but—Best. A great conference." As if we did not know we ought to be there, and as if an editor could leave his desk to go any where on earth where the great things are! But we are not envious and do love to hear of our brethren taking in the good, helpful and wholesome things of life.

—The late lamented Dr. J. J. Summerbell showed his deep interest in Elon College from its inception and ever manifested a sincere and genuine desire for its growth and development. President Harper in his Elon College notes this week points out evidence of this abiding concern on the part of this good man, and speaks lovingly of his friendship for the college. Dr. Summerbell with his amiable and devoted wife visited the college at a commencement some years ago at the risk then of his health, we remember, delivering a most able commencement address, and speaking to the students on more occasions than one. He gave something, also of his, means to the college. Stipulating in his will a desire for Elon to have from his estate $1,500 subject to his wife's approval further and fittingly shows his love for the college.

The following from The Burlington News March 12 will be familiar to Sun readers who know much of the history of "The White Pilgrim."

The death of Mrs. Will Boone a few weeks ago recalled to the mind of older people of this country a well known character in his day, Rev. Joseph Thomas, "The White Pilgrim."

Rev. Thomas was born in this county, (then Orange) near Hawfields, in 1791 and died in 1835. He was Christian minister who was what might be termed a traveling evangelist. He belonged to the old school of ministers and went all over county preaching day and night wherever he could get a crowd together. It is said that he was a strong preacher and always had a house full. He felt called upon to put off the regular clothes worn by others and wore white clothes, hence his name, "The White Pilgrim."

He went from this county to Virginia and afterwards went further north, and while doing his work as a preacher was taken with smallpox and died in New Jersey.

—Last Sunday, March 16, was a good day at Bethlehem, Alamance Co. A large congregation gathered at this strong and stalwart old church. The services were in charge of the pastor, Rev. J. W. Holt. Rev. C. C. Peel delivered a logical and forceful sermon at the eleven o'clock hour. Following this the Ladies' Aid Society through a chosen member Miss Simpson presented the church with three large, handsomely framed portraits, that of Rev. Albert Gallatin Anderson who died July 13, 1893 and who had been a beloved pastor of this church, that of Rev. T. W. Stowd, Chapel Hill, N. C. a former pastor and one who is deeply loved for his personal piety and consecration, and that of Rev. J. W. Holt, the present pastor than whom we doubt if any pastor, living or dead was ever more beloved or had greater weight and influence with this good and generous people. The Sun's editor was pleased to be present on this delightful occasion, hear the sermon, see the beautiful spirit manifested, observe the presentation, hear Bro. L. D. Rippey's fine and forceful address and enjoy the good fellowship of the happy occasion. Bro. Holt is doing a great work at Bethlehem.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The new administration of the United States does not impress one so much with its partizan bias as its moral quality. It seems to be a change from politics to righteous government. If this is a correct interpretation of the change, it answers one or two things: either that the new President is introducing new principles to be approved or rejected of the nation, or the American people have exalted Mr. Wilson to this high position as the exponent of principles already embedded in the civic conscience. If the latter is true, the future is more hopeful, because it means that moral principles are crystalizing the forty-eight States of the Republic.

The investigations among all sorts and sizes of grafters, the prosecution of all sorts and sizes of corporations; the conviction and imprisonment of men in high and low places show either a morbid spirit of faultfinding or a moral disgust of wrongdoing. If the latter, it means a gain to the moral tone of the nation and a demand for honesty in office and a just administration of public office, municipal and national.

Certainly it is desirable and essential to the welfare of the nation that a new order of statesmanship come into leadership. Personal ends should be banished from the minds of public servants. Elisha and his servant Gehazi are good examples of true and false men representing great interests. The Syrian Caphtan Naaman came from Damascus hoping to be cured of leprosy by the Lord's prophet. He brought gifts from king Benhadad to Elisha, who refused the presents but directed Naaman to dip himself seven times in Jordan. When healed he returned and insisted on the prophet to accept the gifts. He declined because he was not working for pay, but for the kingdom of God. But Gehazi followed Naaman and told him that his master would accept a talent of silver and a change of garments for two young men of the sons of the prophets. Naaman insisted and Gehazi accepted "two talents of silver and two changes of garments." But the leprosy of Naaman came unto Gehazi for this "graft," if one may so name it. If there is such a thing as financial leprosy, this nation has enough of it and a "leper colony" seems in order for those who play false with government and business for personal gain.

If this administration can raise the financial tone of the nation, and teach that public position is a public trust, tariffs and navies will be small questions in the equation of government. No one who has carefully read the world's history could wish for union of church and state; and no one concerned on the welfare of humanity could wish for the introduction of politics into religion; but there is large necessity and large opportunity for religion in politics. The sea must not get into the boat, but the sea will be all the more useful when the boat gets into the sea. When genuine religion enters politics, business, government, corporations, and recreations, then civil righteousness will tower above greed, graft, gross misbehavior. It looks now as if that day were dawning. God speed the noontide of such a day for this nation when citizenship will be so high that church membership will have to rise still higher.

VALEY LETTER.

We are having the mildest winter here we have had in many years. Farmers have hardly stopped for the winter, and we preachers have kept pounding away most of the time in revival meetings with very little hindrance from bad weather. This has been one of the busiest winters I have ever had in the work here. I have been constantly on the go, in revival meetings most of the time, and have kept up my regular appointments, preached more funerals, and did more other extra duties than ever before in the same length of time.

Since my last letter to The Sun I have held revival meetings at Beulah, Bethel and Joppa, resulting in one, six, and five conversions respectively. Most of these united with the respective churches. I have the meeting at Dry Run to hold yet, and then I suppose I shall be through with revival meetings for this year.

I have never worked harder nor enjoyed better health. I praise Him for strength to engage in active service.

It is time for us of the Va. Valley Central Conference to be thinking about, and preparing for our Young People's Convention which meets at Timber Ridge, Hampshire Co., W. Va., June 11-13, and our Annual Conference which will be entertained by the church at Winchester, Aug. 14-16. I think it is apparent to all in touch with the work that these meetings are getting better and better every year, and now let's make them so much better this year that we shall even surprise ourselves. Let us work, pay and pray to that end.

We are very much handicapped in the work here by a lack of ministers. Is there no one who can come and help us? I shall be glad to correspond with any wide-awake minister who may be inclined to look this way favorably.

A. W. Andes.

IN MEMORIAL.

Our Heavenly Father, in His wisdom and omnipotence, and doing all things well, has removed from our circle a dear friend and brother, Mr. P. E. Slade. His life was beautifully characterized by faithfulness and sincerity. He was noted for the performance of duties in his home, being a kind and loving husband and affectionate Father, ever ready to do whatever he findeth need be done within his church for the upbuilding of God's kingdom here upon earth, and the betterment of humanity in general.

His Christian character being such, that one need be with him only a very short while without becoming much impressed with his sincerity and faith in his Master.

Our friend has gone before us and we would not recall him for his sufferings during the last few months here were great and we know that he has risen to a higher and grander life. His influence will live on and on until the more perfect day.

We mourn our loss, but believing it to be his will that this sadness has come to our hearts, we bow in humble submission to Him who errs not.

Therefore be it resolved:

First—That in the death of this dear one we have lost a faithful member, and one whose interest was ever with us, for high and noble purposes.

Second—That we shall ever remember his loving kindness and sympathy toward us, and endeavor to imitate his noble virtues and pray that his mantle of good works may fall upon each one of us.

Third—That we sympathize with the dear family and while mingling our tears with theirs, we have a bright hope of seeing our dear one again.

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be sent the family, a copy be recorded in the Secretary's book of the Dendron Christian Church, a copy sent to the 1910 Bible class of the Christian Sunday School, and that copies be sent to the Christian Sun, Wakefield Enterprise and the Surry and Prince George Herald, for publication.

Committee:

Waverly S. Barrett,

E. T. Atkinson,

Joseph H. Barrett.

Dr. Ida Kahn, a Chinese woman who received her medical training at Ann Arbor, Mich., and is now doing splendid work for the relief of suffering women in China, says of the extent of the traffic in girls:

"Slavery exists in China and that to an alarming extent. So far as my observation goes, the girls of China furnish the victims, and the boys but very seldom. The rich people regard them as indispensable as so many pieces of furniture. Accordingly they furnish them to each daughter of the home in quantity and quality corresponding to the length of the family purse. The daughter carries them to her future home as part of her dowry. The middle classes use the slave girls because they cannot afford to have servants, and the poor people use them as a means of getting rich. Interested in knowing how many slaves there were around me in Hangkow I looked through one of the tenement houses immediately in our vicinity. The general entrance is rather imposing, and you see in front of you a wide alley. Then, turn to right or left, you see opening from this about five or six rows of little houses, with a narrow alley running between the several rows. On an average such a tenement place would contain two or three hundred residents. Taking one of these places at random, I made inquiries and found within between thirty and forty slave-girls. Just think of there being such a large percentage of slaves in even tenement houses."

—The average saloon in the United States costs the people $8,300, and for no good returns. If it pays $1,000 license some people call that a good investment; i. e., $1,000 against $8,300 along with the wreckage and death incident thereto.

Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor

This department under the direction of Young People's General Convention. Frequent news items from Sunday schools, organized classes, and C. E. Societies are desired. If you are interested in either or about to organize, address the department's editor:

CHARLES A. HINES, Editor and Cor. Secretary,

Greensboro, N. C.

THE BURLINGTON CONVENTION.

The next biennial session of the Young Peoples' General Convention will be held with the Christian church in Burlington. The date has not been definitely determined, but it will be April or early in May. The program committee is at work and a most attractive gathering will be planned. Further information will be given in this department from time to time, and the program will be printed as soon as it is ready.

It is hoped that Sunday school and Christian Endeavor societies will have the meeting in mind and begin planning for the same and choose their delegates early. Report blanks will be sent out, and it is desired that these be filled up and sent to the convention.

Steps will be taken at this convention to organize new departments of the Sunday school and plan more definite and aggressive work for the next two years.

We believe that the convention has done a vast deal of educational work and has been instrumental in making more efficient and better working Sunday schools and organized classes. The future of the work depends upon the amount of interest and energy that is shown in it. It is in the power of our people to make the Burlington convention either a failure or a tremendous success. Which shall it be?

THE FINANCIAL SIDE.

Many individuals and Sunday schools have been asked or have agreed to help the Young Peoples work financially and many of these have not responded. We do not think this is because of a lack of interest, but is due to neglect. We are calling attention to this, in order that all may have an opportunity to redeem themselves before the Burlington convention.

The finances of the convention are in far better shape than they were two years ago, but something like $100 or more will be needed to bring the organization up to the convention with a clean sheet.

Will you not redeem your pledge or respond to the call that has been made upon you by the executive committee? It is within the power of classes, societies, schools and individuals, by doing just a little, to make the road easy for the treasurer and committee. Will you not do your part?

C. E. EASTER LESSON.

Subject—"Vital Living," Scripture, II
-Cor. 4:8-18.

It is suggested that this be a sundisc meeting, but this may be impracticable in many places.

Have Easter songs, Easter decorations, Easter prayers, let everything be appropriate.

The leader's Task.

Let the leader first recall the great fact of the resurrection of Christ and point out that life emerged triumphant, having sloughed off death. So the believer's life must slough off the elements of death in the human heart if living is to be vital. What are these elements of death? Let the leader name several, such as anger, lust, envy, pride, self-seeking. No life dominated by such things can be vital. The seeds of death are in them. The vital life serves. Mention one or two instances; Livingstone is a good example. But how are we going to slough off death in the form of sin? Paul supplies the answer, "By the Spirit's power." The Spirit is life. If we believe in Him, trust Him, look to Him, He will fill us.

Let the members read several stanzas of a resurrection song in unison.

Object Talk.

Arrange beforehand with a member to give the object-talk, using an egg, a seed, and a branch of a shrub or tree. Let the speaker point out the fact that no one, looking at these objects, would ever expect them to change. Yet life is hidden within them. So in the body of men are hidden forces of life that will burst the tomb. Nobody expected Christ to rise again. But He did it, and proved that man may rise. Then let the speaker point out that life is for usefulness: the hen lives to serve; the seed promises harvests and food; the branch bears fruit. So must our lives be fruitful.

The Message of Easter.

Show that people for ages stood questioning the grave in vain. "If a man die, shall he live again." One Man came out of the grave; therefore all men may come out. This Man that came out says that all men shall rise again. He should know.

We do not live two lives, but one life; in other words, our lives go straight on through death. Christ was the very same person after death as He was before. What will this mean for the wicked? What will it mean for the good? Let the speaker describe the advantage of living a clean life of service here that we may enter the joy beyond.

"Easter is a great day, not of itself, but because of the fact which it witnessed. Its annual recurrence is well worth while. It sends us now, as it did Peter and John on the first Easter morn, to look into an empty tomb. We need at least annually to restudy the evidence of Christ's resurrection, especially when a great many religious teachers are trying to discredit it and to rob it of its divine significance."

"The message of Easter is further emphasized by divine direction, in that the successor of Judas must be 'a witness of Christ's resurrection.' Well did the Nazarine foresee that his rising from the dead would be the pivotal point in the future of his church. Not even second to 'Christ and him crucified' was the theme, 'Christ and him raised from the dead.'"

"Spring is but another name for hope. It is the promise-time of the year. And we all live by faith in these promises, hoping for their best and fullest fulfillment. It is the risen Christ who is in us the hope of glory, and in whose promises we have faith."

"Everything signifies life and freshness. So the resurrection of Christ brought life and immortality to light, substantiating his statement that he came that we might have life and that we might have it more abundantly."

AN EASTER POEM.

The pure white lilly raised its cup,
At Easter time, at Easter time;
The crocus to the sky looked up,
At happy Easter time.

"We'll hear the song of heaven!" they say,

"Its glory shines on us today;
O, may it shine on us always,
At holy Easter time!"

'Twas long, and long, and long ago,
That Easter time, that Easter time;
But, still the pure white lilies blow
At happy Easter time.

And still each little flower doth say,
 "Good Christians bless this holy day!
 For Christ is risen, the angels say,
 At blessed Easter time."

PLATFORM HELPS.

Some Suggestions for S. S. Lesson Mar.
 23.

Subject—Isaac and Rebekah.

Scripture.—Genesis 24:58-67.

Time.—B. C. 1857 (Ussher). About 2180 (Sayce).

Place.—Beersheba and vicinity, and Mesopotamia.

Persons.—Abraham, Isaac, and servant, Rebekah and her father, mother, brother, nurse and servants.

Golden Text.—In all thy ways acknowledge him, And he will direct thy path.—Prov. 3:6.

Leading Thought.—God leads those wishing to follow.

Customs, referred to in this lesson, that are more or less difficult from ours, are suggested as follows: A wife is sought from a distant but kindred people. A slave is trusted with important business and much property. The public fountain is a sort of social center for women. The most generous hospitality is given strangers without knowing even their names. Young people who have never seen each other, and who have no word to say about it, are, by proxy, engaged to be married.

We must not permit these interesting Orientalisms to divert us from the purpose of the lesson, which is to show how Abraham, believing in God and having faith in the promise of posterity, land and blessing, gave attention to getting for Isaac a wife who would be to him a helpmeet worthy his prophesied destiny.

After that test of faith (Lesson 11) Abraham dwelt, for a time, at Beersheba. Some time later he was at Hebron, where Sarah, at the age of 127 years, died. He buried her body in the Cave of Machpelah (near Hebron), purchased at that time as a family sepulcher. This was the only piece of real estate, of which we have record, that Abraham ever owned in the promised land. It is supposed that Abraham soon returned to Beersheba.

When Isaac was forty years old (Gen. 25:20) his father, following the customs of the country, sought for him a wife. The families interested were prominent, widely known politically and socially, and wealthy multimillionaires.

To-day we learn about the wedding in high life in ancient western Asia.

Present day Laws of Marriage in Palestine.

For the past forty years tens of thousands of Syrians have gone to America and the British Colonies. Young men who left their native land in their teens, returned at about the age of thirty expressly to look for wives among Syrian Christians, Jews, Moslems, or Druses, as their own sect may be. Ten years ago a young man in New York wanted a wife, and as he could not return to Syria, his father (late sheik of the town) chose a young woman and completed negotiations with her parents. Dr. Goshn-Howie a Protestant native missionary, was invited to the ceremony of betrothal. A priest also had a private conference with Mariam and satisfied himself she was willing to marry Amin. Ornaments and garments were then presented by the sheik on behalf of his son, and in due time steamship passage was secured for the young woman and she went to New York, where she was married according to the laws of the land, and both she and her husband have found in each other all they could ask or expect.—B. Syrius.

Question Review.

1. Whose love story have you been studying?
2. Who was Isaac? Where did he live?
3. Who was Rebekah? Where did she live?
4. Who, instead of Isaac, made the long journey from Beersheba to Haran to do the courting?
5. What did Eliezer take with him to help with the bride? (V. 53.)

Lesson Announcement.

Next Sunday will be Review. We have studied this quarter the first twenty-two chapters of Genesis—all of them stories of beginnings of history. Some of these stories belong in the record of the past so remote we have no definite chronology. The purpose of the lessons has not been to do with the world since the beginning. What He has done for the people in the past shows us that we may trust him to do for us now. We will study the Review next Sunday with this in mind.—Hageman.

CHANGING CHINA.

The notable event of the year in non-Christian lands was the establishment of the Chinese Republic. Mr. E. G. Morresay, the well-known newspaper correspondent, now a representative of the Chinese Government, wrote in a recently published article under his own signature: "The Chinese Republic is an accomplished fact." After a revolution characterized by a rapidity, peacefulness and moderation unique in the long history of the world, the oldest monarchy on earth has become the youngest republic."

"We are now living," wrote a missionary, "in the palmy days of the republic, with more or less definiteness on the qualifying objective. No longer are imperial edicts sent forth by royal will: President's orders take their place. No longer is the humble citizen required to kneel in the august presence of the county official. Officials are easier of access, put on fewer airs, are more democratic than heretofore. The former flag whose design was a dragon marked it as an emblem of an ancient race, and which could be used only by royal consent, has given place to a new flag of modern design in the five colors of the new republic a flag of the people to be freely used whenever and wherever they will.

The queue, that badge of submission to the rule of the Manchu, is coming off slowly, as many still cling to old customs students leading everywhere in the disposal of that useless appendage. Gradually China is coming into the family of modern nations.—Rev. A. W. Halsey, in Men and Missions.

Southern Railway and Livestock.

To give personal aid to live stock growers along its lines, the Southern Railway Company has secured the service of two experts in animal husbandry: Dr. Walter Sorrell, who will be stationed at Greensboro, N. C., and will work in Virginia, North and South Carolina! and Dr. C. D. Lowe, who will be stationed at Chattanooga, Tenn., and will work in Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, and Mississippi. They will be known as assistant live stock agents and will report to Mr. F. L. Ward, live stock agent, Atlanta, Ga.

Both Dr. Sorrell and Dr. Lowe have had years of practical experience in animal husbandry work. Both have been in the service of the United States government and are thoroughly conversant with conditions throughout the Southern States.

The duties of these men will be to advice farmers as to feeding, breeding, and caring for live stock under conditions that exist in the territory along the Southern Railway, to assist farmers in organizing live stock clubs and associations, to give practical demonstrations, and to be at the service of farmers without any cost to them, giving any information, rendering assistance, and cooperating in any manner that will tend to aid and encourage the raising of more and better live stock.

STOPPED THOSE PAINS

Copper Hill, Va.—Mrs. Ida Conner, of this place, says, "For years, I had a pain in my right side, and I was very sick with womanly troubles. I tried different doctors but could get no relief. I had given up all hope of ever getting well. I took Cardui, and it relieved the pain in my side, and now I feel like a new person. It is a wonderful medicine." Dear Children and Friends:

We are glad to have another letter from Uncle Millard who has been for a long time, a true and faithful friend to this department. I know the older cousins will read this letter with peculiar interest and send him our best wishes this his "84th birthday."

Last Sunday I was with the churches at Graham, through the kind invitation of their pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan. I found it even as he said—that I would have a "big" day's work—but it was indeed a pleasant one. I taught two Sunday school classes, preached two sermons, made two short talks in behalf of the Orphanage and was back-home by 6:30 P. M. It was a right busy time but I found a loyal people, ready to help the Orphanage, which is a part of the church. The collection and subscriptions amounted to $39.80.

The people are beginning to see the possibility of making this a great institution; I mean great in being able to meet the demands that are increasing so rapidly. There is no reason why we should not do this for it is the only one we have. It should not lack for any thing. And as I said some time ago, it is going to be done; the people are becoming interested and they are going to meet the demands; then why not now?

As soon as I can and have an opportunity I expect to visit as nearly all the churches as possible.

Cordially,

E. M. Carter, Supt.

Donations.

Rev. T. P. Clapp 2 hens; Mrs. B. M. Jones 2 sheets, tubing and trimming for bolster-cases, 2 towels and several copies of Christian Herald. H. C. Phelps, North Greece, N. Y. a box containing 38 pieces of underwear, 2 coats and 6 shirt waists. Mrs. E. T. Pierce, 4 sheets; Mrs. W. W. Staley, 2.00 for sheets; Mrs. W. B. Woodard collected articles and money to buy as follows: 20 china plates, three bowls, 1 pad lock and set of hinges, 8 yds. oil-cloth, 1 salt stand, 1 box lye; W. B. Woodard, 1 pad-lock and set of hinges; C. A. Hughes 1 doz. eggs; Mrs. Ben T. Holden, 1 coat suit, 1 shirt waist.

Many, many thanks, dear friends. This fits our table with nice white china plates but we lack yet cups and saucers. We are trying to get heavy goods that will not be easy to break.

For the Corner.

Portland, Mich., March 4, 1913.

Dear Children:

It has been a long, long, time since I have written anything for the "Corner." Nearly twenty-five years ago I began to write letters and rhymlets for those who were then members of the "band" and whose letters appeared in the "Corner," from week to week.

For a dozen years, or more, the names of many of the letter writers seemed quite familiar to me. But, during the last 8 or 10 years, have written so rarely, the names are not as familiar as they once were. Not, however, because I have lost interest in the children of to-day, but because I have been growing old, all these years, and like the children of twenty and twenty-five years ago have "dropt out" of the "Corner," and have lost their acquaintance.

This makes me feel very much as I did when, a few years ago, I visited my native town in Western New York, after an absence of nearly twenty years. My old playmatts were all gone and I was there a stranger in the home of my birth. You may well imagine how forcibly true these words of the Poet seemed to me:

"I've wandered to the village Tour: I've sat beneath the tree,

Upon the school house playground, which sheltered you and me;

But none were left to greet the Tour; and few were left to know

That played with us upon the green, some twenty years ago."

But it did not take me long to learn to love the new acquaintances I formed while there—and so, dear children, you have my love today, just as truly and just as fully as the dear ones of long ago. March 16 will be my 84th birthday. Perhaps this letter will find a place in the "Corner" about that time. With best wishes I am, as ever. Yours sincerely, Uncle Millard.

DIED.

Moffitt.

Mrs. Sallie Moffitt, wife of Alfred Moffitt, died March 1st in the 89th year of her age. She married Alfred Moffitt Sept. 10, 1846. They had five children, three sons and two daughters. Three of the children are still living. Mrs. W. B. Brooks and Mrs. J. C. Moffitt of Shiloh, and T. A. Moffitt of Ramseur. There are 20 grandchildren and 45 great grandchildren now living.

She made a profession of religion in 1843 and joined the Christian church at Shiloh. She thus spent 70 years of her life in the church, and her long record in Shiloh is without a stain. Her circle of acquaintance was large, and everybody spoke of her as a kind and excellent Christian woman. She leaves to her children and grand-children a good name which she had won by her many years of unselfish devotion to her family, her loyalty to her neighbors, and her love and faithfulness to God and her church.

Her remains were carried to Shiloh where she had held her membership so long, and a large congregation assembled to attend the funeral which was conducted by her pastor, assisted by Rev. H. A. Albright. Her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery, and her grave was covered with beautiful flowers.

Boykin.

Mrs. Martha Ann Boykin was born Oct. 31, 1825, and died Feb 21, 1913, aged 87 years, 3 months and 21 days. In her early years she became a member of Millfield Baptist church. Later she joined Barretts Christian church, where she remained a consistent member until death.

She was twice married. Her first husband, Mansfield Hines, was killed in the Civil War. Two sons of this marriage, John and Samuel Hines, are now living. Her last husband, John Boykin, died several years ago. One son of this marriage, Willie Boykin, is now living.

Just before she died she called her children around her and asked them to meet her in heaven, then repeated two stanzas of the hymn, "When I can read my title clear," and in a few minutes passed to the spirit land.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the presence of a large gathering of friends and the remains laid to rest in the family cemetery.

R. H. Peel.

Brown.

Youthy A. Albright Brown, second wife of Joshua Brown and sister of Rev. H. A. Albright, was born March 27, 1834, and died Feb. 24, 1913, in the 79th year of her age. She married Joshua Brown in May, 1876. She professed faith in Christ when young and joined the Christian church at Shiloh. After her marriage she moved her membership to Pleasant Grove Christian church. She had been a member of the Christian church for about 60 years. She lived a Christian life, piously and humbly discharging the many duties which fell to her lot. She was a kind friend, a good obliging neighbor. She filled the place of step-mother as few can fill it, and her step-children and grand children rise up to bless her good name. She died the death of a Christian, saying, "I am trusting in the Lord, I am ready; there is nothing in the way." Her last words were, "The Lord is with me."

She was buried at Pleasant Grove, and a large congregation attended her funeral.

Smith.

We mourn the loss by death of Mrs. Jettie A. Smith. She is missed in the home, she is missed in the church to which she was a devoted member for the past few years. She was a faithful member at Poplar Branch church before her transfer to Mt. Pleasant. She was reared near Greensboro, N. C.

God saw fit to call her from labor to reward. She is gone but not forgotten. She passed away after a few days' of illness with a smile on her face, on Dec. 26, 1912. Heartiest sympathy to the loved ones who mourn their loss.

Moring.

Deacon Willis Lane Moring passed from this life to the spirit land, at his home, Garner, N. C., March 9, 1913. Had he lived until March 13 he would have been 72 years old.

He was the son of James M. Moring and wife, Synthia, and was born in Chat-ham county near O'Kelly's Chapel. He

You Will Need Extra Power

WHEN you buy your engine, get it big enough to do more than your present work. If it's an IHC engine it will last a long time. Your farm work is bound to increase in volume. Very likely you can save yourself the price of another engine four or five years from now, by getting an engine a size larger than you need now.

Over-speeding and straining harm any engine. There is one correct speed for each IHC engine, a speed at which the parts balance and at which the engine runs without harmful vibration. When you buy an engine powerful enough to handle your work easily while running at the correct speed you add years to its life. Get your engine big enough and buy an

All parts are carefully, accurately ground and perfectly balanced. The best material obtainable is used. Combustion is perfect and the maximum power is secured.

Sizes—1 to 50-horse power. Styles—stationary, portable, skidded, vertical, horizontal, tank-cooled, hopper-cooled, air-cooled. Fuels—gas, gasoline, naphtha, kerosene, distillate or alcohol. Kerosene-gasoline tractors, 12 to 60-horse power.

professed faith in Christ in early life and united with said church. Seven of his brothers and sisters have passed over the river of death. Two, J. H. Moring and Mrs. W. G. Clements, remain upon the shores of time.

In the early part of the Civil War he volunteered in Company I, N. C. State Troops. He was in the first Manassas battle and remained in the army without coming home until the close of the war. He was taken prisoner a few months before the war closed and remained at Point Lookout till the surrender. He was a brave soldier.

He and Nancy Dillard were married Nov. 4, 1866. God gave them seven children: Alfonzo Lane, Ida Dareus, Dallie Belle, Emma N., Minnie F., Connie E., and Bessie Pearl. All are living but Connie E. His second marriage was to Sandal Utley.

He was buried at Hayes' Chapel by the Junior Order. Funeral by the writer. Notwithstanding the inclement weather people came from far and near to pay their last tribute of respect. It was upon many lips that the best man in Garner was gone. His was a death of triumph in the Christian faith.

May God comfort the children, brother, and sister left on earth.

PLEASANT SURPRISES.

On the 27th day of February the undersigned arrived by special invitation at the home of Mr. Wesley Davis near Pleasant Ridge Christian church. To our surprise, we found a number of the good ladies of Pleasant Ridge already there, and they had almost finished a beautiful memory quilt which they presented to us in token of their love and esteem. And they had a dinner that was a dinner—a great long table filled up with the best things, well prepared, which the Randolph farm produces. It was a good day, and we shall never forget the success of those good people in making us happy.

On the 5th day of the present month we were invited to the home of Mrs. T. V. Scott. This was a beautiful day and a happy occasion. The house was filled with the good women of Pleasant Ridge community, and they were making a beautiful memory quilt for us. Then, too, they served a sumptuous dinner, and everybody enjoyed it. We are doubting if there ever were gathered together a jollier or nobler band of women.

The recipients of these unexpected favors feel glad indeed to be so kindly remembered, and we wish to extend our heart-felt thanks to each one who conhe never recovered. He leaves a wife and three children, one son and two daughters, Willie O., Gracie L., and Lillian G., all of whom are now living in Dendron. He was at the time of his death a faithful member of the Christian church at Dendron, serving the church in the capacity of Deacon. His last words were expressive of peace in God and a willingness to depart and be at rest with Him. His cheerful, helpful life, his devotion to his wife and family, and kindness to everybody will long linger as a fragrant memory in the mind of all those who knew him. A great and good man is gone, and we shall miss him in the home, the church and the community. The great crowd that followed him to his last resting place and the most beautiful floral designs were tokens of his popularity and usefulness in the community in which he lived.

The funeral services were held in the Christian church at Wakefield, conducted by the writer and assisted by Revs. W. D. Harward, of Newport News, Va., W. C. Blair, pastor of Dendron Baptist church, and T. J. C. Heath, pastor of Dendron M. E. Church, and interment made in the Wakefield cemetery.

C. C. Jones.

Slade.

It is a matter of no little concern for a man to so live among those with whom he sojourns, that in his passing out from them, to leave this testimony upon their lips, "A good man has gone." As I write I have in mind our dear, departed, Bro. P. E. Slade, of Dendron, Va., the notice of whose death has already been given to Sun readers. Eulogies are not necessary and are often mimsleading, but when the life speaks for itself—and this is what tells—and when the impression made has been favorable, it is fitting that mention should be made of such impression. I would not be true to my conviction in the matter if I did not bear, in this public way, a word of testimony, in memory of our dear brother, and in the way of appreciation for his Christian fellowship and friendship. I was his pastor for several years and was with him often in his last illness. I regarded him as a sweet-spirited Christian gentleman, and a real friend. He bore his affliction with patience, and seems to have heard the voice of the Master in this, calling him to a life of closer fellowship with Him. His affliction was such as to make him feel that unless some power beyond man came to his help, he must soon go from us, but he did not seem to fear to go. We feel confident in saying that the church is in need of more laymen of his type and standard of piety. His influence will continue to live to commend the life that he lived upon earth. The Lord comfort the bereaved ones and keep them near to Himself.

W. D. Harward.

Lambeth.

Bettie Sue Lambeth, daughter of J. M. and Laura Lambeth, departed this life on February 23, 1913, at the early age of seventeen years and one month. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the home of her parents in Reidsville, N. C., and the remains placed in the church cemetery at Howard's Chapel.

Sister Bettie Sue was a good girl. She gave her heart to God, in August, 1906, at New Lebanon, and united with the Christian church at Howard's Chapel in October of the same year.

Her last words were, "I am trusting in Jesus." She leaves a father, mother, one sister, four brothers and many friends who mourn her departure.

The One in whom she trusted said: "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you."

Chrismon.

Zacharia Chrismon, son of George and Mary Chrismon, was born July 4, 1838, and died Feb. 23, 1913, being 74 years, 7 months and 19 days of age. He was married to Elizabeth Dillard about the year 1866. To this union were born four children, two sons and two daughters. He was married the second time to Mary L. Rumley in 1876. To this union were born seven children, four sons and three daughters, two of whom preceded him to the spirit world. He is survived by one sister, a wife, nine children, nineteen grand children and one great grand child.

He professed a hope in Christ and joined the church in early life, living a beautiful Christian life to the end. He was ever ready to lend a helping hand. In his death many have suffered loss.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES JOIN THE CLUB

That the superior quality of the pianos and the big saving in price effected by the Christian Sun Piano Club are being appreciated by Institutions as well as by individuals is shown by the fact that secular Schools, Sunday Schools and Churches are joining the Club in goodly numbers. The following letter from a school trustee emphasizes one of the many good reasons. He writes:—"The piano obtained through the Club is being used in the Musical Department of the School here and all are highly pleased with it. We feel that we saved from $75.00 to $125.00 by purchasing through the Club."

A Church official writes as follows—"I will say that the church is pleased with the Club plan. The piano is first class in material, workmanship and construction—fine tone, clear, soft and musical. It is an extra fine instrument for the price. The plan of payment is good, sound and satisfactory."

If you or your church, Sunday school or public school need a fine piano, by all means write for the Club's catalogue, prices and terms. Address the managers, Ludden & Bates, Christian Sun Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

SACRIFICIAL LOVE

BY MRS. FRANK A. BRECK

GETHESEMANE'S sorrow! Who knoweth
The depth of Christ's love as he goeth
Sin's sacrifice wholly to be?
What blackness and horror enfold him,
And woe that no mortal hath told him!
Bowed prone on his face—there behold him
In anguish, O mortal, for thee!

Oh, bitter the cup he is drinking
To-night in that garden, unshrinking!
My sins are a part of his pain!
I know not how much he is bearing,—
I know not the strength of Love's daring,—
But oh, 'tis for me he is caring,
My life everlasting to gain!

Humanity's guilt! How it grieves him!
His vision of God—ah, it leaves him—
So black is the mountain of sin!
Iniquity's woe he hath taken,
The depths of his being are shaken;
"My Father, why hast thou forsaken?"
Is wrung by his anguish within.

Breathe softly, O heart of creation;
Stoop, heaven, to behold this salvation,
That only God's love could have dreamed!
Shout, hills! if ye never have spoken;
Sing, stars of the morning! give token
That now is the power of sin broken,
And Christ hath the sinner redeemed!

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

THE GOD OF OUR FATHERS.

Our fathers trusted in thee: they trusted and thou didst deliver them.—Psa. 22:4.

Golden Text Sunday March 30.

As long as a nation trusts in God, or even in gods, it is safe. When a people cease to trust in God, or in their gods, calamity comes. Israel was always safe as long as the Israelites were obedient to the divine Will. The Greeks as a nation were great, and prosperous, and powerful as long as they were faithful to their gods. The Romans were strong and progressive and invincible as long as they looked to their deities to guide them. But when the day of doubt and skepticism came, each and all these peoples began to lose prestige and place and power. As soon as they began to trust in their wealth, their achievements, their own powers and resources then they began to go to pieces.

That which threatens this world is absorption in the affairs of the world. The greatest single danger to humanity is worship of humanity, belief in humanity, trusting to humanity. Neither the beauty of chariots, the strength of horses, nor the cunning of kings can save us. The day we forget God, or prove our indifference to Him, then our undoing and disintegration set in.

The people forgot God, and a flood of waters descended, submerging the world in waste and in ruin. The Sodomites became enamored of their riches, and God wiped them, with a flood of fire, from the face of His creation. Lot longed for riches, and his descendants are added to the long list of those who are forgotten. The worship of mammon is the curse of this world.

The lessons of the quarter have drawn the contrast very vividly for us. When men trusted in God they went on to higher ground. When men disparaged God, and went after the world, they began to lose ground, and go backwards to their own undoing.

Eve yielded to temptation and with Adam, was driven from place and privilege and purity, because they two doubted God's word and forgot His commandment.

Cain became a murderer because he lost or lacked reverence for God.

The flood of waters came and deluged the earth because "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil."

But Noah and his family were spared because "Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord."

Lot goes out in sorrow, poverty and loss of prestige because he sought riches above character and resources rather than God. Abraham goes on from power to privilege and wealth to great riches, because he trusted God, and made Him and His will supreme in all his own transactions.

The danger, the one supreme danger of the time in which we live is that we will become so preoccupied in the things of life that we will forget, or ignore, the meaning and the object of life. Life has a deeper meaning for us than the things we lay our hands upon. Back of all life, and permeating all life, is God. We cannot get the meaning of life unless we get an understanding of God. The only hope of knowing the world is to understand the Master of the world. Unless we rise above the world we get lost in the world. If we do not have fellowship with the Master of the world, the world will certainly master us. Man's only hope is his absolute trust in God.

SHALL WE AWAKE?

Our Christian churches of the Southern Christian Convention are enjoying (?) a full twenty years' slumber—Rip Van Winkle-like—on the subject of foreign missions. Something or somebody must wake us up, or are we going to sleep ourselves to death. We have already slept till our faithful dog is either dead, or too old to bark loud enough to disturb us; our erstwhile safe and sound fire piece, with which far distant game was sighted and frequently brought down, lies by our side unused till the rust wears it to fragments; and those who, years ago, had hopes of us have grown to maturity and do not recognize us. Brethren and beloved, we sleep. And how sweet, how delightful, how calm the sleep.

Not even the dream of China's perishing millions, no night-mare of India's distressing, dying multitudes, no sound of Africa's clamoring, crying, starving hosts disturb our infinite repose. We of the Christian church care about as much for the salvation of the pagan millions as we do for the elements of the Nebular Hypothesis, or the kinds of skins the beasts of the jungles wear. We do not care as much for "the heathen" as we do for tobacco, face-powder, tooth picks or chewing gum. We are at ease in Zion so far as the salvation of those beyond the seas is concerned.

I noticed in last Monday's paper that one church in Greensboro, the First Presbyterian, raised on Sunday, and the few days preceding, by a little tact and missionary zeal, $2,500 for foreign missions, the members of the Sunday school contributing $1,000. This was all in addition to the $4,000 given annually by this one congregation for foreign missions.

There is one congregation in Raleigh, that of the Second Baptist church, whose annual contribution to foreign missions, if I recall correctly, amounts to $2,500; and if we mistake not there are separate congregations in this State whose offerings for the foreign field totals each year from $4,000 to $5,000—a sum greater than that contributed by all the churches of the Southern Convention for this most noble and worthy of all church calls and causes.

Beloved, we of the Christian church sleep as to our duty in the matter of missions. And no one comes or tries to wake us up. Over our foreign mission cause may appropriately be erected a marble slab with the inscription "At Rest."

A PROPOSITION WORTH WHILE.

A Suggestion Concerning Rev. J. W. Wellons.

We have received a letter from Bro. R. A. Hyslop, Norfolk, Va., one of our successful business men, and a loyal layman, which is certainly worthy and to the point. I have shown the letter to "Uncle" Wellons and its contents pleased him exceedingly. He has given permission to publish it, and to accept what may be offered except that, in case shares of stock are presented him all income from the same will be willed to go, after his death, to helping establish and maintain a chair of theology in Elon College, a cause to which he is giving the last efforts of a long and worthy life. This letter is not only to stock holders in the Company, but to any and all who may see fit to contribute. Bro. Hyslop thinks he should say $50 each where his letter says $5.00, but the amount is left with the reader and contributor. But read the letter and act as esteem and your good will may dictate:

"My Dear Brother Atkinson:

"You will find my remittance enclosed for balance in stock subscribed for. I wish to ask you to do me a favor. I would like to have the stockholders of our Southern Christian Publishing House to think of Bro. J. W. Wellons. I read an article sometime ago in the Christian Sun from Bro. Wellons, in which he said it made his heart so glad to see the work going forward, and he wished that he were able to take some stock himself, but he was not able to do so now. I write to ask you what you think of the proposition for all the stockholders to make a present to Bro. Wellons of $5.00 worth of stock each in the Publishing Co? It would make his heart so glad and give him something in his old age to show him the appreciation of his life's work. No doubt he has some loved ones whom he would like to leave something to and you could arrange it so that he could get the interest on the money during his lifetime and his loved ones get the interest as long as it was a publishing house? I want you to think of this and take the matter up, or write and give me your views. It would be such a little from us and will mean so much to him. Please do me the kindness to let me have your views on this matter, but whatever we do we must do quickly, as his time is short.

"Yours, etc.,

"R. A. Hyslop."

Norfolk, Va.

(The Sun's editor will take pleasure in converting into stock any amount that may be sent, or transferring any shares that may be donated. How it would gladden this good man's heart, and help in a measure to compensate him for a long life of useful service in the Church if we could now make him part owner in an enterprise which he has desired so much and which is so near and dear to his heart—our own Southern Publishing House. What say you, brethren?)

CHURCH UNION.

It takes no prophet now to predict that, in a far off time to come, one of the chief glories of foreign missions will be their power and influence in bringing together the churches of our Lord and Christ into sympathetic union and co-operation. The separate sects could maintain their petty distinctions and creedal differences here where they had grown up and developed; but when they each begin to make known their large mission in lands where their Christ was not known, then danger comes, and difficulties arise which could not easily be overcome. If Christ was to be preached in pagan lands, and the gospel of love was to do its saving work, differences and distinctions which neither saved souls nor bettered the conditions of men, had to be done away. The pagan mind could grasp our Christ, but could not see the need of our creeds and schisms. And so the churches in their foreign mission work are coming together. Here is a striking and late example.

The Methodist, Presbyterian and Disciples of Christ churches at Nanking, China have united in training native ministers for missionary work. It is expected that this "union" school at Nanking will send out four hundred native Chinese preachers in the next ten years to preach the gospel to the one hundred million people in the four provinces under the scope of the Nanking mission station.

Each denomination participating is given an opportunity to teach its doctrines and terms to its own students as electives of the cause of study.

But, the Presbyterian missionary in the school teachers the Presbyterian confession of Faith to Methodist students, and the Methodist missionary teaches the Methodist Discipline to Presbyterian students, and so on. The school is teaching men to go out and represent and preach Christ to the people.

That which the churches would not do from choice and volition here they are driven to do by the logic of the situation and for Christ's and the heathen's sake in foreign lands. Thus foreign missions add another and a greater blessing to the long line of benefits already bestowed. Surely God is behind the foreign mission movement; and he who does not and will not see this is willfully ignorant or hopelessly blind.

A GLAD EASTER.

Last Sunday must have been a glad Easter, as it certainly was a good day, with our good people of Greensboro First church, Rev. H. E. Rountree, pastor.

When this church was dedicated some years ago, instead of the usual soliciting for funds to pay off and square up before the dedicatory service, a free will offering was made, without solicitation, and individuals assumed the responsibility of the indebtedness. This responsibility had been carried for quite a time, so pastor Rountree and his band of faithfuls decided to lift this responsibility for good and all last Sunday. "Idem fit"—the term the Romans employed in saying "The same became done." Of this glad and good event The Greensboro Daily News for Monday March 24th thus speaks:

"Services at the Christian church were made memorable by the raising of the sum of $600.00, which will pay every cent of indebtedness the church has in every way. About twenty minutes was given to this after the opening exercises and the amount was subscribed rapidly. Of the amount the Ladies' Aid society gave $100.00.

We join our congratulations, with those of other friends, upon this glad consummation of a perplexing problem. There is no more loyal band of active and devoted workers than those of Greensboro First church, and we rejoice in the achievement which their energies well merit.

SMASHING PRECEDENTS.

Precedents may be good, and they may be bad; but from reports sent out from Washington President Wilson evidently thinks they are things to be broken.

From the capital went the news on March 22 that President Wilson, inaugurated now nineteen days, has broken sixteen precedents. Some of them were important. First went the inaugural ball, money changers and all. Then the "Favorite White House barber" was dismissed; the President shaves himself. Then the announcement that no office seekers would be received, till called for. Sunday came and it was learned that the President went to church to worship, not to be seen, and if the crowds went to see him they would not do so—if he saw them first. Hot suppers Sunday nights at the White House have been abolished, and cold suppers are served in the old fashioned way, with half day off on Sunday for the cooks. Then the bi-weekly cabinet meetings were abolished, and the cabinet is to meet when there is something for the cabinet to do.

The President declined the invitation to join the Chevy Chase Club. (Awful!)

The White House is a closed shop to all business from 12 o'clock Saturday night till Monday A. M.

All sorts of intoxicating drinks have been tabooed at the White House, and the "best brands" and all the rest are put on the retired list.

These are a few of the sixteen precedents that the papers say the President has so far broken. If others are to be of the class mentioned we rise to suggest that our Chief Executive keep a-smashing.

A DISGRACE TO HIS FATHER.

Another great family name has gone down beneath the shadows, all on account of graft, the gluttony and the greed for easy gain. Did you notice in the papers last Monday that "Julian Hawthorne of Boston, Mass., was on his way to the Federal Prison at Atlanta, Ga., to serve sentence"? This is a name to conjure with in American letters. An illustrious father made the name a household word in the English speaking world. And this son wielded no dull pen in literary flourish and finish, and his name was ranking well in the world of letters.

But he wanted to make money too fast and too easily. He promoted a land scheme and raked in a million or so. But he overstepped. We received many of his urgent and well written letters advising, by all means, that we enter his project with a few spare dollars.

It was a monster and a monumental fraud. And Julian Hawthorne is serving time in a Federal prison. Be sure your sins will find you out.

—All appeals for Floyd Allen and his nephew, Claude Swanson Allen having failed, they are to die in the electric chair next Friday for "shooting up" Hillsville court house a year ago. The way of the transgressor is hard.

FALSE IDEAS NEED CHALLENGE.

Reprinted from the Outlook.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," said Solomon. The new Paidology says: "Let the child grow up in his own way, recapitulating the epochs of race developing in his conduct, and when he is a man he will be a good one." The author of "Who Broke the Window?" published in the Outlook of January 11, is a sincere apostle of this most recent of the sciences.

It is in this article held to be inconvenient to have boys break windows, but not bad for them to do so. "If it were not that we were told so, we might suppose that the boy broke the window, not because he was bad, but because he was a boy; and that the other did not break the window, not because he was good, but because he was something less than boy."  "All that we wish to point out is that inconvenience caused adults should not be regarded as proof positive of badness in the boy who causes it."  "The balance is happily struck by the fact that the youthful human creature applies the same sort of standards, and declares that any adult who, by insisting on washing hands and face, or some degree of quiet in the same house, or promptness in going to school, interferes with the comfort and pleasure of the youthful population, is a 'bad old thing.' Of course if the standard is right in the one case, it is right in the other."

The reason, so this writer contends, for forcing adults to give evidence against other adults in the interest of good government and not requiring or expecting it from boys for the same purpose, is that the adult citizen is under an authority that is a group authority, whereas "the authority exercised by the teacher is not a group authority at all." Can there be imagined a more specious sort of special pleading than this? Whence does the teacher derive his authority to teach and govern a school and to protect the life of its pupils and the property rights involved in the buildings and equipment of the school? From the School Board, of course. And whence does the School Board derive its authority? From the State Legislature, and the Legislature from the people, and yet we are complacently informed that the teacher's authority is "not group authority at all." The teacher's authority is as much a group authority as is that of the government of the States, the judge of the court, or legislator in either of our bicameral legislative bodies.

But we are further informed that boys are not to give evidence against each other in the interest of good government or the protection of property, because the authority "does not emanate from them, and the boys know very well that it does not"  And "to require of them an obedience to the authority of the teacher that involves a renouncing of his allegiance to the group of which he is a member, to subordinate his relations with his schoolmates to commands of the teacher, is not to prepare him for good citizenship, but to weaken those very ties which hold together the structure of society and render good citizenship possible." May a kind of Providence deliver us from the consequences of such teaching! The teacher is to be subordinate to the commands of the group of which the boys are members! Parents cannot control their children, because to do so would be to come into conflict with the group-spirit of the youthful human creature and unprepare them for citizenship! The State must not antagonize the group-spirit of the boys, because that would be sure to disqualify them to be citizens later! So the wise thing to do would be to turn our homes, our schools, our churches, and our civil government over to the boys, because admittedly we must give the next generation the very best citizens possible, and in that way we would most assuredly accomplish that beneficent and benign end! Solomon was mistaken when he thought parents should train up their children, for we now see that the process should be reversed and in this enlightened day children should train up their parents.

Greece in her balmy days of exalting the individual never went this length in her theory or practice, and no nation can go it and long maintain itself. The great value of Greek history to the modern world is to teach us the futility of ultra-individualism, and at the fount of Greek history the modern science of Paidology needs to drink long and often. In the light of her experience in this respect, its teachings will certainly need serious revision and a more guarded re-statement. It is all but universally conceded that the inherent weakness of our time is that children do not know how to obey authority. "The child" who has not learned to obey has been deprived of one of the best parts of his heritage. Unless he has learned in infancy to restrain himself for no other reason than because he is ordered to do so by superior wisdom, he remains a wild, uncivilized force, a menace to the community. Such menaces are all about us today. Better the harsh military discipline of Germany, requiring of every young man two or three of his most precious years for military service, better that, than a generation which resents all authority and confuses liberty with anarchy."

But the modern Paidologist continues, charging up the deplorable status of affairs to evolution or rather to what he styles recapitulation in these words: "That idea of group solidarity is more than an idea. It is an ideal. It is generally agreed that every individual repeats in his own life roughly the chief stages in the history of the race. As his body before birth passes through in terse form the various periods of biological evolution, so his mind, after birth, passes through the various periods of racial evolution." To which we would ask: Did the mind always go through these stages, or did it in the Patriarchal Period stop with the Clique, in the Tribal Period with Chivalry, in the Revolutionary Period with Self-Assertion, in the Republic Period with Co-operation? And what ever caused it to advance from one epoch to the other except the authority of adults, or did the adults in the Race Epoch refuse to submit to the boy leadership and so delay the Republic Period in the world's history till comparatively recent years? There is as much reason in "recapitulation" as taught by Paidology as in evolution as it is understood by this same science. If the boy mind could not have passed from one epoch to another till the race had advanced to the corresponding epoch, then there is nothing sacred about this recapitulation that this science pleads for and depends upon, and as racial development has always forced the boy and the recalcitrant adult as well to accept its standard, it must continue to do so in the interest of the boy and the race. Evolution was never so misunderstood as these new Paidologists misunderstand it.

We have adults who to protect themselves from unlawful conduct form cliques and gangs. The law deals with them summarily, and with happiness from all but the gang involved. Boys must be taught that they are to respect the rights, persons, and property of others, or pay the penalty for not doing so, and that it is their duty to assist the constituted authority in bringing these ends about. And in insisting that this is the duty of boys we shall show no disrespect to the boys themselves nor to their ideals. And it should ever be made plain to boys and their apologizers and in the new Paidologists, that false ideas need to be challenged and that that system of government, which neglects this primary duty to its immature members, whether of the home, the school, or the state, is in this neglect sowing the seeds of its own undoing.

THE ATLANTA BIBLE CONFERENCE.

It was my good fortune to attend the Bible Conference at Atlanta Ga. March 7-16, 1913. We felt that the "lilies had fallen to us in pleasant places." The congregations were very large, and the speakers were of the best. The meetings were held in the Broughton Tabernacle, and there were seven services each day, and each service lasted one hour. It would be a good thing if some of our people could learn to stay for long preaching.

There ought to be provision made for every preacher to attend at least one Bible Conference each year. It would be good for the churches to "pound" their pastors with a purse, and let them attend a Bible Conference. I trust our good editor will ask for just such poundings for all of our preachers. Our trip was made possible by the kindness of a friend, who was not even a member of our church. Such friends are above rubies.

The pastor of the M. E. church at this place Rev. C. E. Blankinship attended, and was a congenial companion. We met our relatives Bro. J. Beale, and Rev. J. Lee Johnson, his brother, from Cardenas, N. C. It is such a pity that we have so few laymen like J. Beals Johnson who are willing to give the time to attend such meetings. Another cousin we met was Mr. E. B. Atkinson, East Point, Ga., whom we had not seen for fifteen years. He is the oldest brother of our editor. We went out to his home and took breakfast with his family.

The Conference was great, and its influence was far-reaching. There seemed to be holy atmosphere, and the Spirit seemed to possess both the speaker and the people. [Several times during the Conference there were those who praised the Lord aloud, and if we had been in the country, we would have called it shouting. When we left, it seemed that we had just closed a revival, every body was happy on the way.

We should like to give the names of all the speakers, and tell something of their work, but this paper is already too long. All the speakers were the best that could be had. Among the number were Drs. G. Campbell, Morgan and Len. G. Broughton, of London, England, Moffat of Africa, and from this country, Drs. Vantee, Sampey, Wedderspoon, Moody and others. It is said to have been the strongest platform the Conference has ever had.

It is our purpose to tell some things we heard in another paper. We would like to tell how we feel about the conference, but when we write it down it does not look like we feel, and we feel like stopping.

LARGE GIFTS NEEDED.

The Christians as a people are not a large denomination but the various departments of our work are as vital as, if not more so than those of the larger denominations. Each of their departments has many supporters but ours have a smaller number necessarily. The department of missions in the Christian church is a most vital concern. I think it is generally agreed among the leaders of thought among us that unless we become a distinctly missionary people our purpose and mission in the world will be distinctly crippled. We have no greater need in the department of missions in my judgment than for the leading Christian men and women of large means in our church to popularize missions among us by making large gifts to that cause. When our men and women of the large means will make large gifts to our missions that will be the stepping stone to larger things by those of less ability financially. The other denominations are constantly receiving gifts and bequests of large amounts and their boards can plan for larger things from that source. Our missions are worthy of large things from our generous hearted friends of means and I appeal to all such to give earnest consideration and prayer to this vital matter. Brethren, give until you feel it as many of us with smaller means have done. We have many who can give thousands and ten of thousands easily and make but little sacrifice in doing it, and will be richer spiritually, and will have laid up true riches in heaven.

Our missionaries are making sacrifices. They never speak of sacrifices but they are making larger sacrifices in a dozen ways that our brethren generally do not realize, to make our work a success. I know all our foreign missionaries personally and as member of the Mission Board I know some of the inner secrets of the missionary life. Your missionaries are true men and women. It is not for them personally but for our work as a denomination that I plead and appeal to our brethren whom God has given ability to accumulate money to make large gifts to our work. Some cannot give thousands but they can give hundreds. Will you do it now in this special time of need? Will you give it now when the future policy if our mission is being decided? Will you give it now and cheer our missionaries on the fields? Will you do it now in this foreign mission period when the thought and prayer of our brotherhood are centered on that work? Will you do it now at this Easter time when our Lord sacrificed so much for you? Will you do it now for Christ's sake and in his Name?

Our mission work can never be carried on and developed by an annual offering of a few dollars from each church, and often with little or no forethought or preparation. These church offerings must be supplemented by large personal gifts and many of them. There are some in almost every church who ought to give ten times as much as the entire apportionment for their entire church. We need to remember that it is "Not how much of my money will I give to God but how much of God's money will I keep for myself;" and that other motto which was the motto of him whose anniversary we celebrated today, David Livingstone's, "I will place no value on anything I have or may possess except in relation to the kingdom of Christ. Will you dear readers make a supplemental personal gift to our mission cause?

Chapman—Shifflett.

Mr. Claude Chapman and Miss Virgie Mabel Shifflett were married by the writer Jan. 28, 1913 at the home of the bride near Linville. It was a very pretty little home wedding witnessed only by the families and intimate friends of the contracting parties. The best wishes of their many friends go with them through their married life.

—We want the young women in Elon College to challenge the young men to a public debate; and then we will see who's who and why. Four young women from the Psiphelian Literary Society of the College held an open debate at the annual entertainment Saturday evening before Easter, and if we have ever heard at the college a more lively, interesting, able, eloquent and logical discussion then we have forgotten it. We have a sly notion that those same four young women would defeat, thoroughly and completely, any four young men that the college could put out, and it would not make any difference either if the women did not have the last word. The college has restricted the young women to reading essays; but as a debater the sisters are superb and invincible. If our college boys don't want the severest drubbing they have ever experienced in public they would better not send, or accept, a challenge to debate with the sisters.

DR. STALEY'S LETTER.

All of the readers of The Christian Sun who have been readers for any length of time will agree, doubtless, that the Sun would lose much of its lustre were it not for those highly instructive as well as interesting weekly letters from Suffolk, which appear with such clock-like precision and regularity. To me, the Sun would look quite unnatural surely without the Suffolk letter. Just how so good, wise, and careful a writer as Dr. Staley, could be induced to sign his name to the letter appearing in the issue of Feb. 19th., accredited to Suffolk is to this New England scribe a mystery.

I can imagine him of course, on a bright sun-shiny day, giving promises of an early fishing trip, so far losing himself as to permit him to dictate almost anything while giving his mind to enticing the finny tribe to try his bait; but it seems a little too much to think he would sign his name to the letter without waking up.

Now what do you suppose he means—but there; he don't mean it! You can't make me believe he does—by "the high standard of this generation?" You do not suppose Dr. Staley would call this a "high standard" generation when our industries are so operated and managed commercial actions are wholly mammonized do you? When our great productive that the average skilled mechanic gets barely more than one-sixth of the products of his toil? Especially important is it for some one to come to the rescue lest some of the Sun's readers think that Dr. Staley really meant to say those things, when the only reasonable inference is that he was dreaming of fish at the time, and sort of unconsciously gave us a fish story. Census Bulletin No. 150 gives the following figures: $2471.00 as the average product each skilled mechanic, with $437.00 average annual share.

If you will come with me some day, I will show you where two families live(?) in a single room, where the children have never known what it was to have sufficient food for the growing demands for their little bodies. I can take you to places where scores of children exist—I dare not say live—afflicted at present with, or forever victims of rickets, or rickets. This disease as every well informed physician knows, is due chiefly to mal-nutrition. How can they be well fed, when the family income does not rise above $8 to $9 per week with father and mother both working? With milk selling from 9 cents to 14 a quart, in proportion to quality and purity; and eggs that are fit to eat at 65 cents a dozen, as they were a part of the time this winter; and meats so high that only a daring aeronaut need attempt to catch the cow as she goes jumping over the moon; with coal at $15 a ton—this is the price the very poor who live in single rooms must pay;—with the land-lord expecting from eight to ten per cent on his investment in disease breeding tenements; with the priest holding the grieving family up to the tune of whether their class station in life seems to entitle them in the way of the particular mass that shall be mumbled over the dead body for a price, all of these costly luxuries (?) out of $8 or $9 per.

It seems foolish of course to say anything further in defense of good Dr. Staley, for we all know he did not mean to say what he seems to have said. He, the friend of education! He, a former college president! He, one of Elon College's strongest supporters at the present time! But, lest some beast of prey from the judge of Twentieth-century officialdom should pounce upon this Suffolk Letter in support of some of his hell-born schemes to rob the poor of their children to gratify his own savage hunger, it seems just as well to notice these things and assign a reason therefor.

Now you see Dr. Staley could not say what he seems to, regarding education. Does it sound like the sound logic which may always be reasonably expected from Dr. Staley to say: "many schools are no better than the mills. The rooms are more crowded and often the atmosphere is no better than the atmosphere in the mills. In fact many of the teachers are incompetents, having crammed enough to pass the examination, but more interested in parties and cards than the real welfare of the children." Do you suppose Dr. Staley could ever be induced to call that a "high standard?" Well, those who know him would never accuse him of it, you may depend on that. Then read a little further: "As to compulsory education it is a misnomer." When some of us came to this point, and noted his clear reasoning by comparing it to "compulsory religion," we felt that the fish had slipped off the hook and our good friend had reeled in his line and was determined to forget the fish for the present, and really begin to think of what he was going to say about this matter that his tongue—or pen—had been mechanically talking about. But a fish just then must have leaped out of the water causing him to lapse again; for he says: "Rich people have as much difficulty in educating their children as poor parents. Advantages do not all lie in the path of prosperity. We live in a world of fair average." See he breaks off? "Compulsory education a misnomer." That sounds like our friend. It is a misnomer. Of course you can't compel anyone to be educated. But there when he adds the above quotation about rich people having as much difficulty educating their children as the poor, we know he has lapsed. The term "compulsory education" should be changed to read "compulsory opportunity for education." What of opportunity has a child for education who is kept at work in sweatshop for twelve or more hours out of the twenty four, and who for lack of nutritious food has no strength to bring to his task of acquiring an education? Lincoln and Garfield were not sweatshop children, nor yet were they employed in a factory rising a degree or two above the so-called sweatshop class. They were reared in the open. They were given rich bodies, though they were poor in purse. Were it not for the so-called "compulsory education," large enactments requiring the door of the school room to be kept open to the poor, a denser ignorance would inevitably prevail among the proletariat of our nation than now exists. The rich surely do suffer some things as a result of their cupidity, and are to be pitied in consequence. But we would do well perhaps if we refrain from expressing our sympathy in the hope that they exchange places with the poor, but our sympathy fails of appreciation at the hands of those in whose behalf it is expressed. The rich are not clamoring to become poor because of the pitiable condition which their riches impose.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

By common consent the best Easter Season of our history has just closed. Every exercise was replete with the joyous success of the resurrection scene. Many friends came, and all of them were welcomed, and with pleasure would individual mention be made of them, but we have not the space allotted for that pleasing purpose.

The Declaimers' Contest, the third of the series, for the representatives of the N. C. High Schools on good Friday evening was a grand success. Twenty young men and one young lady from as many forward-looking high schools participated and in the preliminary contest and also in the final contest acquitted themselves with exceeding good credit. Mr. E. S. Booth, of East Durham, won the medal, in the estimation of Profs. Lawrence, Brannock, and Wicker, his subject being Concentration in the United States.

The Psiphelian Entertainment on Saturday evening was fully up to the standard of their best programs and very creditable to them and to the College. Misses Pattie Preston and Lillian Johnson rendered interesting essays. Misses Beatrice and Gertrude Mason played beautifully on the piano. Misses Grace Rollings and Annie Bagwell sang inspiringly, while Misses Minnie Riedel and Pearl Jones as defenders of the value of woman's education to society won in the debate over Misses Lillie Dalrymple and Myrtie Lawrence, who thought man's legislation of more avail in human progress. Misses Viola Rollings presided throughout and welcomed the audience in most appropriate words and with perfect poise, while Miss Vera Gay was a secretary that needed not to be ashamed.

The Sunday services were full of the Easter spirit. The Sunday school was large and delightful. The preaching and communion services were tender and uplifting, while the Christian Endeavor meeting at night, which had as its theme The Vital Life, was a fitting conclusion to a day spent in sacred associations and in solemn worship.

The final event of the season was the first annual debate between the representatives of the Freshman and Sophomore classes. The query was as to the need of the new party. The Freshmen upheld the affirmative and were represented by Mr. W. D. Loy and Mr. R. L. Brown. The Sophomores championed successfully in the minds of the judges the negative and were represented by Messrs. W. C. Purcell and O. D. Poythress. It was a good debate and spoke well for these two classes. Mr. W. C. Morgan as president made an excellent welcome address and presided with becoming grace, while Mr. J. C. Joyner was secretary.

We are glad to announce that Mrs. Isabella F. V. Summerbell, widow of Dr. J. J. Summerbell, to whose decision the matter of paying the bequest left the College by Dr. Summerbell, has written that it is her full intention to pay the same, because she is as interested in Elon as her distinguished husband was. Mrs. Summerbell gives but another evidence in this generous act of the fine spirit that controls her life and of her deep concern in this institution's welfare. We feel grateful, and we feel humble.

CRUMBS.

—A great many girls who have decided that the Young Womans' Christian Association is too small and saintly affair for them to take up time with may now be induced to revise their opinion since Miss Jessie Wilson, second daughter of President Woodrow Wilson, is a devoted Christian Association worker and is the author of an article, on this organization, which is to appear in one of the large magazines in April. It is wonderful how really true and great folks go along and do with pride the very things which the little and narrow minded folks look upon with scorn and contempt.

—The great and the near—great in Washington are having the time of their lives in trying to put their fingers upon this man Wilson whom we have made President. He gave the society seekers a jolt, a jolt and a jar all in one on Easter Sunday, when, instead of joining the group of those who were displaying their new bonnets and scanning each other's latest outfit at a fashionable city church, the President and his family slipped away and worshiped quietly and unostentatiously away out from the capitol at Eastern Presbyterian church. Washington "society" is mad some, and a fashionable club or so with scrupulous social ambitious are strutting, gobble like, in high dudgeon. All of which is a very great pity.

Columbus Letter.

Our Rose Hill work is moving slowly, but steadily onward. Every enterprise of the work is encouraging. The attendance at all sermons for the past few months has been very good, considering the great amount of sickness we have had among our people and the inclement weather.

Our Sunday school for this past quarter has been especially encouraging. The attendance has been better than I have ever seen it, and it is very gratifying to see so much interest manifested in such a worthy cause.

Both our Ladies' Aid Society and Christian Endeavor Society are doing some very effective work. I don't see how any church could well get along without these two auxiliaries, for both of these enterprises are worth while and every church would do well to have them.

The writer is now delivering a series of five sermons on the "Spiritual Trinities" the subjects are as follows 1. The threefold cord of doctrines. "Incarnation, threefold cord of doctrines. "Incarnation, Attonement, the Holy Spirit." (2) The threefold cord of virtues: "Faith, Hope and Love." (3) The threefold cord of institutions: "The Home, the Church, the School." (4) The threefold cord of life's meanings: "A probation, an Education, a mission." (5) The threefold duty of the Christian: To glorify God. To perfect character, to improve the World." The last of the series will be delivered next Sunday March 23rd.

A revival is now in progress at the North Highland Christian church, and fine interest is being manifested. From what I have been able to learn the work at this point is making commendable progress under the pastorate of Bro. F. B. Young, and we rejoice with him.

We are planning to hold a revival at the Rose Hill church some time during the month of April and we are hoping and praying that the church will be much revived and many souls born into the kingdom of God. To be a soul winner for Christ should be the chief motive of every Christian, but so few of them ever put forth any effort at all to win another for Christ. I believe God is holding

NOTES ON C. E. TOPIC MARCH 30. Mission Work at Home and Abroad. III. Education. Acts 18:7-11.

The missionary has been the pioneer of education. This is true whether we refer to home or foreign missions. The minister who followed the trend of settlers from the East to the West of our country were usually both preachers and school teachers. Without the church, there would not have been the advance in school systems in America there has been. In many cases, the little church has been the place where children were taught their abcs. In the writer's own time he has seen classes of children learning the letters and being taught how to spell in the primary classes.

How often in the country do we see school houses and churches on the same lot. In the early days these were under the same direction and often the minister taught the school in the week. It is sometimes the case even now. These schools and churches indicate what may be seen at any time upon the foreign field. The minister is both a preacher and a teacher. Into ignorance and sin he carries learning and Christ. The school opens the way to the hearts of children and men, as well.

Dr. Duff said: "If in India you only impart ordinary knowledge, you thereby demolish what by its people is regarded as sacred. Every branch of sound general knowledge which you inculcate becomes the destroyer of some corresponding part in the Hindu system."

When Mrs. Caldwell began her girls' school in South India, the people exclaimed, "From the beginning of the world it has never been known that a woman could read." Mission schools have done more than any other agency to break the heathen shackles from the soul of women.

China is just now throwing off its ancient system of education and adopting western methods. There is great need for Christian teachers in that land to lead them not only into the light of literary knowledge but into the knowledge of Christ that leads unto the perfect day.

All the expenses of many a missionary college could be met by endowment that would be enough only for a single professorship in an American institution; and money given for buildings will accomplish five to ten times as much in mission fields as it will do here.

Macaulay says: "No Hindu who has received an English education ever remains sincerely attached to his religion. It is my firm belief that if our plans of education are followed up, there will not be a single idolater among the respectable classes in Bengal thirty years hence." This result of missionary education foreseen by Macaulay, has been witnessed in unnumbered cases.

Some statistics, and their meaning: on foreign fields there are 86 mission colleges and universities, with 8,628 students; 522 theological schools and training-classes, with 12,761 students; 1,714 boarding schools and high schools, with 166,447 students; 292 industrial schools, with 16,292 pupils; 30,185 elementary and village schools, with 1,290,357 pupils; and 115 kindergartens, with 5,597 pupils. What an enormous aggregate of good accomplished!

EXPRESSING APPRECIATION OF TEACHER.

One of the most delightful Philathea classes in Boston is that connected with Tremont Temple, of which Mrs. Minnie Wilkinson is the teacher. The class is much interested in missions, and once a year holds a mission social and mission box opening. When the time comes to send out the notices for this mission box opening, it occurred to several of the girls that it would be a delightful idea to work up a class Rally Day on the Sunday before the mission social, as a surprise to Mrs. Wilkinson. So with each missionary notice another notice was sent, urging every member to be present on the appointed Sunday, and to come with a special greeting for Mrs. Wilkinson. The class took to the idea at once, and the members took great pains to let nothing interfere with their attendances on that day. About one hundred gathered in the classroom. "When I realized," said Mrs. Wilkinson, "that this surprise really was arranged as a sort of testimonial of affection and encouragement to me, it was one of the happiest experiences of my life, and the girls seemed to enjoy it as much as I did. We had a delightful session that day, and the mission social that followed on Monday evening was one of the best we have ever had. It made me wish that I could urge every such class to get up a surprise rally for their teacher once in a while."

REVIEW LESSON.

Can This not Be Made Interesting Instead of Dry?

Subject of the Year's Study.—Old Testament, Genesis to Joshua.

Review Topic.—The God of our Fathers.

Reading Lesson.—Heb. 11:1-19.

The Quarter's Teaching.—God never fails us.

Golden Text.—Our fathers trusted in thee: They trusted, and thou didst deliver them.—Ps. 22:4.

Book.—Genesis.

To proclaim the gospel of salvation is the purpose of the Bible. This is true of it as a whole and of its parts. No matter where we open it, unless we study it with this in mind we miss its meaning.

The lessons that we have had during the last three months from Genesis on Beginnings, can be understood only as they are related to God's eternal purpose regarding the salvation of sinners.

God as the Creator is revealed as all sufficient, the God of our fathers and our God. The first sin, the first crime, the flood, the destruction of the Cities of the Plain indicates man's need. God's promise to Eve, his care for Cain, the rainbow-sign to Noah, the covenant with Abraham, are first manifestations of the divine purpose.

The purpose of this review of twelve lessons taken together is to bring out more closely and strongly than was possible in the lessons taken one at a time, this supreme, divine purpose that pervades all the Bible.

We have been studying Beginnings—the beginning of the universe, of the earth as a part of the universe, and more particularly as a place upon which man might live: the beginning of the human race, of the family, of worship, of the Sabbath, of sin, of the wages of sin, of the plan of salvation.

In this study of beginnings, we have had presented to us the greatest and grandest subjects possible for mortals to contemplate; subjects that men have always regarded as of the utmost importance—important alike to all classes and conditions of mankind; subjects as old as the race, yet ever new, and to be new till the end of time; subjects that men cannot help thinking about if they would, and would not if they could.

Over all, through all and in all, are manifestations of the power and the goodness of God.

Man is the crowning glory of creation. His glory centers about the fact that he is a free moral agent. He chooses to do right or to do wrong. God's infinite love is shown, first in that he created man with such godlike powers and possibilities, and then in his efforts to help man to choose the right, and to help him back to right choice after he has fallen into trouble by choosing the wrong.

The Bible is the story of salvation; everything else is only the setting for that.

Object Lesson.

A compass. The needle always points to the north star. Shake the compass, turn it around. The needle returns to its position and points to the north. It can be depended upon to show the way across a tangled forest or over the trackless sea. The old, old stories we have studied this quarter tell of faith like a trustworthy compass that points always toward the loving heavenly Father. Noah had this faith, Abraham had it, and so did Isaac. "Our fathers trusted in thee and thou didst deliver them."

Lesson Announcement.

Our lessons up to today have given us the story of Hebrew history only through the limelight of the first two of the patriarchs, Abraham and Isaac. Next Sunday we begin a new group of stories, which tells about Isaac's sons. It shows both Abraham's vision at the time he made his blood covenant with God came true.

The story for next Sunday is about two brothers, and what one of them lost by impatience and yielding to hunger.—Hageman.

This church has a very interesting Sunday school. The excellent music and enthusiastic Sunday school are increasing the congregation. One of the finest public roads in the state passes within a hundred yards of the church. This adds much to the church. I know of no better community than around Oak Level.

I have not been preaching long enough at this church to know fully the condition of things yet. The congregations are large, the Sunday school seems to be doing very well, and the music is interesting and inspiring.

Children's Missionary Stories

STORIES are—yes, must be—used by every wide-awake worker among, or leader or teacher of, children.

MISSIONARY STORIES seem to have been the one field well-nigh overlooked until Mrs. Alice Moreton Burnett, Corresponding Secretary for the Woman's Board for Home Missions of the Christian Church, made a compilation of thirty interesting, instructive stories pertaining especially and directly to missions that are sure to be appreciated by workers, teachers, leaders, pastors, fathers, mothers—and the children.

Some of the Important Events of both Home Missions and Foreign Missions are also included, together with Suggestions For Junior Leaders.

They make a book 5 x 7 inches in size, 128 pages, red cloth binding—a handsome, attractive volume. Price 35c per copy postpaid.

MISSIONS AND THE CHILDREN.

There is no form of Christian service that affords more pleasing results than work among the children. They enter into the work so enthusiastically and respond so cheerfully if they only have a leader, some one to direct their efforts. Then, too, the hope of our missionary work is in the children. Many of us grown up people are too busy, or too set in our ways, to give much thought or consideration to the subject. But if we begin now and train up an army of missionary enthusiasts, the next generation will witness marvelous changes and growth in our mission work. This is the purpose of the organization of our children—to teach them to know about, and to train them to give to missions. Then they will love missions; and when missions becomes a passion with us our young people will be offering themselves for service, and our treasury will experience an increase of gifts. Every church should have a Missionary Society for its children. Miss Brickhouse, the Supt. of this Dept. of the A. C. C., writes concerning the work and wishes to interest you in the work.

SPRINGTIME IN OUR MISSION GARDEN.

Is there anybody who is not interested in springtime? Surely, there can be no one who is not attracted by this most glad and joyous season of the year. Then, will you please be so kind as to take a view of our missionary garden?

Whatever the calendar may say about its not being time for spring yet, just look for yourself, and you will see that in our missionary garden it is springtime now. If you do not believe it, read the letter below. You do not even have to sow seeds. They are already there. If you will only nourish and care for them properly, they will grow fast enough and bloom most beautifully. Almost any child is interested in missions, if the work is only presented in an attractive way—a story, an object lesson, or something of the sort. Do you not see, then, if these seeds so full of potential energy and life-giving power are blighted, it will be due to the coldness and indifference of those of us who are older, and the blame will fall on us for neglect?

Our missionary work among children and young people has not yet been well developed. There are Glad Gleaners or Willing Workers and Young People's Societies here and there; but comparatively little has been done along this line. Now, here is a question for all the children in our Southern Christian Convention to answer. Would it be splendid for the children in the South to be first in the development of our Young People's Department? Our women of the South have done good, creditable work for missions since they have organized, work for which they are justly proud and for which they are deeply thankful, but they were late in starting. Now will not our children in the South be the very first to gain front rank position in our Young People's Missionary Department? We have begun in the right way. We have a Young People's Superintendent on the Woman's Missionary Board of the S. C. C., Miss Bettie Stephenson. Besides this, it is important to have a Young People's Superintendent appointed in each Conference Board. But as both of these steps have been taken already by some of the State Boards and Conference Boards, what is most important now is to begin at once to organize Children's Societies in the different churches. Will our Eastern Virginia Conference be first in this, or will it yield to another?

These lines have been written especially in the interest of Glad Gleaners or Willing Workers (Children's Missionary Societies.) Later, Young People's Societies will be considered separately; there will also be mentioned from time to time various facts and suggestions relating to the work of this Department.

Will not our women have this work very earnestly on their hearts, that some one in every church may be willing to organize the children's work and act as their superintendent? There will also be needed the aid of pastors and S. S. superintendents to arouse enthusiasm. Then, here is a suggestion for the children: Just keep asking and asking and ASKING for either Willing Workers or Glad Gleaners Society, until the "grown folks" will just have to let you have one.

Margaret H. Brickhouse,
Supt. Young Peoples' Missionary Dept.
1643 Lovitt Ave., Norfolk, Va.

(I am sending this report of our work at the Temple, thinking it may be suggestive to those wishing to organize. I shall be glad to receive news from all the Children's Missionary Societies throughout our denomination.—M. H. B.)

Glad Gleaners of Norfolk, Va.

The Glad Gleaners Missionary Society of Memorial Christian Temple was organized January, 1912, with 20 members enrolled. During October, November, and December, we started team work to increase membership, attendance, and collection dues. At the close of the contest, we had doubled our enrollment, and the attendance and collection of dues were far more than we had expected. Our contest was worked on this basis: we appointed two captains, and divided the society evenly between the two; the teams were known as the Red and the Blue. The Superintendent promised as a reward to the winning team that they should be entertained by the defeated team. This created much enthusiasm.

This Society has been studying about Porto Rico's conditions and needs; and the children are more interested in missions now than ever, because this study has made very real to them, the people of Porto Rico and their needs. We feel that Miss Mishler and the children she has been teaching about our Savior, are our very own, and we just cannot do enough for them.

In addition to regular dues, we are helping in the support of Mrs. Watanabe, in Japan. Last year, the children promised to give $1.00, and at the close of the year found that they had given $2.04. This year, they have pledged $2.00, and trust they may double the amount again. It is with pleasure the children give their time, their talent, and money; and so interested are they in their Missionary Society and its work, that they are pleading to meet weekly instead of once a month.

This year we have taken up the study of "Jeremiah for Juniors," and are looking forward with eager and trusting hearts that the dear Father who is ready to help us, will be with us as He has been in the year just gone. The motto of our Society is Mark 16:15, Look it up, and adopt

NOTICE.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Christian convention will meet at Elon College, N. C., May 14th, 1913, at 10 o'clock. Each member of the different Conference Boards is requested to meet with said Board. Each Missionary Society is requested to send a representative. Each church where there is no Society is asked to send a woman to this meeting, in order that she may return and organize a Society in the church. Let us have a large gathering of our women interested in the cause of missions.

Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Pres.

AMONG OUR SOCIETIES.

Mrs. Corroll writes that the Woman's Missionary Society in Burlington is doing well. They have a Mission Study class, support a Bible woman, and a girl in Mrs. Fey's school. Recently, they have had a most pleasing report from Mrs. Fey concerning this girl.

They have organized a "Willing Worker's Society with 45 members. Miss Ollie Hall is Supt.; Martha Page, Pres.; Violet Holt, Sec.; Glenn Holt, Treas. At their last meeting they observed the centennial of Davil Livingstone.

Mrs. Harper writes that the Society at Elon College will study Western Women in Eastern Lands, and that the members have pledged themselves to report to their names at roll-call with some interesting facts about missions or with a suitable verse of Scripture. They have their work mapped out for six months and we expecting to get great good from it.

We met with the society at Holland at the time of their Feb. meeting. They have an interested membership and good things may be looked for from them. They will most likely study "Sunrise in the sunrise Kingdom."

This is the book used by the women of The Memorial Temple and Miss Brickhouse writes this of their last meeting: "Our last missionary meeting was especially interesting. The ladies on the program—Mrs. Denison and Mrs. Deed—decorated our Baraca room with Japanese flags and pictures of missionaries and many interesting cards and pictures were passed around among those present. After the meeting, light refreshments were served."

A MEN'S BANQUET.

The First Christian church of Greensboro gave a banquet Monday evening, March 17th, to its men. It was held in the banquet hall of the basement of the church. The color scheme was green celebrating St. Patrick, and the ten ladies who graced the occasion as waitresses wore green caps and aprons.

Plates were spread for seventy-five at 25cts. Forty six were sold, and the company of men who thus gathered around the two long tables presented an aspect of greatness and joy.

It was a "conumrdum" supper, the men being product of Brazil, Women's weapon, Descendents of Pat Murphy, Sidewalk slippers, Smile arresters, forbidden fruit, Girls name, Bathing appliances, and Ferry's Manna. An amusing feature of the evening was the guessing of the men.

Music was furnished by a male quartette of the church choir, and a violin solo by Mr. C. N. Hendon and vocal solos by others.

Toasts were rendered by the the pastor, "The Sunday school and men," Dr. W. A. Harper, "The Church and Men, and Mr. C. A. Hines, Supt, "The Needs of our Sunday School."

Before this letter appears in print we will have enjoyed another Easter. This is a season when we shall all be glad and renew our covenant for Christian service. From this simple fact, on account of which we remember this season, should bring new life, to bud and to bloom as the tree, for an abundant fruitage; and this life of ours should be consecrated to a more excellent and glorious purpose—the glory of God. Too, in this work you may make an investment for “time and eternity.” Why not do it now?

Last Sunday I was with the people at Belew's Creek. Tho' the superintendent had never visited them before, they are interested in the institution. It was indeed a good day with me.

E. M. Carter, Supt.
Suffolk, Va., March 17, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

As I haven't written you in quite a time will do so now. I am awfully busy going to school and have to work very hard getting up my lessons. I am in the second grade now, I have not missed a single day at school this whole term. Am working for the prize on attendance.

Enclosed you will find twenty-five cents for the orphanage.

Love to all,
Curtis Parks Harrell.

You talk just like a boy who is interested in his work. You have my best wishes for your success in winning the prize.

Wadly, Ala., March 16, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

Last Thursday was “my faver's” birthday. Do you know how old he is?

We have been having some nice warm weather and I have been making good use of it playing out side but today it is cold and the wind is blowing hard. Here is my dime with love.

Dwight Hillis Lankford.

There is about four years difference from your “Faver's birthday” and mine: I being junior. I know you are delighted with the pretty weather, tho' it rains right much here.

PONCE CHURCH DEDICATED.

Dear readers of The Sun:

I think it was in April of last year that I wrote to tell all who cared to know that work had begun on the lot for our Ponce church building. I was very glad to be able to tell such good news, gladder still was I when by the first of August the building was finished, but gladder of all when on Sunday Feb. 23 at three o'clock in the afternoon the doors of that building were thrown open and soon it was filled, till there was scarcely standing room, with brethren and friends to hear the dedicatory sermon which our Bro. Burnett preached and was interpreted by a young Porto Rican, member of the United Brethren church here.

That day was one of the greatest in the history of our Ponce work.

But to go back a bit.

Dr. J. F. Burnett and wife of Dayton, Ohio reached Ponce, Jan. 17, (the next day, Jan 18, marked the twelfth anniversary of our arrival in Ponce).

We are always glad to have visitors from the States, especially those who are interested in Christian work, therefore we felt sure their visit would do us all good, but little did we realize how much good. Never since we have been on the field have we received encouragement from any source as we did during the five weeks of their stay.

Dr. Burnett is a man who understands and appreciates men and things; such a character is bound to help those lives that come under its influence.

Mrs Burnett is a sincere, Christian woman, intensely interested in missions and ready to do anything for the cause. It did not take long for me to learn to love her.

The weeks of their visit were busy ones so there was much to be seen and done.

All the points where services were being held at present were visited. If you will watch for their letters in the “Herald of Gospel Liberty,” you will learn what Bro. and Sister Burnett think of the Christian's work in Porto Rico.

So I will say little of their visit, only this that every where they went they left impressions for good that will be a great help to our work. We feel our Father sent them and we know that He used them while here and we would like to thank each person who had a part in making their visit possible.

Dr. Burnett said before leaving that he had accomplished all that he had expected to do, although we almost feared for a while that he would leave before the furnishings reached here, for our new building. But finally the last week all came and in good condition.

First, on Monday Feb. 17, the pulpit furniture which was furnished by the Suffolk church, and is all we could desire in beauty and usefulness. We thank all most heartily, who had a part in this gift.

On Tuesday, four memorial windows came. We are not sure who furnished all, except we know that according to Mrs. W. W. Staley's suggestion six years ago, to put a window in the Ponce church, when it should be built, in memory of our little Reginald. She gave the first contribution and many Sunday school pupils in many States added to it.

We want you all to know that the window is there, a verw beautiful one, representing a spray of Easter lilies. This design was selected because of all that the Easter lily represents to the writer, resurrection, purity, and beauty. Just so the little life that was cut off so early will rise again even more pure and beautiful than when it went out, over seven years ago.

Beside our boy's window is another in memory of my husband's father, Joseph Alfred Barrett. Thus these two lives, the memory of which means so much to us both, are before us each Sabbath, helping us on to higher and nobler things. God bless and repay them for the help and encouragement your missionaries derive from the gifts.

The two hundred and fifty seats did not reach Ponce until late Friday P. M. Feb. 21, so a carpenter and several helpers were found immediately and together with Dr. Burnett and my husband, worked until three o'clock Saturday A. M. to get the chairs set up and ready for the dedicatory service on Sunday.

For Saturday evening we had planned program, celebrating the ninth anniversary of our Ponce church organization, Feb. 22, 1904—Feb. 22, 1913. Our old hall was well filled. There was on the program, special music and three discourses, first "an echo of our Work" by the pastor, D. B. Barrett. Second, "A glimpse of nine years of work," by Bro. Rafael Hernandez.

More music and the roll call. (Bro. Hernandez is the only one of the five charter members present.) (Two have been called home, and the other two are at present in Cuba.) After the roll call, Dr. Burnett spoke on, "The Origin and Principles of the Christian Church."

After the closing hymn and benediction by Rev. E. E. Wilson of the Methodist church, quite a number of the congregation went with us up the street a block to our new church house, where several finishing touches were yet to be made. Several of our young men carried the organ from the old "home" to the new. Our book case had been carried in the same way, earlier in the day.

A large number of the neighbors, some belonging to the better class, who do not attend Protestant services for fear of losing their social standing, came in and inspected our new church home and every body pronounced it pretty and comfortable.

Sunday P. M. by previous vote of the Sunday school, we met in the old hall as usual. After the close of the school session each one present large and small was invited to carry a chair up to the new home. I think we all enjoyed it, the children especially. The neighbors came out on their porches to see us pass and many made favorable comments. After arranging chairs and two beautiful bouquets of roses, sent by the Baptists and United Brethren missionaries, we went home to return at three P. M.

As said before, that Sunday was one of the greatest days in our history. And our hearts were indeed filled with gratitude as we realized that at last we had a home, it makes us want to work harder than ever now to fill that "home" with just the kind of Christians that the Master can use.

Dr. Burnett took for his text, Hagga 2:7. You who have had the privilege of hearing him preach need not be told more.

At night Bro. W. F. Jordan, a Christian minister who represents the American Bible Society in the W. I., preached an ordination sermon at which time Bro. Rafael Hernandez was ordained to the Christian ministry, at the close of which service, at the request of the newly ordained man the writer sang in Spanish, "Will there be any stars in my crown."

After the benediction, church members and friends came forward to bid Bro and Sister Burnett. "Good-by" as they were to leave on the 6:40 train Monday A. M. for San Juan, from which place they sailed on the "Brazas" Wednesday Feb. 26.

We thank our Father for His goodness and our brethren in the States for their help and cooperation.

Your missionaries are not feeling discouraged now even tho' the missionary situation may look so serious to some. We do not believe that God will let this come to naught. We will raise some one to carry it on. There are too many honest, loyal hearts and sincere prayers in behalf of the missionary work in Japan and Porto Rico for it to fail. There is much to be done here and more workers needed and the same is true of Japan. So let us be up and doing for it is the doing that is going to accomplish things for the Master.

From recent articles in our church papers every body has learned that we are in debt and every honest person knows that debts must be paid.

Your missionaries are willing to make sacrifices to help pay that debt and we feel sure there are many loyal ones at home who will join us.

Yours for the missionary cause,

Eva Olyn Barrett.

Ponce, Porto Rico, March 4, 1913.

P. S. Another bit of good news is that our pretty Arus Chapel which a flood carried into a canefield last fall is again back in its place and within a very few days will be ready for re-dedication.

DIED.

Fawcett.

Julius Page Fawcett was born Aug. 17, 1910, died Feb. 5, 1913, aged 2 years, 5 months and 18 days. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Fawcett near Bethel United Brethren church. Burial services were conducted at above named church, Feb. 7, 1913.

A. W. Andes.

Clem.

Amanda Jane Clem was born Jan. 6, 1851, died Feb. 14, 1913, making her age, therefore, 62 years 1 month and 8 days. She is survived by three children and thirteen grand-children. Her maiden name was McIntuff, and she was born in Powell's Fort, Shenandoah Co., Va., and spent her entire life there. Sister Clem united with the Christian church at Dry Run about 33 years ago, and was a faithful and consistent member until her death called her from her labors to reward. It was largely through her efforts that a pastor was secured and the church at Dry Run revived several years ago after it had been without a pastor for a few years. A mother in Israel has gone to rest. Funeral services were conducted at Dry Run, Sunday, Feb. 16, 1913.

A. W. Andes.

Huffman.

Ward Kilber Huffman was born Feb. 15, 1893, and died Feb. 19, 1913, aged 20 years and 4 days. He was the son of Bro. and sister John W. Huffman of Linville, and is survived by his parents and five brothers and sisters. A short time before his death he expressed a desire to be received into the church, but died before a minister could reach his bed-side. However, he left the following message which was read at the funeral, and which he desired published:

"Tell my associates and friends they have seen the life I have lived and my regret is that I did not make this change long ago, while I had my health so I could have been of some service to my Master. I leave a warning with friends at my bed-side to tell the young people of this community not to make fun of those who are trying to worship God. Tell all that I have made my place with my Saviour, that all my sins are forgiven, and oh, how happy I am! I am ready to go home and am not afraid to die. I have selected six of my friends as pall bearers; tell them that I want them to meet me in heaven."

Funeral services were held at Linville Christian church Feb. 21, 1913, and interment made in the adjoining cemetery.

A. W. Andes.

Burke.

John H. Burke was born Feb. 3, 1844, and died Feb. 23, 1913, aged 69 years, and 20 days. Deceased was born in Shenandoah Co., Va., and spent all his life there with the exception of three years which were spent as a soldier in the Civil War. On Dec. 22, 1870 he was married to Miss Virginia Campbell who survives him with five children—three sons and two daughters,—now all grown to manhood and womanhood. Bro. Burke was a kind husband and father and an excellent neighbor, and leaves hosts of friends to mourn their loss. It is to be regretted that he did not see fit to connect himself with some church, but he gave evidence to those about him that he had no fear as to the future, and that all was well with his soul.

Funeral services were held Feb. 25 in the United Brethren church in Edinburg, and the remains laid to rest in the Edinburg cemetery.

A. W. Andes.

Sampson.

William Jackson Sampson was born June 26, 1836, and died Jan. 21, 1913, at the ripe age of 76 years, 6 months and 25 days. Surviving him are his wife, with whom he spent 54 years of happy married life, one daughter, Mrs. Maggie Life, four grand-children, five great-grand-children, and one half-brother. Bro. Sampson united with Mt. Olive (R) Christian church about 13 years ago, and was elected to the office of deacon soon thereafter. Bro. Sampson was one of those quiet, unobtrusive men who left the stamp of his influence upon all whom he met. His home has always been the preacher's home, and those who hear of his death will regret to learn that his place is vacant there.

Funeral services were conducted at the house, Jan. 23, and the body buried in the cemetery at McGaheysville.

A. W. Andes.

Summers.

Michael Summers was born March 16, 1839 and died Jan. 22, 1913, aged 73 years, 10 months and 6 days. For several years Bro. Summers was in failing health, and much of the time was confined to his room. Although his death was not unexpected, the parting was very sad to his wife, son and two daughters who survive him. The chair he so long occupied in the home is vacant, but the sorrowing family and friends are not without hope. He was converted about 14 years ago and united with the Bethlehem Christian church. Bro. Summers was a kind husband and father, and a good neighbor, and leaves a host of friends to mourn their loss. The bereaved are commended to the Father of all Mercies who hath given and hath also taken away, and who alone can comfort in time of great sorrow. Funeral services were held Jan. 24 in Lacey Springs United Brethren church by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. B. Fadely and W. H. Sampsell of the U. B. church. May his wife and children by their noble, upright lives continue to reflect credit upon his name.

The Best Bargain You Ever Made

HOW do you measure the value of a bargain? Suppose you bought an engine that did practically all of your hardest work for you—sawing, pumping, grinding, etc.—and that paid for itself in a short time. Would you call that a good bargain?

An I H C engine will do all that, and more. Having paid for itself, it continues to earn its way by working steadily year after year until you, like our Clay County friend who has used an I H C engine for six years, will say, "My I H C engine is the best bargain I ever made."

I H C Oil and Gas Engines

are thoroughly dependable, and unusually durable. The fine-grained, grey cast iron cylinders and pistons are worked together to a perfect fit. The ground piston rings insure maximum power from the explosion. The ignition apparatus can be understood at a glance. The fuel mixer is the most effective and simplest known. Moving parts are perfectly balanced. Bearings are large and carefully fitted.

I H C engines are made in all styles—vertical and horizontal, portable and stationary, air and water-cooled; in sizes from 1 to 50-horse power, to operate on gas, gasoline, naphtha, distillate, kerosene or alcohol. Gasoline and kerosene tractors, 12 to 60-horse power.

ing every regenerated soul responsible for the regeneration of some other soul, and reader, if you don't do any thing else this year, let Christ use you to win at least one soul for Him.

It seems that many of our church members have lost the joy of salvation or else they never had it to lose. Unless you have the joy yourself I don't believe you will ever be successful as a soul winner for Christ. David prayed this prayer "Lord restore unto me the joy of thy salvation and uphold me with thy free spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee." No joy means no soul won for Christ.

It was the writer's pleasure yesterday to visit the city jail for the purpose of talking and praying with the unfortunate prisoners. After having talked to them for a little while as best I could about Jesus Christ the sinners' friend, my heart was made to rejoice when one stalwart young man, professed faith in Christ as his Saviour. I give God the praise and glory for it was that saved the man for the sake of Christ His Son. Brother if you have received Christ help some one else to receive him. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

McCuller's, N. C., March 16, 1913.

Dear Bro. Atkinson:

Just one week ago today announcement was made that pastor L. F. Johnson and Sunday school superintendent Charles H. Stephenson of the Raleigh Christian church would meet with the C. E. Society, and the Sunday school respectively at Wentworth Christian church today at 2:20 P. M., pastor Johnson to address the C. E. Society, and Bro. Stephenson to take care of the Sunday school.

Bro. Johnson's address was as full of good things as an old fashioned double crusted sliced potato pie. He said "To succeed at anything one must have pluck, get to the front. There is not a day when the C. E. doesn't have something to do. The success of your work depends on how you stick to it. Quick to do a good thing. Love for the job, every one having something to do. When a man thinks of his job, loves his job, and works his job, it can never fail." He admonished the Society to prayerfully pull together and live close to God. "Success will be sure."

All who are so fortunate as to know

Bro. Charlie Stephenson can easily imagine the interest, and enthusiasm manifested by all who are present when he begins to talk Sunday school. His talk on the lesson was plain, practical, and suggestive of many good things. "Abraham heard, heeded and obeyed." After listening to such an address, followed by such Bible teaching as these two brethren gave to the C. E. Society and the Sunday school this evening, no one could fail to realize the fact that "Religion is for every day" and without it no day is worth the living.

Our C. E. Society here is doing a good and great work. Each and every member seems forcibly impressed with the fact that one can live a life so faithful to every duty, so ready for every service, so determined not to commit every sin, that the great Christian church shall be the strongest for their having lived in it. Both, Society and school, hope to have these two brethren with them again soon.

EDITORIAL

Salutation.

With this issue The Southern Christian Publishing Company presents to the public its first output of The Christian Sun. This issue is not what we mean, but it is a beginning. If God wills, and the brethren and friends will do their best for us, this Company will present a paper from week to week that the stockholders will not be ashamed of, our good Church will take pardonable pride in, and our subscribers will read with pleasure and profit.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is now in its sixty-fifth volume, and it rejoices our hearts to say that it never appeared in so large a form, or such neat apparel. We let our readers judge as to whether the printer's art and the craftman's skill were ever so well displayed in the mechanism and make-up of the paper. It is a product of one of the best printing plants that it was possible to establish in a modest way, the type is plain, and the print agreeable.

We ask all our contributors to do their best to make the contents worthy of the improvements now made in the mechanism of the paper.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is now of the standard and popular size of religious journals, and if editor and contributors do not make it equal in contents, the fault will not be that of the publishers.

The Southern Christian Publishing Company is a corporation under the laws of North Carolina, with a capital of $15,000.00 subscribed, the major portion of which has been paid in, and the remainder of which will be paid in as due, (unless the best people on earth repudiate their signatures which of course they will not). THE SUN is only one small item in the great bulk and volume of business the Company is undertaking to do; but every item receives closest scrutiny and skilful handling. Job work and commercial printing of all kinds are solicited, and we only ask a trial order.

If we prove worthy of your patronage, remember us; if we can serve you, command us; if you wish print, notify us; if we err, forgive us.

At any rate, The Southern Christian Publishing Company, in the field for a general printing, binding, and publishing business, salutes you, and craves your interest and your patronage.

The Dissatisfied.

The shrewd but profligate Louis XIV. of France once said to Massillon, "When I hear other great preachers I am dissatisfied with them; but when I hear you I am dissatisfied with myself." This unregenerate prince was more discriminating than many, for, instead of being dissatisfied with themselves when the minister points out their weaknesses, they become dissatisfied with the preacher. But it is a sure sign of a preacher's genius, as it is a token of his piety and power, to make his hearers dissatisfied with themselves. The preacher who makes his hearers dissatisfied with themselves has wrought well.

Divine Economy.

"Jack cannot eat his pie and have it also," reads political economy. Which, being interpreted by many, even professed Christians, means, You cannot give of your substance to the Lord's cause, and keep it yourself also. Solomon was wiser and put upon it another interpretation when he said, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." There are those about you—beware that you are not of the number—who withhold to their own hurt, and because they will not scatter they do not increase.

Better Than Riches.

"Money is of no value in Dayton," read a dispatch when the waters were receding there last week. Money has no permanent value, much as we love it, and there is that of more worth than riches. Wise Solomon in personifying true Wisdom thus wrote "My fruit is better than gold, yea, than fine gold; and my revenue than choice silver. I lead in the way of righteousness, in the midst of the paths of judgment; that I may cause those that love me to inherit substance; and I will fill their treasures." Pity, then, for the man who in getting fails to seek and to get the true Wisdom—which comes as a gift of God.

Fools.

There are two kinds of fools; the one kind needs your pity, the other your prayers; both usually get your contempt. The one is mentally defective; the other is morally (or immorally) self-sufficient. The former loses his sense proportion and so distorts, imagines, falsifies. The latter puts emphasis at the wrong place, and loses all sense of values. The "fool" spoken of in the Bible is always the latter sort, arrogant, ill-advised, self-sufficient. He values himself and his own opinion as supreme and so says, "There is no God." Or, as in Luke, he thinks his soul can feed, like his cattle, from his barn, and acts accordingly. Either pity the fool or pray for him. Don't kick him.

Students and Missions.

One hundred years ago only about one college student in ten professed faith in Jesus Christ, even in this Christian country. Today about fifty per cent. of all college students are professed Christians. A hundred years ago college students thought less about Christian missions than they did about the climate of Mars, or the rings of Saturn. Today the "Student Volunteer Movement" gives its hundreds of bright, well trained, educated young men and women to the missionary field. Even now Yale University, through its students and alumni, is raising $200,000.00 for the equipment of a Mission in Changsha, China, and other great educational institutions are giving like heed to the missionary cause. The Christianization of the world, by preaching, and teaching, and living the gospel, is now a world problem, and sane men everywhere are giving heed to it.

The Diversified Life.

Diversity may be to him that spice is to pie, but neither is the whole the same. The elder Hawthorne on entering college wrote his mother: "I have not yet concluded what profession I shall have. Being a minister is, of course, out of the question. I should not think that even you could desire me to choose so dull a way of life." These words came to mind the other day when it was noted in the papers that the younger Hawthorne was on his way to Atlanta to serve sentence in a Federal prison. President Woodrow Wilson's father found the ministry a very engaging and a sufficiently diversified occupation. And the distance from the presidency to prison is about as great as, and no greater than, the distance between the idea that life is all diversity and the correct idea of life. Children often carry to logical conclusions ideas, false, or otherwise inculcated in them by their parents.

Mirrors.

There are many degrees of perfection in mirrors as every one knows who has beheld, for instance, his true likeness in one, his face elongated in another, and broadened out of all proportion in another. I have in mind here to liken current literature to mirrors. In mirrors we see our physical likeness. In current literature we see soul and mind likeness. Out of a community's daily life issues the daily paper. The head lines of that daily paper are a pretty correct counterpart of the mind and heart life of the community. The religious current literature should be and is usually a correct likeness of the moral and religious life of the constituency of that paper. THE CHRISTIAN SUN, for instance, is a mirror of the moral and religious life of the religious constituency behind it. In its face we read the average degree of piety to be found among the families that support it.

If we are a people of prayer and devotion that fact will be imaged in THE SUN. If we are ambitious for show and splendor, that fact will be reflected in THE SUN's pages. Then again, through its columns one may catch a pretty nearly correct idea of what church enterprises are fostered and to what extent each of these enterprises is nourished. The advertising columns indicate also the mind of the Christians towards the various businesses good and bad that make themselves known through the advertising columns. The absence of tobacco, whiskey, and patent medicine advertisements is significant. Then there is the deceptive gold mine stock company's advertisement that never appears in THE SUN nor any such money traps. THE SUN is henceforth to be issued from the presses of the new Southern Christian Publishing Company. Let it be more than ever a mirror of the full moral and religious life of the Christians in the South.

FROM DR. BARRETT.

Because of the great flood and the distressing conditions in the West, we are sure all SUN readers are anxious to hear from Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., former editor of this paper, and now editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio. Telegrams from here have brought no response, and we presume cannot be delivered. A message from Dr. Barrett to his daughter, Miss Ethel, who is in school at Elon, informs us that he and family are safe. Miss Ethel has a letter under date of March 28th from her father, the salient facts in which she kindly allows us to use, as follows:

"We have been going through perilous times since last Monday night. We have been unable to get off even a letter, telephone message or telegram. The flood in Dayton has been terrible. It began Monday. At three o'clock Monday A. M. I heard a long and distressing whistle. I felt sure it was a danger signal. About six o'clock I heard the same whistle again. After breakfast, not knowing the situation, I started for the office, though the rain was pouring in torrents. I only got about one hundred yards from home and was told that I could not go. In a little while Mr. Rathbun had to leave his home. He started to our house, but was met and carried elsewhere to safety. Many wild reports were then circulated of people drowning. It was said that twenty-six soldiers patrolling the levee were drowned, and I suppose this was true. We then began to hear how terribly the river was rising. By Tuesday night it was up into the second story of many houses and the people were hemmed in and had to stay in the attics. We had an old lady in our home last night who had been for two days and nights in the attic of her home. Many have been drowned and many buildings have been washed away. I went today by buggy to Dayton View, going by way of Richmond Avenue and there I saw a sight such as I hope it may never be my lot to see again. Over toward Broadway and the river, houses were in water to the second story and many were burning. I saw one street afire for something like one hundred yards, the great tongues of flame leaping up and up. All of Wednesday night from our bed-room window we could see the southern part of the city lighted by great fires that were raging. In North Dayton the greatest suffering occurred, where it is reported many have been drowned. The flood struck this part of the city first. I am glad to say the flood is now receding and I shall soon be able to go to the office.

We have not had a letter from anyone since Monday and, of course, have not been able to send one. I have tried to get off telegrams but could not. Yesterday a gentleman came over from Miami City to bring us the news from over there. All of our church people were safe so far as he could learn. The flood reached on that side of the river up to the home of Mrs. Summerbell. Nearly the whole of Dayton was covered in water from five to twenty-five feet deep. A part of Dale and Dayton View escaped by reason of the fact that these sections are so high. We are all safe now, and have been all the while, so far as the flood was concerned, but we could get no gas for lighting, or heating, or cooking, and no water for anything except from our cistern. All cars and trains, of course, were stopped and none of us could get away. Not a train has been into Dayton since late Monday night. The Fifth St. Bridge going to our church is gone, carried away by the flood. The railway bridge going from Cincinnati to Dayton is gone. They had to blow that up because it was backing the water up on the city.

Mother has kept up well through it all and is in her usual health today.

I have never witnessed such a distressing time as it has been with many. Mr. Rathbun says his loss in his home will be as much as $1,200.00. We have not been able to get to the Publishing House. We know the basement is full of water and how much more we cannot tell. All the paper is ruined. No Herald this week and we cannot tell when it will appear again, as every newspaper press in the city is out of fix. We hope to get started again next week, but it is by no means certain. While we have been in straitened circumstances as to the bare necessities of life, we think we shall soon be able to get all we need. In fact, even now in one way or another, we can get ample food to meet actual needs, but we are still without water and gas, but are making out quite well. I do not as yet know as to the number of fatalities. Living in a high section of the city has been worth a great deal to us.

Mr. Hess is still living, and it was thought yesterday that he was even better.

The Government is sending all letters free of charge for us for a few days."

Your father,

J. P. BARRETT.

We are grateful to Miss Ethel for the contents of the letter, which will be read with avidity by all SUN readers, and we are sure Dr. Barrett will pardon us for publishing the facts intended only for his daughter, as they contain the only message we have been able at this time to get through.

THE FLOOD AT DAYTON.

Dear Brother Atkinson:

Floods have been raging in Dayton, Troy, Piqua, and all towns along the Miami River since Monday evening. The entire business section, and all low ground, is covered by the flood. The water has been as high as the third story of the business houses and hotels. The whole business section is destroyed. Now the fire is raging. Thousands are reported perished. How many no one will ever know. You have been getting some news which no doubt you think exaggerated, but the news can not make it as bad as it is. One man went from here yesterday to see the horrors, and came back, it is said, this morning, a jibbering maniac. One of our own church men here, returned this morning, and went to bed with a nervous chill. The horrors are beyond description.

We entertain great fears for our brethren there. The Publishing House is in the flooded section. It is hoped that none of the officers were there when the flood came upon the city, but it seems that some of them lived in the low section of Dayton, and we can get no word.

Mr. P. T. Rathbun, brother of the Agent, went down today, but so far no communications have been received from the business section. The wires are down, the gas supply is cut off,—the fires have been caused by gas explosions in the city,—lights have failed, and great floods are rushing down the business streets, so that no one can get nearer than two miles of the heart of the town, even with motor boats.

We have raised thousands of dollars here since yesterday morning for the sufferers. We are sending trainloads of clothing and food from this city, and the trains bring back Dayton's homeless orphans, widows, and men with shattered hopes, and Springfield is heroically doing her share to care for these unfortunates.

What a prayer meeting we had with a few of our people in the church last night! The rains poured down without, but we were burdened with the misfortunes of our sister city, 23 miles away. One woman was present who said, "My poor son is in Dayton, and I can't hear from him." What awful suspense!

The people who have been forced to the second and third stories of buildings are starving and freezing to death. They can not be reached to supply them with food. Last night the telephone operator called the local office and said, "Goodbye, I am now going to my death." Instantly communications were cut off. The building had begun to burn, and there was no way of escape.

It is not worth while for me to go on writing. No doubt you will get details by wire before this letter reaches you, but they can not be made worse than the conditions are. No tongue will ever be able to describe, and no pen write, say those who have returned from there, the horrors. We are hoping that our brethren are safe.

Yours very truly,

H. R. CLEM.

(The above personal letter to the editor is from Rev. H. R. Clem, Pastor Christian Church, Springfield, O.)

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

The time has come when the church demands an educated ministry of a higher standard than at any previous period. The young minister should understand not only the principles of an English education, but on account of Higher Criticism, science falsely so called, subtle philosophy, and the many winds of doctrine, he should first master himself, bring his mind in subjection to the fundamental principles of thought and sound habits of study. The mind should be trained to do and to dare to do the difficult things, for many difficult questions will present themselves in the active ministry for settlement. He should acquire the habit, while in college, of making a thorough investigation and sounding to the bottom some of the more difficult subjects like Philosophy, science, mathematics, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. The mastery of such subjects will give power, penetration, and potentiality to the working habits of the mind. Hebrew and Greek give not only power to do things, but they are of great practical value in Biblical interpretation. To be able to make first-hand investigation and to understand the meaning of things from the original language, in which the Scriptures were written, gives confidence and power that cannot be acquired from any other source.

Not only should some of the more exacting subjects in college be studied for the sake of power in mental drill, but a thorough course of systematic theology should be studied after the completion of the college course. This course should not be substituted for the college training. That is necessary to qualify the mind in habits of sound thinking so as to be able to understand theology. A course in apologetics, exegetics, and homiletics each should be pursued for at least three years after the ministerial student has completed his college education. It is a sad mistake for young men whom the church is educating for the ministry to neglect their education in college by endeavoring to serve a full field of churches while pursuing their college course. Observation for twenty years proves that it is the exception that the ministerial student that undertakes this makes as high a stand in his classes and makes as strong a man as he might have made by devoting his entire time to student life.

THE OUTLOOK OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Christian Church has never had a brighter outlook than at the present time. Every movement that she undertakes seems to prosper under smiling approbation of a Father's love. Our educational institutions were never more prosperous than at present. More students of the church membership are enrolled in our several colleges than ever before in the history of the denomination. More ministerial students are preparing for the ministry, and are planning for larger and better preparation. More of the laity are advocating an educated leadership not only in the pulpit, but also in the pew. There is a growing sentiment for the better support of the ministry, better service from the ministry, and more progressive religious work along all lines.

Never before was there greater interest in the church in doing more advanced Home Mission work. Substantial buildings are being erected in the great centers of population where there are people and wealth and real need for Christian service. These churches will bring large returns in the salvation of souls and in church growth. There is a growing spirit of liberality in the church that has never before been equalled. Fifty thousand dollars for the Special Fund of the college was raised comparatively without effort. Fifteen thousand dollars for the Publishing House seemed not a difficult task. The Orphanage appeals to the heart of the church and receives a liberal support for our constituency. The outlook is bright, the future is big with promise, and the hope inspires to undertake greater things.

While all these great and good things are true, the church is not measuring half up to her possibilities. Instead of fifty thousand for the college and fifteen thousand for the Publishing House, the church is able, easily able to raise a hundred thousand dollars for a permanent endowment for the college in the academic department, and establish a theological department and maintain a chair of theology for the training of young men for the ministry. Shall the church do less than she is able to meet the needs of the Master's kingdom and to enlarge the field of usefulness and service? To do what we can is our duty, to do less for the service of the Kingdom when there are so many demands for such service is sin.

The Christian Church needs more prophets with faith that never falters. It needs long-visioned men of broad minds added to our present forces to enlarge our field. Give us men—men of great faith and liberal souls, men of strong hope and clear vision, men that are broad enough to learn the best in all denominations and liberal enough to appropriate the good in methods and means wherever found. With the present trend of activity in the church, with its growing liberality in spirit, and generosity with its wealth, and developing thirst for intelligent leadership in pulpit and pew, if we can prepare the men that we need for the various fields of service, the church shall make more rapid strides in extending the Master's kingdom in the next decade than it has ever made before in a quarter of a century.

HOW TO PAY A CHURCH DEBT.

If you would like to know how to pay your church debts with the greatest ease, here is a plan which will work. Take a list of the families in the congregation, canvass them and find out how many of them are subscribers to their church paper. In the case of those who do not subscribe get them to subscribe and pay for one year's subscription. After all the subscriptions have been secured that can be secured, call together the more substantial element of the church and raise a fund to pay the subscriptions to the church paper for those families which are not able to pay for themselves, or which are not interested sufficiently to pay the subscription for themselves. In other words, put the church paper into every home in the congregation. The effect of this policy will be to increase the interest of all the members of the church in all church matters, to enlarge the attendance on church services, to make those who subscribe for church causes pay their subscriptions more promptly, and to increase the liberality of the church members so that when an appeal is made for funds with which to retire the church debt that appeal will be met liberally and will awaken an interest in every family in the congregation.

Why will these results accrue from such a policy? The answer is very simple. Most church members, when they know their duty, are willing to perform it, but when for six days in the week no church influence comes to their homes, they have too much time to forget. Frequently they will not attend church services on Sunday, and this gives them a longer time in which to forget. Put into their hands the church paper, making its weekly appeal to their conscience and lying upon their parlor tables as a mute witness to them of their duty and as a result you educate the church members. You inform them. Their consciences become enlightened. They see their duty from a new standpoint and they come to the support of the pastor and church officers with greater earnestness and zeal.

The quickest way to pay a church debt is to make every church member effective, and the best way to make every church member effective is to make every church member well informed as to his obligations on all church matters. The church paper, next to the pastor, is the most efficient medium through which this can be done, hence the church paper should go into every church home just as certainly as the pastor should go into every church home. The pastor cannot go into every home every week. The church paper can, and no pastor, or church officer, should be satisfied until in his church this ideal plan becomes an accomplished fact.

THE "OPTIMUS."

The Babcock Printing Press Company, New London, Conn., has just installed one of their large, double revolution printing presses in the new Publishing House. This press was christened the "Optimus" before it left the hands of the manufacturers. This name was selected because of the excellent quality, character, and workmanship of the press, but more especially because of the high grade of printing that can be done on it. This press is said to weigh about seven tons. It made a car load for shipment. The "Optimus" is the "best" press that can be bought. It has been the policy of the company from its organization to set a high standard in everything that was undertaken in the establishment of our printing business.

In erecting the building, an excellent plan was selected, contributing to an abundance of light, which is very essential to good work. The material of the two-story brick building was carefully chosen, the building well constructed, and the printing department well equipped.

In selecting a manager for the printing department, every effort possible was made to secure a man who was not only a skillful printer and publisher, but to select one who was equal to the best, and in the person of Mr. C. W. Montgomery of Troy, Ohio, we have one of the very best printers and managers that can be secured. The best proof of his ability to produce excellent work is to watch him in handling the various problems and difficulties that come up in the printing department. He has selected men who know their business to assist him in the different branches of printing.

From this time forth, it is hoped that our Church paper may compare well in size and mechanical make-up as well as in literary style and finish with the leading religious journals of other churches. There maybe difficulties that will prevent our reaching this ideal in some issues of the paper, but nothing less will be our standard and we will strive to live up to it. If this can be accomplished, it will be a great blessing to the church. Not only will the church paper be made a great blessing to the church through the new publishing house, but much more printing can be done, and greater publicity can be given our ideas and ideals as a church. Greater good can be done in guiding the entire denomination in the thought and study about the more progressive methods in every department of church life and activity.

TELEGRAM FROM DR. J. P. BARRETT.

Dayton, O., April 3, 1913.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson:

Our people generally safe. Publishing House damaged badly. No estimate yet. Great destruction of property. Two hundred drowned. Tell Ethel that we are safe and well. Will write.

J. P. BARRETT.

—Former President Taft has reported for duty, and begun his work, as Professor of Law in Yale University. Change about is fair play. Dr. Wilson left a college to become President, and President Taft left the White House to go to a college.

—J. Pierpont Morgan, the Napoleon of finance in America, died in Rome, Italy, just after noon March 31st. Besides being a great financier Mr. Morgan was a strict churchman, and an art connoisseur, having, it was believed, the best individual collection of rich and rare paintings of any man in America.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The appalling disasters caused by floods in Ohio and Indiana emphasize the importance of human resistance to natural forces. Great cities are as helpless as babes in the grip of multiplied raindrops in motion. Accumulated wealth crumbles before swirling waters like snow under spring sunshine.

The first reports from Dayton, Columbus, and Piqua in Ohio, and Indianapolis, Indiana, were greatly exaggerated; but the final report will be awful. In the face of such floods, M. O. Leighton, Chief hydrographer of the United States Geological Survey, and one of the most eminent authorities on floods, says, "No work that could have been built by the hand of man could have prevented it. It is one of those things that no human agencies can withstand." That is a frank confession of human inability to cope with nature overflows.

In the presence of such overestimating calamities all human interests are merged into one common stream of sympathy and helpfulness. Business yields to life. Government leaves off diplomacy and legislation in relief work. Men like President Patterson of the National Cash Register devote their means and ability to help the helpless. The nation is stirred. Head yields to heart. The basis of citizenship is discovered. Humanity feels dependent upon Deity. A new life always comes out of flood. The President becomes a Christian man and brother in his offers of aid.

We know not yet how the "Christian Publishing Association" has fared in Dayton. It stood in the heart of the city with all the printing presses in the basement which must have been flooded. We hope the building remains and that the recession of the waters will make it possible for the work to be resumed without very great loss. A hundred thousand good people pray heaven's blessings upon the institution and all the workers within its four walls so dear to the church.

Dr. J. P. Barrett resides in North Dayton where the flood was very destructive and no message has been received from him or any occupant of the C. P. A. building. Friends are waiting and hoping, and the next few days will no doubt relieve the anxious strain.

Marvin Franklin Crocker, only son of B. D. Crocker of Suffolk, was born July 8, 1891, and died in Jefferson Hospital, Roanoke, Va., March 13, 1913, and was buried from Suffolk Christian church 3:30 p. m., March 15, 1913, a very large congregation being present.

He had passed the Suffolk schools, Prof. N. Starke's private school, and was in the Senior class in Va. Polytechnic Institute nearing graduation. His father and three sisters survive, his mother having passed over the river December 17, 1908.

Marion united with Suffolk Christian church November 17, 1907. He was faithful in Sunday school and church before he went to Blacksburg to school.

He was a good, quiet boy, entering upon manhood with promise of a good future.

He made friends and held them at home and at school.

Wherever circumstances or duty placed him he was faithful. Social, school, and religious obligations were faithfully discharged. He was faithful unto death and has gone to receive a "crown of life" with mother who was a jewel in the church and the home.

His love of home and home folks was a star in his life. His vacations were spent with "home-folks" and not in wayward company; and he was the same away from home as at home. No one has ventured to reflect on his good name; no one has ventured to explain why one so promising was taken away.

His life, though brief, was not in vain. It will enrich many lives for years to come. The memory of his life will linger long in the hearts of those who mourn his early taking off, freighting their lives with sweetness richer than the aroma of the mountain of beautiful flowers piled upon his grave.

Six of his classmates from the V. P. I., sat by his body at night, and bore it to the tomb.

The vacant chair in the home and on the platform on graduation day will speak volumes to hearts that loved him and love him still.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Mr. A. Liggett Lincoln, who is now a first year medical student in the Johns Hopkins University, spent Easter here, leaving Tuesday evening of this week for Baltimore to resume the final term's work. Mr. Lincoln will be at his old post of serviceableness in the President's Office this summer, where he has done such competent and faithful work for three vacation seasons previous.

Mrs. R. J. Kernodle, than whom there is no Elon Alumna more loyal, came up from Durham Friday, accompanied by her cousin, Miss Turner, and spent a few days with her old friends and admirers here.

Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C., whose seventy-five years find him yet more vigorous and active than many men of forty, was here this week in the interest of the Chapel Hill work. This church, now rapidly nearing completion, will be a "monument than bronze more enduring" to the memory and the energy of this veteran of the Cross.

Mr. W. D. Neville, Chapel Hill, N. C., brother of Mrs. S. J. McCauley, saw Elon for the first time recently and was amazed at what he saw. Brother Neville has sent several children here to prepare for their life-work and has a daughter here now, and has frequently come to the College's aid in a financial way. He expressed himself as satisfied that he had been able to contribute to such a worthy institution. Thank you, Brother Neville.

Prof. W. H. Swift, Field Secretary of the N. C. Child Labor Organization, who addressed the N. C. and Va. Conference in session at Greensboro last November, will present the plans of his work for social betterment to the students on Monday evening of this week.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson spent this week in Virginia, selling stock in the Publishing House. It would do the hearts of the stockholders especially and of our brethren generally good to visit this establishment, the latest general enterprise of our brotherhood. This scribe has had somewhat to do with printing houses for several years, and he frankly states that he has seen none superior to this of ours and only one or two its equal.

Rev. L. I. Cox, Treasurer of the College, closed a glorious revival service in La Nette, Ala., on Thursday of this week. All the churches of the town came out to hear him and hundreds were turned away at each meeting after the first one or two. He is now aiding that old wheel-horse of the Christian faith, Rev. H. W. Elder, in an equally gracious service, we trust, in Richland, Ga.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell, Lakemont, N. Y., our popular non-resident professor of Church History, writes that he has just sent to the printers a volume on educational matters and that he is this week to deliver two sermons in Defiance, Ohio. How does Dr. Summerbell find time to do so much and yet in all he does maintain such a high standard of literary and scholarly attainment?

Rev. E. M. Carter, Uncle Emory, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, is in Georgia and Alabama for a few days in the interest of the Orphanage in that section of the Church.

Mrs. T. C. Amick was hurried through the country on automobile to the St. Leo's Hospital on Wednesday morning. There she underwent a delicate and dangerous surgical operation, and contrary to professional expectation is now assured of recovery, at which her friends greatly rejoice. She was not present at the funeral services of her infant son on Thursday, but loving hands tenderly laid the little form, in which so many hopes had centered, to rest. Dr. J. U. Newman and Uncle Wellons officiated. Dr. and Mrs. Amick have universal sympathy in this sad affliction.

ACTIVE AND INACTIVE MEMBERS.

Dear Brother Editor:

I want to write a few lines to THE SUN readers about the easy way of turning members out of the Church. It has come to the place now that a man must do about or be turned out the easy way. A few years ago our brethren decided the apportionments were too heavy and we felt embarrassed to go to the Conference with them not paid. So a remedy was sought for the relief of the Church. In this fast age of ours we do not have time to see the brethren and talk with them about the welfare of their soul and the interests of our church. We could not well prefer a charge against a brother and turn him out because he would not pay twenty-five cents a year to the Conference claims. So we decided to use the easy way from now on and get rid of him without making much fuss about it. The way to do this is to have two lists of names known as the active and inactive list. Now, Brethren, I have given this a new name, for you remember that we agreed when this rule was first adopted to look after these defaulters, but I find that it has not been done and it has proved very hurtful to some of our churches. Some of our churches have more than half their number on the inactive list and if one comes up and asks you about turning him out you say, "No, no." We have not turned any body out; that's a mistake, but I notice these inactive fellows can get drunk, use profanity, shoot for the turkey Christmas, or do anything they want to do and they are not looked after. They are never consulted about any matters pertaining to the church unless we want them to help rebuild or do some repair work, and I tell you brethren it's wrong because to live a Christian life ourselves is not all the Lord wants us to do. He wants us to help someone else to live right.

So, if we would stop and think a moment about the worth of immortal souls, to see one go down would be more embarrassing than to go up to Conference without our full apportionments. "What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or what would he give in exchange for his soul." Brethren, I believe in paying our apportionments and I believe in looking after the souls of men also.

HOW TO INTRODUCE A MISSIONARY THOUGHT IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

My last article closed with an emphasis upon missions as fundamental structural work in religious life, and that particular, constant instruction in the young, growing life is necessary. This must be had by injecting it in a well planned way, in the program. It has been said that we need not expect to wake up some fine morning and find ourselves suddenly good. Things don't just happen so. Goodness comes by a long process of resisting evil and cultivating righteousness. Neither can we expect a missionary people now, or in the future, by a "just happen so." A missionary people will come only as the result of long and patient instruction which begins with the child in its earliest years and follows him to old age. Therefore our Sunday school program each Sabbath must carry a single missionary thought which will grip the whole school. To do this the Superintendent must be missionary and arrange his program ahead of time with this particular idea in view. Some suggestions are as follows, for example:

Have a missionary item with song,—missionary song. After the song, talk briefly about certain beliefs of a nation, and read a letter from a missionary. Any of them will be glad to write you a letter for such purpose every month or so. A letter from a native worker would be exceedingly interesting.

Another Sunday, have a physician, if one can be had, to tell of conditions existing where they have no physicians;—how they treat indigestion in Korea. We have a story of a man in Korea who had a bad case of dyspepsia. A friend tried to help him. He got a reed two and a half feet long, tied a swab on the end of it and then told the dyspeptic to open his mouth. He did so and the friend inserted the reed, and pushed it down his throat in order to press the food past the sticking point.

Unfortunately the reed broke off and left ten and a half inches of it and the swab in the man's stomach. After five days of suffering, he was brought in on a chair to the mission hospital at Taiku. He could neither eat nor drink, and lay in a semi-conscious condition most all the time. The doctor gave him chloroform and opened the abdomen. The piece of reed with swab attached was found in the stomach. It was extracted and the patient made a fine recovery.

What if there had been no missionary hospital?

Follow this story with definite prayer for the physicians in heathen countries.

Don't you think this would make a most interesting item in a Sunday's program? I do, and it would not take more than five minutes. None of the school will find mission study like this a bore but will await the item each Sabbath with almost exciting interest. By applying to the proper source, hundreds of such items may be had to keep your Sunday school alive with the idea and furnishing food thought for all the young and old.

There is another story of how the heathen carry eggs to the market. They string them. Announce to-day that next Sunday at a given moment in the program you are going to tell the school how the heathen string eggs for the market. Don't forget to tell them next Sunday.

Another Sunday have on exhibition a Korean knife, needles, etc. Koreans think that pain is caused by rats. The presence of a cat will cure the pain. The cat scares the rat away. They even make paper cats and mummy cats and hang up around the house of the sick, hoping to drive away the pain. If that doesn't work, they stick hot pins in the sufferer at the point of the pain, while others beat drums to drive the evil spirit away. How would you like red hot pins stuck in your flesh to let out pain? They do in China. How would you like the following dose of medicine:

Powdered snake	2 parts
Centipedes	6 parts
Scorpions	4 parts
Wasps and their nest	1 part
Toads	20 parts

Ground thoroughly, mixed with honey and made into pills, and required to take four times a day? They do in China.

The above is another fine story for one Sunday. Such stories can be had and any superintendent need not be without them.

LARGER THINGS IN MISSIONS FOR US.

Brother Editor, I want to thank you for following up that feeble appeal of mine for larger personal gifts and more of them for our mission work abroad, by that splendid editorial showing that we can do larger things if we have the knowledge and will so to do and for mentioning that church that gave such a splendid amount. On the next day after Easter the city papers here gave a list of large amounts given by different churches here in Norfolk. Among the larger ones one gave $3600, another $3300, another $3100, another $2500, another $2300, another $1200, and other smaller amounts. That is the way to support missions, and some of our churches could do as well, and all could do as well accordingly. Why cannot we make Easter Sunday a great foreign missionary day among us, or "the second Sunday in March or a convenient Sunday thereto" as suggested by the American Christian Convention, and do something worth while? Some years ago the Temple established the second Sunday in June as a foreign mission day and we are hoping on that day to make an offering worth while. Our church missionary committee is at work now planning for the day. Within the last year the "Men and Missions" gave a long list of churches that give as much or more each year for foreign missions than their local church expenses. There are hundreds of churches doing that very thing and have done it for years. "The first work of the whole church is to give the gospel to the whole world" and, "The resources of God are promised only to those who undertake the program of God." I believe in our folks, and we are going to do larger things as a church than we have ever done if I can see aright.

WARREN H. DENISON

Norfolk, Va., March 28, 1913.

HAVE PLENTY OF LITERATURE.

This past winter I visited a dozen or more country Sunday-schools, and noted that among the twelve schools, not more than six of them were adequately provided with sufficient literature; three were fairly well provided, and three had an abundance. Now the three that had plenty in the way of class papers, lesson helps, songbooks and library books, were the most active and wide-awake schools of the twelve; the three that were fairly well supplied were but fair schools in the matter of attendance and interest; while the six that had a scant supply of literature were poor schools in every way.

The fact was impressed upon my mind that good literature, and plenty of it, is a very essential thing in the operation of a country school. When I mentioned this to one of the superintendents of the successful schools, he declared that he made an especial effort in this regard. When he first took charge of the school it was very poorly supplied, having nothing more than a few quarterlies, and a handful of papers. There was nothing at all for the young people and the children. The old complaint of lack of money was put forth when he spoke of the need of more literature, and he overcame this by putting the whole matter up to the classes. He made it a matter of class pride, and by getting sample copies of excellent class papers, requested them to order their own supply. This was followed in the adult class, the boys' class, young people's class, and in the classes of little boys and girls of the Primary Department. —Selected.

FIRST COMPLAINT AGAINST THE CHRISTIAN SUN PIANO CLUB.

Although the Club has now been in operation for more than a year and the management has received hundreds of appreciative letters from "delighted Club members, only one complaint has so far been received. That comes from a lady who complains that the catalogue which we mailed her failed to reach her promptly and that in the meantime her husband purchased "the Style G Piano" and paid nearly two hundred dollars more than the Club asks for it. On investigation we find that the lady is correct. The piano which she received is of identically the same make and style and her husband lost one hundred and eighty-two dollars on account of the failure of the catalogue to reach them promptly.

On that particular style and make of piano the Club only claims to save its members one hundred and two dollars but, according to the figures given by this lady, it would have saved her husband exactly one hundred and eighty-two dollars for the piano dealer in this case charged more than is customary.

Some people who do not know the in's and out's of the piano business have possibly imagined that the claims of the Club are exaggerated but the fact is that they are just the opposite. They have been stated with extreme conservatism.

If your home needs a piano or a self-player piano it will pay you handsomely to look into the Club's offers. You can obtain catalogue and full particulars by addressing the managers, Ludden & Bates, Christian Sun Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

—Rev. W. H. Denison, Norfolk, Va. writes: "Am setting aside week April 6—13 as church paper week, for CHRISTIAN SUN, Herald, and Christian Missionary. Will have a large committee at work to help. Send us sample copies of SUN for the work. The work goes well here." Now brother pastor and beloved friends, will ye not follow Bro. Denison's good lead? Please do.

NORFOLK LETTER.

The other day I saw somewhere a statement to the effect that among the ministers of a certain denomination there were more "big" men than there were charges for them to fill.

"Poor little "big" man, him's so big that he can't find any place for him's big se'f."

Honestly, "it is to laugh" when we find such statements, made in all earnestness and seriousness by men who really and truly believe that what they say is so.

A man must, indeed, be a "whopper" when he becomes so "big" that no place can be found for him.

The truth, however, will probably be found to be that the brethren referred to, are only "too big" in their own minds for certain charges. If they are really as able and capable as they think, (whoever they are), it seems to me that they would take whatever charges are open and develop them into importance and proportions to accord with their own.

No better test of one's true worth can be found than the willingness and ability to take hold of small, insignificant, and oftentimes unpromising beginnings and convert them into great monuments of sagacity, endurance and foresight.

Especially does the church need, as her pastors and leaders, men of such caliber. We need in the ministry, not only of unquestioned character and goodness, but also men of large initiative and creative ability who shall dare to blaze the way through now unbeaten and trackless mazes of social and economic chaos to something definite and assured for the cause of our Lord and Master.

Besides, if it's "credit" that men are seeking, then, I should think that even from this viewpoint such a course would be far more praiseworthy than merely to take hold of what others have built up, by their own toil and self-denial, and simply "hold down the job." But, the unfortunate thing is that in all ranks of life there are thousands who do not seem to be desirous or ambitious of creating anything upon their own account, but they rest content if they can find some easy berth already made to order into which they can step and take it easy.

It is just for this reason that we are not making any more headway than we are to-day. Too many are moving along in the old ruts and grooves, and are too lazy to take the pains and effort necessary to get out.

No matter how tight or tiny may be the enclosure in which it is enclosed dynamite always makes a place for itself whenever it gets turned loose. So it is with a really big man. Never fear that he will not make a place for himself. He may have to shatter and shiver a few timbers in the doing of it but he will find a place all right.

God help us in the ministry. I remark again that the job is too big for the best of us. Before the opportunities and possibilities for service which it opens to us we stand appalled. What a tax it makes upon every power we possess. The task is Herculean. That a man should dare think himself too big for it argues him already as unfit and unworthy.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Rev. Warren H. Denison, Norfolk Memorial, writes March 19th: "Received two new members Sunday; baptized nine Sunday evening." Bro. Denison's work moves well.

—We trust you have your new apparel and enlarged form. In the name of the Southern Christian Publishing Company we greet you. This Company's policy is to do the very best work—or nothing.

—Do not send obituaries containing over 150 words unless you send pay for printing all over this number at half cent a word. The Executive Committee of the Southern Christian Publishing Company have so ruled. Please give heed to this.

—A good brother in Greensboro writes: "I am glad you are improving THE SUN, not because it is not good enough, but because it looked so small beside other church papers. I am delighted that we are to have a church paper equal in size and appearance to the other religious papers."

—We hear with great pleasure of the successful work Rev. J. L. Foster is doing as pastor of our Waverly, Va., church. He and his good wife have won the hearts of the people both of his church and of the town and the work there prospers in all its branches. Bro. Foster has always been one of our most active, beloved and successful pastors.

—Rev. C. E. Newman, Henderson, N. C., reports his work in prosperous condition. The ample house of worship at Mt. Auburn is rapidly building and it is believed can be used by the 2nd Sunday in May, Memorial Day. Bro. Newman has a happy family and a few hours in his home were restful and wholesome. Mrs. Newman is the embodiment of congenial hospitality.

—Rev. Warren H. Denison writes hopefully of the missionary outlook. This is worth printing twice: Among the larger gifts by single churches in Norfolk for missions on Easter one church gave $3,600, another $3,300, another 3,100, another $2,500, another $2,300, and so on. That looks like business. We want to record some of our good churches as making gifts like that to Foreign Missions; and, brethren, we shall in a few years if God wills.

—While in Dendron, Va., a few hours last Friday Prof. O. W. Johnson, the capable and highly successful principal of the town High School, laid violent hands upon us and forced his two hundred pupils to listen while we talked. Prof. Johnson, an Elon College graduate who has made good in his chosen work, has done a great work in Dendron and is held in high esteem by citizens and patrons there. It was a pleasure to greet again this good friend and find him in superb health and in the high enjoyment of his work.

—We dropped in, as out of a cloud, upon Prof. J. J. Lincoln, Principal Wakefield High School, Wakefield, Va., last Thursday p. m. What a delightful evening we had together, his good and capable wife, the genial professor, and ye humble scribe. Agreeable talk and delightful fellowship carried us too quickly into the deep night. Wakefield is fond of the Lincolns and the Lincolns are happy in Wakefield. The High School is a wonder in building, in equipment, and in the spirit of its management and patronage. The recitation rooms looked like the studio of artists, flowers blooming, hot house plants fresh and fragrant, drawings in colors on black board and chart, comfortable equipment, luxurious environment and every convenience for teacher and student. This is largely a creation of Prof. Lincoln's hand, brain, and heart, and he revels in the work that engages him.

—This kind word comes from our good sister, Mrs. Fannie J. Patrick, Enigma, Ga.: "I have just seen your letter telling of our Publishing House. I am glad to know of such a building belonging to our Christian people, and that they can furnish a larger paper at the same price. Yes, I will renew my subscription and you shall have my influence. I will do all I can for you and the dear CHRISTIAN SUN, and if I need any books in your line, or can induce any one to order, I certainly will do so with pleasure. I am spending my life in working for the Lord. I am trying each day to live better and nearer the Cross and do something each day for God and to help uplift humanity. Rest assured you will ever have me as a reader of THE SUN, also a helper in every way I possibly can. I pray God's richest blessings on the paper and all connected with it. I read it, find it a great comfort to me, and also a great help to me in my Sunday school."

WITH THE PASSING THROUG.

—Suffolk Virginia, in a popular election held March 31, voted to remain in the "dry" column, the majority to remain dry being greater than that to go dry some years ago. Throughout the country local option and prohibition sentiment is growing.

—The best news we have seen lately is that parcels post hits the express companies hard, taking 25 per cent of their business. If now some other device could be created to take another 25 per cent. maybe the Express Companies would become more reasonable in charges.

—Walter Page, the distinguished North Carolina editor, who goes as our Government's representative to the Court of St. James, will receive $17,000.00 a year salary. His predecessor in office, another distinguished editor, by the way, the late Whitelaw Reid, paid $65,000. a year house rent while in London. Here is guessing that Walter Page, following the common sense conduct of his Carolina ancestors and kinsfolks will either rent a house cheaper than that, build him one, or live in a hotel. The Pages are people of plain living and high thinking.

—Our generous and congenial friend, Rev. J. F. McCulloch, D. D., editor Methodist Protestant Herald, Greensboro, had this kindly word in The Herald last week:

"The Christian Publishing House at Elon College is now ready to begin printing THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which has for several years been printed in the office of the M. P. Herald. We shall miss the weekly visits of THE SUN's genial editor, Rev. J. O. Atkinson. We shall also miss the Sun itself, both in what it required of us and what it brought to us. We appreciate the privilege of printing the organ of our sister denomination for so long a period, and wish the paper continued and increased prosperity in its splendid new home at Elon. The paper is to be enlarged at once into four column size."

All of which is heartily reciprocated. Bro. McCulloch has borne with our shortcomings, been patient with our negligence, and has manifested the finest fraternal spirit in all our dealings. It relieves the stress and the strain of life to have to do with men of such noble caliber.

It is in this life alone we can learn lessons of patience and self-denial for there are no sick beds to watch by, no sufferings to soothe, no mourners to comfort in the mansions of the Father's house.—George Macdonald.

—This from Pastor Rountree, of Greensboro, March 31: I am delightfully astonished. Bro. W. G. Clements, of Morrisville, was with us to-day in the interest of the Chapel Hill work; only 44 present, mostly women and children—much rain—but they gave him $70.00 voluntarily. How's that? Get the habit, I suppose. The Lord bless it, and them."

Now Easter is gone and, I feel safe in saying, it was a delightful occasion to us all. Eggs! yes, plenty of them; and we are under many obligations to our friends who made it possible for us to have and enjoy them. It only takes sixty-six eggs at one meal for each of us to have one. And, we had them fried for breakfast Sunday and Monday mornings. Then, after the work was all done Monday morning, we had the Easter Egg Hunt. The babies, middle size folks and the large folks, all hunted eggs. Of course you can imagine how much that was enjoyed. I am glad to say we did not have to buy any of these eggs; all of them were given to us. I wish this would inspire some one to make a nice donation for the water and sewerage.

We rejoice with the Presbyterian Orphanage, Lynchburg, Va., which has recently received a legacy of $5,000.

A CARD

I shipped to you on Tuesday one barrel of apples for the Orphanage. Best wishes,
T. E. BRICKHOUSE.

Bro. Brickhouse has, for several years, remembered the Orphans Thanksgiving, Christmas and Easter.

Below I give a note from an "old" cousin, whose name will be familiar to others who used to write to the Corner:

Dear Mr. Carter:
Enclosed with this is a little Easter gift for the Orphanage. I trust that you are enjoying the work and that every thing is moving along in good shape. Be assured that my very best wishes are with you, for it is a work I love.

Very truly yours,
JESSIE E. MASSEY.

Donations like that count for something and if this could be an example for others, and I hope it will, the situation would soon be relieved.

We would appreciate it very much if some of our friends would send some cuttings of rose bushes and shrubbery for the yard.

DONATIONS:

A friend, Franklin, Va., two sheets; T. E. Brickhouse, one barrel apples; C. A. Hughes, 1½ gallons oysters; Spoon's Medicine Co., 3 boxes Pneumonia cure, 2 boxes baking powders, 2 boxes lye; Mrs. Sallie and Clyde Iseley, 2 hens, 1 dozen eggs, 1 peck seed beans, ½ bushel walnuts, ½ gallon peanuts, 1 gallon pop corn; Mrs. Jerome Iseley, 1 dozen eggs; Mrs. J. A. Iseley, 1 dozen eggs; Mrs. J. W. Kernodle and mother, seed beans and corn, 3 blouses for boys; A Friend, 2 cakes soap; Holt & May, 2 frying pans, 5 pounds candy and 4 vegetable dishes,—money collected by Mrs. Woodward; at Foster's Shoe Store, 4 hens; John A. Mills, $5.00 for Easter dinner. Rosemont's Missionary Society, Norfolk, Va., 1 quilt.

Semora, N. C., March 25, 1913.

Dear Uncle Emory:

I am at grandpa's today, and thought would write you and send my dues until May, which is fifty cents.

I am glad you and the children are getting on nicely at the Orphanage.

I like to stay out doors this pretty weather and watch the little chickens run around

I can do right many cute things now and would enjoy a visit to the Orphanage as I love little children.

Love for the children, Aunt Lovie, and yourself

Stem, N. C., March 21, 1913.,

Dear Uncle Emory:

Enclosed you will find my dime for March. Mamma has been right sick for the last two or three days, but she is improving. Papa and Miss Grace have quite a time cooking and teaching when Mamma gets sick. Mamma says I am so jolly that I am lots of company to her when the others are away.

Sincerely,

OUR CHILDREN AND THE CHURCH.

One of the most serious problems confronting the Church of today, without regard to denomination, is what is known as the Child Problem—this is, how to keep the children in touch with the Church.

Years ago there was no such problem. The children were early taught that they were a part of the Church, baptized non-communicants, and therefore when they reached years of discretion, they allied themselves with the Church, as a matter of course, and when one failed to do so, it was a subject of comment.

Now all that is past. From every church comes the complaint that children seldom attend church services, and in consequence when the old people pass away, there are few to take their places, and therefore the membership soon decreases. This is more the case in the city than in the town or country.

This is truly a serious problem, and if left unsolved, it will take no prophet to tell us what the end will be.

Some insist that the solution is to be found in special services for the children and the preaching a sermon adapted to their comprehension. We have at times attended such special services, and the efforts made to simplify the truth and bring it down to the level of the child's mind always brings up the memory of a story told us by Dr. Wm. Dinwiddie, who was formerly pastor at Lexington, Ky.

The different pastors of Lexington alternated in preaching on Sunday afternoons to the inmates of the Lunatic Asylum near the city. One of these unbalanced men said to the Superintendent: "Doctor, these preachers that come out here ought to be informed that we are lunatics, not idiots."

Some may hold the children by special sermons, but unless they be gifted in that line, they may at the same time fail to hold the adults.

We are conservative enough to believe that it will be difficult to improve on the old ways, when the children were trained from early years to attend church, whereby they formed the church-going habit, and each Sunday found the family in one pew worshipping God by their presence at least. In this way the child became identified with the Church, and in after life he found it difficult to shake off the idea that he was a part of the Church. This loyalty to the church was further enhanced by real pastoral visiting, when the pastor catechised the children and pressed upon them the claims of Christ.

It seems to us that this last practice, now lying in innocuous desuetude, is what we especially need for the solution of the Child Problem.—Presbyterian Standard.

FROM THE FIELD.

Cypress Chapel, Nansemond Co., Va., now seems to be in a good working condition. I spent Wednesday night, March 19th, with our beloved Bro. A. L. Harrell, Secretary of the church. Bro. Harrell is a most earnest worker in the old church. We are now looking forward to having in the near future some improvements made to the house of worship. Some want a new house of worship. The Lord will help all who try to help themselves.

Our beloved Bro. A. L. Harrell has a very interesting family and they know how to make any one feel at home. His father, Deacon E. R. Harrell, was there and it was his eightieth birthday, Uncle Ned, as we call him, was looking well and all present seemed to be full of gladness and gratitude to God for the happy occasion. He has been one of our most faithful workers at Cypress Chapel and also one of our oldest and leading Deacons. Our beloved Bro. and father in Israel had not been very long out of Lake View Hospital, Suffolk, Va., where he had a very successful surgical operation. He is surely a power for good in this old church and neighborhood. May the Lord spare this dear one with us many years yet to work for Jesus, and his blessed cause.

I found in the home of Deacon E. R. Harrell, 28 years ago when I came to Cypress Chapel as pastor, a father, a mother, brothers and sisters. God will verify His promises unto his children.

H. H. B., Pastor.

WOMAN'S GREATEST TROUBLE

Big Sandy, Tenn.—Mrs. Lucy Cantrell, of this place, says: "Every two weeks, I had to go to bed and stay there several days. I suffered untold misery. Nothing seemed to help me, until I tried Cardui, the woman's tonic. Although I had been afflicted with womanly weaknesses for seven years, Cardui helped me more than anything else ever did. It is surely the best tonic for women on earth." Weakness is woman's greatest trouble. Cardui is woman's greatest medicine, because it overcomes the weakness and brings back strength. In the past 50 years, Cardui helped over a million women. Try it for your troubles, today.

NOTES ON S. S. LESSON

The Sale of a Birthright and Advantage Taken by a Trick.

Subject for April.—Jacob and Esau.

Time.—B. C. 1760.

Place.—Beersheba.

Persons.—Isaac, Rebekah, Jacob, Esau.

Golden Text.—"Jehovah is a God of justice; blessed are all they that wait for Him." Isa. 30:18.

Leading Thought.—God will do what is best for us if we leave our lives in his hands.

Our last lesson was about the marriage of Isaac and Rebekah. To them were born twin boys. Esau was the first born and Jacob the other.

Abraham had died at the age of 175 years. His sons, Ishmael and Isaac, placed his body beside that of Sarah in the cave of Machpelah. Isaac became the head of the chosen family.

The purpose of this lesson is to show how by gross, false, inexcusable trickery Rebekah and Jacob deceived Isaac and cheated Esau.

It is shown how deceit and wrong will break up family ties. No doubt a feeling between Isaac and Rebekah arose. Esau was embittered. Jacob was forced to leave the old home and live elsewhere.

NOTES ON THE LESSON.

The twins grew to manhood. Esau led the roving life of a hunter and was the father's favorite. Jacob was a home-body, a farmer and herd tender, and the mother's pet. Family friction grew out of it and the lines were drawn with two on either side.

Isaac was old, almost if not wholly blind, probably bed ridden. He decided to make his will. In those days wills were not written. A large part of the will was the patriarchal blessing. He told Esau of his plans. Rebekah learned of this and communicated the news to Jacob. Then in Esau's absence the plot and its consummation, whereby the blessing was unintentionally bestowed upon Jacob.

Though blind, his hearing was sound. "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau." Jacob knew he was under suspicion and no doubt conscience was smiting him terribly. After the blessing, again the question in verse 24, "Art thou my very son Esau? And he said I am." A direct and positive falsehood.

Soon the return of Esau and the discovery of the trickery. Note the expressions, "And Isaac trembled very exceedingly" and "Esau * * * cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry."

Esau's question "Hast thou but one blessing my father?" And to Esau were given such blessings as he could consistently with the first blessing.

The relation of this event to the future conduct and lives of the men is ground for a great deal of speculation and controversy. God did not will it. Jacob would have been as great without the blessing and his life cleaner. Nothing obtained by fraud could really benefit him.

FOR THE SUPERINTENDENT

Lesson Contrast.—In our last regular lesson we saw Isaac, son of Abraham, young and vigorous; in this lesson we find him aged and almost helpless through blindness. In that lesson we looked upon his happy wedding day; the setting up of a new family; in this lesson we have a glimpse into the life of that family after years have passed. In that lesson we looked upon a scene that was fair and beautiful because love reigned; in this lesson we look upon a dark and cloudy scene where self-seeking has eclipsed love. All the details connected with Isaac's marriage were open and honest and upright. The details of this lesson scene are secret, dishonest and deceitful. In that lesson people were working with God to their own highest advantage; in this lesson they are working against him to their own injury.

Object Lesson.—A crooked stick. Call a boy to the platform and ask him to straighten the stick. Why can't Joe get the crookedness out of the stick? Because it has grown that way. Twists got into it when it was soft and young, and now there is no way of getting them out. The only way for a branch to be straight when it is large is to keep growing straight when it is young. So the only way for a character to be straight and firm in mature years is by growing straight in youth. Crookedness that comes into our lives when we are young makes us trouble all the rest of our days.

QUESTION REVIEW

1. What two brothers did you meet in today's lesson?
2. Which did you like the better as seen in this one incident? (Esau.)
3. For what did Jacob sell his honor and his good name?
4. Did he make a good bargain?
5. Is any price high enough to pay one for the loss of his honor?
6. If God purposed to make Jacob the head of the family, what would have been his wise course? (Golden Text.)—Carrie B. Leonard.

LESSON ANNOUNCEMENT

To-day's lesson told of Jacob and Rebekah getting ahead of Esau and Isaac by deceit. Next Sunday's lesson tells of Jacob having to leave home because of this. When one gets into trouble through his own wrongdoings, he is apt to feel that God is far away from him. When Jacob was most lonely and sad, God came to him in a wonderful way. The well-known hymn, "Nearer, my God, to thee," is based on the story we are to study next Sunday. The famous stone under the seat of the British ancient Coronation Chair in Westminster Abbey, is also said to be connected with next Sunday's lesson. It is one of the most important events in the life story of Jacob. Let us all be present to see what there is in this old story to help in our present-day living.—Bertha D. Hageman.

NOTES ON C. E. TOPIC APRIL 6.

The Ideal Christian is a Humble Man or Woman.

FOR DAILY READING

Mon., Mar. 31.—Ideal Humility Phil. 2:5-11
Tues., Apr. 1.—Greatness of the humble Matt. 18:1-4
Wed., Apr. 2.—Humble towards God Jas. 4:6-10
Thurs., Apr. 3.—Humility's test 1 Pet. 5:5-7
Fri., Apr. 4.—Jesus' example John 13:12-17
Sat., Apr. 5.—A trying test Acts 23:1-5
Sun., Apr. 6.—Topic—The Ideal Christian. IV. His Humility. Matt. 20:20-28. (Consecration Meeting.)

The daily readings above give only a few of the many Bible references to humility. Take the concordance and find many, many others.

It is suggested that this be an "Anonymous meeting." The leader will have members write in a sentence or two on a slip of paper how they have fallen short of the ideal. These will be unsigned, and after being collected will be read by the leader and commented upon by him and other members. After this should come the roll call. Those who have written slips need take no further part, but answer present. Others may give some thought on the topic.

Let a member tell in his own words the story of the feet-washing recorded in John 13. Ask members for a definition of humility that will embody Christ's idea of it.

THOUGHTS ON THE TOPIC

The waters of God's blessings flow downward, and he who would drink them must stoop.—A. C. Dixon.

If you can't be a lighthouse, you can be a tallow candle.—Andrew Murray.

The dear Lord's best interpreters

Are humble human souls.—Whittier.

May we always have grace to take our proper place under the Master's table and plead for the crumbs.—A. C. Dixon.

There are sweet surprises awaiting many a humble soul fighting against great odds in the battle of a seemingly commonplace life.—Van Dyke.

Write on the blackboard, "How Can We Attain Humility?" Let the members answer. Humility can be cultivated like all other mental attitudes. It is largely a matter of will and self-knowledge. If we know ourselves we shall know that there is little to boast about.

DR. STALEY AND BROTHER SAILER.

The thoughtful reader will perhaps think it presumptuous to point out that Dr. Staley and Brother Sailer are both right, that there is no difference between them, that they were speaking of the actual conditions and rightly, but from different view-points.

Dr. Staley speaks of the deplorable condition of many schools and of the incompetency of many teachers, and thinks the rich have a harder time educating their children than the poor of his immediate parish. And Dr. Staley is entirely right. He could furnish testimony under oath of every statement he makes and many others can come to his rescue, if there should be need.

Brother Sailer disagrees with our genial Doctor and says that the injustices of the extremely rich make education impossible for the extremely poor, who are ground down in poverty and misery by the great lords of high finance, and Brother Sailer is entirely right. He can prove every statement he makes, and others could come to his rescue, if there should be need.

The difference between the statements of these brethren is due to the viewpoint from which they write. Dr. Staley writes from the viewpoint of a prosperous Southern town, where the extremely poor and the extremely rich do not exist, but where there are some people of large wealth and some who are tolerably poor. His observation is that under these conditions the wealthy have equally as difficult a time to educate their children as the poor. I believe that every keen observer of such social conditions will agree with him.

Now Brother Sailer lives in Boston or right near there, in a section where massive wealth and intolerable poverty dwell side by side. He knows that conditions in the homes of the extremely poor are such that education is impossible to them, unless it be by charity. And Brother Sailer has a whole array of social observers and writers to substantiate his assertions. He and Dr. Staley are both right and give us correct, unbiased pictures of real conditions, but the conditions they describe are different—that is all.

In this connection it would also perhaps not be amiss to set forth another truism, of which Dr. Staley is a living evidence, that large wealth nor even a competency is not an essential condition of getting an education. The records here show that thirty to forty young men annually earn a large portion of their way through College, and yet they are good students. Every College can show similar instances. Dr. Staley's point is well taken, when he insists that a poor boy is not necessarily denied the blessings of a thorough education. He who really wishes to be educated will find a way to become so or make a way of his own. W. A. HARPER.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE—AND OTHERS.

Recently the Foreign Missions Committee of the Eastern Virginia Conference sent a communication to each pastor and church in the conference asking their consideration and action on seven important points. One of those points has reference to missionary magazines and is as follows: "Whereas, the 'Christian Missionary,' our denominational missionary magazine, and 'Men and Missions,' the virile missionary organ of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, are now for a short time, being offered for the price of one, fifty cents per year, we ask you to look after securing a list of subscribers in your congregation and send the same to Rev. M. T. Morrill, D. D., Dayton, Ohio."

The committee regards this as an important matter, for our great need is to be informed on missionary work, and especially our own work. The missionary magazine ought to be in every Christian home for our children to read. If there is any lack in interest in missions it is because we are not informed on missions. Personally I regard these two missionary magazines as indispensable. Every man should read not only our own missionary periodical but that strong "Men and Missions" that will fire your heart with new zeal. These two now for a short time are being offered a year together for fifty cents. We believe that each pastor owes it to his people to make a thorough canvass and give them the privilege of this offer. Brother pastors, will you please look after this and do much good in several ways?

HELPING OTHERS TO CHRIST.

As Jesus went about doing good, he came once from the coast of Tyre and Sidon to the east side of the sea of Galilee and went up into a mountain near the sea and sat down. And great multitudes came unto him having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed and many others and cast them down at Jesus' feet; and he healed them.

This is a scene of exquisite beauty, tenderness and inspiration. Here is a hospital in a mountain near the sea. Its foundations are the mountains. Its roof is the open heavens. Its walls are the expanse of the universe. Its one physician is Jesus. Its servants are the disciples of Christ and those who brought afflicted ones to Christ. There is no mention of money, food nor shelter at its opening; but there is healing power. There is Divine love and mercy, and sympathizing friends and loved ones. The friendly personal effort as manifested in this scene is certainly very striking. Multitudes came bringing others with them to Christ. See! there comes a man yonder leading a blind man over mountain paths. Look! there come some men bringing a lame man; and here comes one with an individual that can not speak; and over there are some friends bringing some one that is maimed. Streaming out of the mountain and up its sides are great multitudes and each one is bringing some afflicted person to Jesus. Their faith is wonderful. They cast those they brought down at the feet of Jesus. They believed that Jesus could and would heal them. This is a great picture. Jesus seated in a mountain with the lame, blind, dumb, maimed and many others at his feet and standing near are the friends who brought them; and Christ is healing the afflicted and friends are rejoicing and glorifying God.

The personal equation in bringing souls to Christ is marvelous. Of the recorded instances of healing in the New Testament about three times as many were brought to Christ as came without any personal aid. Many of those brought could never have gotten to Christ without some personal help; but once at the feet of Jesus they were healed. The missionary spirit and aspect of the Christian life is one of service, sacrifice and suffering. Christ bore our griefs and carried our sorrows not only on the cross, but daily in his life. His life was a daily martyrdom. If we would be like Christ—like Him who went about doing good—we too must serve God and humanity.

P. H. FLEMING.

A JUDGE'S AND A PHYSICIAN'S SENTENCE.

Sir Thomas Brown, a noted English physician and writer, once observed that a physician might pronounce a sentence of approaching death with far less serious effect upon the subject than if a judge had done so. He concludes, therefore, that it is not so much death that men dread as it is the circumstances attending it. Jerry Taylor, an eminent religious writer, thought it worth while to write an extended treatise on this same subject of death. His book is known as "Holy Dying." There are many other evidences in the literature of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries that writers were then concerned far more than now with the question of dying. Now attention of writers appears to be directed more especially to the question of living, taking for granted that the problem of living having once been correctly solved, the question of dying becomes of little concern. It is yet, however, a common belief that the circumstances attending one's departure from life has an important bearing upon his welfare in the next world. Even if a drunkard dies under the influence of whiskey while at church in an attitude of worship, there is a different feeling as to his probable future than if death had found him in a saloon. There is a widespread feeling still amongst us that the chances of eternal happiness are much better for the shallow-soil Christian who has to be reclaimed at every annual revival, if he should die immediately after such revival rather than towards the end of the year. The high plain of abiding faith should be the aim of every Christian, so that death can have no terror for him. But who of us live hourly, year in and year out, on this high Christian plain? who of us but lapses through lethargy or some other cause, now and then, into such states of soul and complexion of conduct that we are afraid of death? Sin, therefore, makes us cowards, but righteousness makes us bold and fearless. Were it not for the consciousness of sin adding weight to the judge's sentence, his "you must die" would be no more terrible than if uttered by the physician by the sick bed.

MISSION COLLECTIONS.

Rev. J. Lee Johnson has preached a missionary sermon at each of his churches since the annual conference and taken a missionary collection. The aggregate amount collected from his field as a result of obeying the request of conference to preach a missionary sermon some time this spring at each church amounted to about $75.00.

If every minister taking work in the conference would follow the example of Bro. Johnson and take the collection for Foreign Missions the conference could raise in this way about $500.00 for the cause of our missionary work.

We can do great things if we will trust God with great faith, and follow Him obediently. Let all the other ministers in the conference preach on missions, take the collection as requested by the conference, send the money to Bro. W. J. Ballentine, Treas., report the amount to me and I will draw drafts for the payment of the amount to our Mission Board. This plan will enable the conference to have credit for the amount collected and give the benefit of the amount so raised to the purpose for which it was raised.

GETTING THE CLASS TO RUN THINGS.

Giving the class the right to run its own affairs was once thought to be rather risky; but, instead of doing things which the church did not approve after being organized, the danger has proved to be that the class would not do anything. Where the class has taken hold, the spiritual standard has been raised, not lowered; the membership drawn toward the church, not away from it. However, although class organization is now in high favor everywhere, it is still true that lack of confidence on the part of superintendents and teachers has much to do with failure to induce the members to go ahead. But another and more important reason is lack of knowledge of methods.—Ex.

CHRISTIAN BIBLICAL INSTITUTE AND DEFIANCE COLLEGE NOTES.

The Winter term of school has come to a close. Members of the faculty express themselves as highly gratified by the results. A number of new students are already in for the Spring term, while a large number are planning to be in for the special normal term, May 12 to August 8. This normal term, while open to all students, will be of special value to preachers and teachers. It is hoped that many ministers will arrange to spend their vacations in study here at that time.

The addition to, and the improvements in Weston Hall have been begun. The total cost of this undertaking will probably be over $10,000. It is hoped that all will be complete, including the installation of the new pipe organ, before commencement.

The wind storm of March 22 tore off a portion of the roof from Defiance Hall; and did considerable damage to other buildings, the total loss being about $200.

Dean A. G. Caris attended the meeting of the North Central College Association at Chicago March 21-22. This Association includes the standard colleges of Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and some of the north western states.

The Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. lecture course this year was an entire success in every way. A strong course of lyceum lectures has been given each year for several years past. But never until this year has the committee been able to close the year without a deficit. This year the undertaking was a distinct financial success.

The writer attended the meeting of the Religious Education Association at Cleveland March 10-13. This was the tenth annual meeting of the association since its organization. The work of this association is divided into fourteen different departments, each of which held separate meetings in the Cleveland. There were in all forty-four separate meetings held, and something over one-hundred and fifty addresses delivered. The convention was attended by educators from the public schools, colleges, and seminaries from all parts of the United States and Canada. Notable progress has been made in religious education within the last ten years. The next meeting will be held at New Haven, Conn. Pres. Thwing, of Western Reserve University, was elected president of the association.

The new College Catalogue is just out. Send for a copy if you have not seen it. The new catalogue covers the calendar year, from January to January, instead of the school year, from June to June as heretofore. The total number of different students for the past year was 567 distributed among states and countries as follows: Argentina 1, Cuba 18, District of Columbia 2, Illinois 7, Indiana 25, Japan 4, Louisiana 1, Massachusetts 2, Michigan 4, Montana 1, New Jersey 1, New York 8, North Carolina 1, Ohio 478, Oklahoma 1, Pennsylvania 17, Spain 1, Wyoming 1.

COLUMBUS, GA.

We have just closed a meeting at the Christian church, North Highlands, Columbus. It was one of the greatest meetings witnessed at this place in all the history of the church. It was a meeting of victory. We had with us Rev. L. C. Douthit, of Walhalla, S. C., who did the preaching with Holy Ghost power. The power of God was so manifest in our midst that people could not sleep at night because of their sins, but would get up out of bed and pray. One night after the evangelist had preached a forceful sermon upon the subject of the unpardonable sin there were not less than two hundred penitents that bowed for prayer. There were about forty-five professions during the meeting and many additions to the church and the end is not yet, as Bro. Douthit is yet in the city, holding a meeting at another church and many of those under conviction are attending his services, so we are expecting many more yet to come into the church before Brother Douthit leaves the city. At the last meeting of our annual conference the Georgia and Alabama Conference obligated to raise the sum of $75.00 for missions, including all churches in the conference. But we are glad to report that our church alone raised $109.50 for missions after Brother Douthit had discussed the subject at the eleven o'clock service on the third Sunday. Our church here is flourishing spiritually, and moving up along all lines, and we are looking to our heavenly Father for still greater things. I can heartily recommend Brother Douthit to any of my brethren in North Carolina and Virginia or any other place where our pastors desire a strong man to assist them in revival meetings. He devotes all of his time to evangelistic work and he has strong endorsements from fields in which he has labored as being a consecrated evangelist and devout man of God. He has peculiar gifts for evangelistic work. His messages are strong and forceful and carry with them deep conviction, and it can truly be said of him that he has power with God and with men. You can get in touch with him at any time by addressing him at Walhalla, S. C. He has a few open dates yet for this year, but is fast filling his slate for the entire year. So those desiring his help had better confer with him at once, as all open dates will likely soon be filled. He is at this time engaged in a revival meeting in the Protestant Methodist church of Columbus, which is starting off with great interest. Already the altar is being crowded with anxious penitents seeking the Lord. After he gets through at this point he is to assist me in a revival meeting in the Christian church at Girard, Ala. This is a place where a revival is very much needed and we do not believe that our heavenly father is going to disappoint us in the time of need and we desire the prayers of all of God's children in behalf of this meeting. Let every one earnestly beseech God for victory.

We earnestly desire to see our work built up along all lines and we want this to be the best year of all our life.

My wife and I have laid our lives upon the altar for service and I expect to devote all of my time to the work hereafter and I am now moving from Roanoke, Ala. to Columbus, Ga., so that I may give all of my time to the work. The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few. So I am praying the Lord of the harvest and I expect to help Him answer that prayer in a measure by going into the harvest myself. In conclusion I will say that my previous address has been Roanoke, Ala., but hereafter it will be Columbus, Ga. I ask an interest in the prayers of all praying people that God may direct my path in all things. Yours in his service,

B. F. YOUNG, Pastor.

BRIEFS.

He who walks through life with an even temper and a gentle patience, patient with himself, patient with others, patient with difficulties and crosses—he has an everyday greatness beyond that which is won in battle or chanted in cathedrals.—Dewey.

Children's Missionary Stories

STORIES are—yes, must be—used by every wide-awake worker among, or leader or teacher of, children.

MISSIONARY STORIES seem to have been the one field well-nigh overlooked until Mrs. Alice Moreton Burnett, Corresponding Secretary for the Woman's Board for Home Missions of the Christian Church, made a compilation of thirty interesting, instructive stories pertaining especially and directly to missions that are sure to be appreciated by workers, teachers, leaders, pastors, fathers, mothers—and the children.

Some of the Important Events of both Home Missions and Foreign Missions are also included, together with Suggestions For Junior Leaders.

They make a book 5 x 7 inches in size, 128 pages, red cloth binding—a handsome, attractive volume. Price 35c per copy postpaid.

THE HIGHER VISION.

It is well for us to have a vision which takes into its embrace both earthly and heavenly things. It is wise for us to view the little affairs of life, but never to the exclusion of the great and eternal realities which call for our best attention. All of us must confess that too often we yield to the temptation to keep our eyes upon material substances and transitory affairs, in the meantime forgetting the much higher ranges of eternal substances and compensating riches. The late Dr. McLaren, of England, and later of Scotland, said: "It is wise for us to look at the dangers, to be fully aware of the perils, to be tremblingly conscious of our own weakness; but it is folly and faithlessness to look at the danger so exclusively, as that either one or the other, or both of them combined, shall obscure to our sight the far greater and confidence—giving truth of the knowledge, the sympathy and the extended protecting hand of our Brother and our Lord. We belong to Him, if we have yielded our hearts to Him, and He will not suffer His holy one to see corruption, here and hereafter." This is the true perspective and the true proportion. There are Christians who go to the extreme of keeping their minds most largely upon religious matters. They are passionately fond of discussing the prophecies of the Bible, and they spend a good deal of time in figuring out the fulfillment of the prophecies. Others see but little else in the Bible than certain doctrinal subjects, and day and night they are absorbed in them. It would be better for them if they were to devote much less time to such things, and more to their home duties and civil obligations, and so is the lower one.

The Best Bargain You Ever Made

HOW do you measure the value of a bargain? Suppose you bought an engine that did practically all of your hardest work for you—sawing, pumping, grinding, etc.—and that paid for itself in a short time. Would you call that a good bargain?

An IHC engine will do all that, and more. Having paid for itself, it continues to earn its way by working steadily year after year until you, like our Clay County friend who has used an IHC engine for six years, will say, "My IHC engine is the best bargain I ever made."

The ground piston rings insure maximum power from the explosion. The ignition apparatus can be understood at a glance. The fuel mixer is the most effective and simplest known. Moving parts are perfectly balanced. Bearings are large and carefully fitted.

IHC engines are made in all styles—vertical and horizontal, portable and stationary, air and water-cooled; in sizes from 1 to 50-horse power, to operate on gas, gasoline, naphtha, distillate, kerosene or alcohol. Gasoline and kerosene tractors, 12 to 60-horse power.

THE HORRORS OF CHINESE MEDICINE.

Mrs. Arthur Smith describes in the Medical Missionary the suffering caused by ignorant native doctors in China. "If a wound is discharging pus a plaster is put on to keep the discharge in. If the pus works through this, a second plaster is superadded. For dog bites a circle is described around the wound and a picture of a tiger drawn on the skin within the circle; the tiger being stronger than the dog will overcome it and the man will get well. Ear troubles are treated with puncture in order to let the pain out. The insane are commonly tied to stones and kept out of doors in all weathers. The heads of sick children are seared with hot irons to let out the devils. A woman had a hip sore which was discharging freely. Her well-meaning husband came to the doctor and described a curious white string which he had been attempting to pull out. This proved to be the sciatic nerve. When little children are dying they are thrown out into the street for the dead-cart to pick up. If a child should be allowed to die in its bed its spirit would come back to haunt the home.

They were both cured and the interest awakened by this case led eventually to the founding of a church of 100 members. HAVING A BAD INFLUENCE OVER OURSELVES.

At a dinner given to one of our formest writers a few years ago in New York, the guest of honor rose to reply to the series of generous tributes which had been paid to him, and he said that he could not quite understand all the noble things that had been attributed to him, for he had long been in the habit of ascribing his successes to the good-will and helpfulness of the people who had been so cordial towards his efforts, and his failures and mistakes he had been accustomed to attribute to his own fault.

Do we not, most of us, think of bad influences as proceeding mainly from outside of us? Do we consider the possibility of auto-infection or of having our own hearts pump up influences and delusions which proceed wholly from within and are created there? James noted this tendency to lay our troubles at the door of some one else, and even to attribute our temptations to God himself, as he said, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, but each man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own lust, and enticed." It is quite possible for us to be tempted by our own minds more seriously than by other people. The early hermits who betook themselves to the deserts where no one could cross their path and no one could suggest any sin, suffered more tortures of temptation than men who stayed back in the world. The whole experiment turned out a failure, and they had to forsake it.

An idea, an image, a suggestion, a grudge, may arise in our hearts when we are quite alone. We nurse it and develop it until our whole being is aflame with resentment or desire, and yet no one has come near us or spoken to us or put any influence in our way. Healthy-minded people wake up to the reality of this sort of thing and just brush it all away as something which has proceeded from the wrong use of their own brains and can be destroyed by the right use of them. There comes to us some suggestion which in a wholesome state of mind would die out in a short time, but in a bad condition we incubate it and brood over it until the thing influences and dominates our action. We create an atmosphere around ourselves, and then as we look through it we see everybody discolored by it. The world, we think, is against us. But most times the people around us are not giving us any thought at all. The cheerful Sidney Smith used to be afflicted with shyness and self-consciousness in the presence of others. It seemed as if everybody's eyes were upon him and as if they were thinking of him every minute, but he discovered that people were not paying him a tenth of the attention he supposed, and after that he was quiet, free and blithe. If we are very self-conscious, people almost have to look at us and observe us.

The inside influences are stronger than the outside. We exaggerate the strength of outward temptation. In his stout, plain, manful epistle, James is not going to lay to other men something with which they have had nothing to do. The sincere soul cannot and will not represent himself as a good, innocent, helpless person wishing nothing so much as to be right, but pounced upon unawares by evil influences which are too much for him. There are masses of people who live where the outward environment is too much for them. So long as it continues what it is we cannot hope for the highest life, but there are other masses where nearly everything in the way of outward temptation is removed, and yet with that gone and at a distance the heart still rises of itself and goes after it.

The fight with temptation will be a losing one until we are shrewd and clear enough to know that the severest temptations will ever come from within. The Devil is well disposed toward letting us think that it comes mainly from outside. We ourselves, and not other men, are the most formidable influences with which we have to cope. With that settled we are in position to put up a good fight. But we are all wrong when we are growing convinced that the trouble comes from others.

It is sometimes possible to throw off within a brief space of a few hours some unhealthy mood by facing ourselves down and saying to the false influence from within that things are not as it represents them. Psalmists who had been listening too long to the fears and inventions of their own hearts would often deliberately rise up and rout the whole brood of specters and fancies with which their souls were being poisoned and make their hearts a source of inspiration again under God.

When we resist this bad influence from within it is wonderful how healthy and stimulating the presence and even the pressure of our fellow-men may be. We cannot be too thankful for the host of men and women who make up the daily life around us. We are wrong when we think of them mainly as tempting us. What they give to us of opportunity and incentive, of discipline and truth, makes us their debtors. We can never do for them what they have done for us. The number of times that their good-will, their patience, their readiness to start us again and forget our defects has come to our aid, must recall to us how often we have met and frustrated their offering with our own churlish temper and suspicion. When we create again around ourselves the right atmosphere our fellow-men will appear to us as bringing gifts which we can never repay.—S. S. Times.

THE TREACHERY OF ANGER.

Sinful anger is always selfish. It means that self-control is gone; self is in command. And when self is the master, we cannot even see or think clearly. As Carlyle wrote: "A wise man has well reminded us that in any controversy the instant we feel anger we have already ceased striving for truth, and have begun striving for ourselves." Then, no matter how righteous the cause in which we have grown angry, by our anger we at once injure it. It is as though a soldier in time of battle faced away from the enemy and commenced firing into his own men. Yet, even after we know that this is true, we cannot be sure of freedom from sinful anger except as self is put to death in Christ. For only Christ can keep us from attacking the causes and the persons whom we love most.—S. S. Times.

RECEIVING RESTFUL POWER.

Power is usually the quietest thing in the world. As a rule it makes the fewest motions and the least noise. It knows better than to spend itself in ways that count for nothing. And so we find ourselves in the presence of peace and quiet when we are in the presence of a man or woman of real power. "Fussiness is the death of force," says Stuart Holden. "Don't pick over things," says John Wanamaker. To live and work powerfully is to live and work restfully,—restfully to ourselves and to those about us. Peace is the gift of God to those who know most about the power of God. To enter into this blessing all that we have to do is to stop our own little, futile efforts, and receive God's power: receive by really trusting him.—S. S. Times.

FAITH IS BETTER.

It is a most reasonable proposition that true faith is far better than doubt and disbelief are. He who indulges in doubt toward God and the Bible is morally weak. He is easily defeated by the strong foes which militate against all that is best in one's nature. On the other hand, he who puts all of possible faith in God and in Christianity, is on the winning side. He is the true conqueror. His faith brings to his help the power of God, and the ministry of the best spiritual forces. A religious paper says: "The man who doubts God cannot possibly have the comfort and support of a victorious faith. The reason for this is obvious—faith cannot be stronger than the object upon which it depends. Dr. Howard A. Kelly, of Baltimore, a physician of world-wide reputation, having passed from the region of doubt and uncertainty to the experience of a buoyant and dominating confidence in God, recently wrote: "I place no limits to faith when once vested in God, the sum of all wisdom and knowledge; and I can trust Him, though I should have to stand alone before the world in declaring Him to be true." This is a lesson which some of us are slow to learn." A vast number of people have found that doubt leads to defeat. Many of them, after having tasted the bitterness of unbelief, and its issues, have come into the liberty and largeness of that faith which pleases God. Our belief toward God brings moral weakness and spiritual lameness to all who indulge in it. The greatest moral characters in all history were built by personal faith in God, the Bible, and in truth. There was never any true civilization without the dominance of faith.

STEEL Shingles Will Save You a Pile of Money

When you think how cheap Edwards Steel Shingles are, how much longer they last, how much easier they are to put on than commonplace roofing, it's hard to tell just how much we do save each buyer. It's a big pile of money.

They Beat Wood Shingles

The best wood shingles to be had nowadays seldom last 10 years, and it's a long, slow, tedious job putting them on. Besides, any building with wood shingles is a regular "fire trap"—apt to burn up any moment. Edwards Steel Shingles last over twice as long as wood, and as they come in big clusters of 100 or more, anybody can put them on in almost no time. Furthermore, they are absolutely fire-proof and are guaranteed so by a $10,000 Cash Bond.

No Chance of Rust

Unlike ordinary iron roofing, Edwards Steel Shingles never rust. With the Edwards Steel Shingle, the nails are completely covered by our patented interlocking device, and the edges are made absolutely rust-proof by the famous Edwards Turbinate Process. No chance for rust. Remember, too, that Edwards Steel Shingles are much easier to put on than any other roofing.

Write for Factory Prices, Freight Paid Edwards Steel Shingles are not only the longest lasting and easiest laid roof in the world, but their cost is amazingly low. That's because we sell direct from factory to user. And with 100,000 good customers, we only want a small 9% profit per sale. And we pay the freight. DEATHS

Taylor

Deacon E. B. Taylor died of heart failure at his home at Buies Creek, N. C., on March 17th, and was buried Masonically by the Masons of Buies Creek and Lillington, N. C., on the 18th.

Mr. Taylor was a prosperous farmer and an influential citizen of his community.

He leaves a wife and two children, F. H. Taylor, Clerk of the Superior Court of Harnett Co., and Mrs. W. A. Barrington, of Dunn, N. C.

He was born in Nash County, now Wilson County, on September 13th, 1847, and moved to Harnett County in 1869; and on February 5, 1874, was married to Miss Elizabeth C. Robinson, of Georgia, and to this union was born four children—Alice, Floyd, Cora, and Carra. Of these, Cora and Carra have preceded him to the home of the redeemed. In young manhood he gave himself to God and united with the Free Will Baptist church and later took membership with the Christian church at Pleasant Union, of which he has been a true and faithful member and deacon until his death. He was a great lover of his church and all of her enterprises, and especially the Christian Orphanage. He started and advocated the plan of taking a monthly collection for the Orphanage, which has been done for the past two years. He belonged to the Masonic Fraternity and was a great lover of all good society, and we feel that our loss will be heaven's gain. Peace to his ashes. His bereft wife and children have our deepest sympathy. His funeral was preached by the writer, assisted by Bro. Forbes, of the M. E. Church, and Prof. Campbell, of the Baptist church.

Lowe-Milster.

On March 28, 1913, in the parlors of Hotel Carolina, Greensboro, N. C., this writer united in the holy bonds of matrimony Mr. Jesse A. Lowe and Miss Annie May Milster, in the presence of a few select friends.

The groom is a most courteous assistant at the Hotel and deservedly popular, while the bride is a most attractive young lady from Danville, Va. The good wishes of many friends will follow them on life's journey. May Heaven smile upon them.

Byrd.

Mr. Walter Byrd, son of the late Hilary and Eliza Holland Byrd, died at the home of his brother, Oliver Byrd, near Holland, Va., on March 24, 1913, aged 53 years, 11 months, and 24 days. He leaves two sons, Rufus and Elisha, and two brothers, Oliver and Alexander, the latter of Suffolk, Va. Mr. Byrd was a member of Holy Neck church and a good man. He passed away, we believe, humbly trusting his Savior. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at the home and the body placed in the family burial place near by.

IMPLICIT TRUST.

To trust in a person implicitly is to trust in him with the fullness of one's heart. It is a trusting without any doubting, and without any wavering. One reason why some unconverted ones, having a desire to be saved, do not immediately receive the new life, is because they do not implicitly trust in Christ for salvation. They hold themselves back from a full committal of their hearts to the power of Christ to save them. They fear that, as they are so sinful, He will not be able to bring them out of their awful condition. Rev. W. F. Crafts says: "Lippen is a beautiful Scotch word, well understood by the common people, and means, to trust implicitly in." Chalmers beautifully applied the word to the act of faith, on a visit to a poor woman, who was dying. He found her very ignorant, incapable of comprehending the most common terms. With all the earnestness of his nature, he pointed out to her the way of salvation, spoke of faith in the Lord Jesus, of belief, of confidence, of trust. But all was of no avail; no spark of intelligence responded to his words. At last, guided by the Spirit of God, he said in gentle tones: 'Oh, woman! this just to lippen to Him.' 'Is that all?' said the dying woman. 'That's all,' said the minister. The word echoed in the woman's heart, and she died, believing in Jesus." As soon as she reached the point where she implicitly trusted in Christ as her only Savior, eternal life came into her soul, giving her a clear vision of the power of Christ to save her, and to at once fit her for a departure to heaven. No ordinance was necessary; no long time in mourning over sin was required; all that was essential to her salvation was a complete and simple trust in Christ. This is the true gospel.

PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

The preacher's message, so often becomes that of the logician, rather than that of a witness. Is it not well, real refreshing, at times to simply give personal testimony? The old fashioned social meetings have handed down to us that feature—the personal—which, if presented more frequently, would, it appears to me, bear an important fruitage. Should this personal feature apply to the usual pulpit ministrations with profit to the cause, would it not, also, apply to the too frequent unusual ministrations on the subject of Foreign Missions?

Personally, I should be delighted to render a personal testimony to my profound belief in Foreign Missions. Should not you be delighted to do the same? If it is what it is claimed to be, by some, you must be interested if you are just right with God. But my purpose was not to reason but to testify.

It is my joy to do my Master's will, and He commanded, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Elucidating this, the Apostle in Romans said, "How shall they preach except they be sent?" Then the Scriptures give us the notable instance of the church at Antioch sending out foreign missionaries. So I must obey my Master, must "Go preach" at least by sending as the Antioch Christians did.

Then, the very nature of our religion demands the conquest of the world for itself. It really cannot be true without embracing within its scope its complete conquest of all races and peoples. For "neither is there salvation in any other;" and, "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Again, I believe in Foreign missions because I know that He, creating of one blood all nations, I am necessarily a part of the great race of men which constitute the nations. Then all men are my brethren, unless I am hardened of heart I must desire the good things for my brethren of other races, and if I believe my religion to be true, as I do, I must believe that it, alone, is able to adequately provide for the intense wants, spiritual, social, and national, of foreign peoples. I must, then, possessing a good thing, pass it on to those without it.

And, lastly in this list, not the last reason that exists, by any means, but last in this brief list that I am now enumerating, is the one of distinctive gratitude. From Foreign Missions you and I and my loved ones received the gospel, which is the "power of God unto salvation." Without Foreign Missions you, who read this article, and I, would, most likely, be worshipping at the shrine of Thor, or some other heathen deity. Ignorance and vice having been the heritage into which we passed from our Fathers, we would pass the same on to our children. But because of Foreign Missions I, and you, have as an anchor of the soul, to-day a lively hope, which "we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil," which hope we, also, pass on as our heritage to our children. Therefore, I must believe in Foreign Missions, and in that, the greatest undertaking upon earth, I, if I am consistent, must be increasingly interested.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-eight years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 100 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

GREATER CONDEMNATION.

It is evident that some people are subject to a greater degree of divine condemnation than some others are. This truth was made plain by the declarations of Christ. Those who rejected Him, while they were being favored by all necessary light and gracious advantages, received far greater condemnation than did those who were not so highly favored.

It is also apparent that those people who assume to be very pious, but whose works are directly contrary to godly principles, are under much greater condemnation than are those who make no profession of religion. Christ spoke most scathing words against those scribes who made a great show of piety, but whose conduct was at variance with the common precepts of righteousness. He said that they loved the chief seats in the synagogues, and chief places at feasts; but they devoured the houses of widows, and for a pretence made long prayers; then He concluded with these words: "these shall receive greater condemnation." The reason for their greater condemnation was because of their pretensions to superior piety, while at the very time they were dealing most unjustly with those who were in their power. Their praying was a mere sham. If they supposed that their form of religious exercise would avail them much, they greatly deceived themselves. They would have been far less censurable if they had not made any profession of piety. And this example has forceful application to people in our land who make efforts to have others believe that they are very pious persons, when at the same time they are taking dishonest advantage of those that are misled by them. Such ones are always speaking in favor of the good cause, and especially of their interest in purely spiritual things. We should be on our guard against those who are over-pious. They deserve far greater condemnation than do those who do not profess to be Christians.

C. H. WETHERBE.

THE UNFOUGHT VICTORY.

No man ever won permanent victory over sin in his life by giving his chief attention to that sin. We defeat sin only by turning away from it. "Not avoiding the evil, but seeking the best,—that is the only hope." And the best is Christ. When we stop struggling with sin, and face Jesus Christ, receiving him in his fullness into our very being, we are amazed and delighted to find that the conflict with conscious, personal sin ceases. The surrender to Christ, with real faith in him, brings victory by freedom from even the desire to sin. We can never fight our way into this freedom. It comes only by ceasing to fight and commencing to trust.

When the Righteous Rule.

To their own hurt do men foist wicked persons to high positions either in politics, statecraft, or municipal management. Wise Solomon was right when he observed: "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn."

Divine Increase.

Sorrow and suffering have a large place in the divine economy. They are virtues not indeed, to be sought nor even desired, yet when found to be accepted and borne with fortitude and courage. For through these undesirable incidents God is increasing the world's sympathy, man's patience, and human forbearance: "He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow," said the Preacher (Eccle 1:18). It is good to increase knowledge, for the more one knows the more one can pity, sympathize with, suffer for. Through increased knowledge God increases man's sorrow, not as a curse to man, but as a blessing, that his patience, his fortitude, his sympathy may be the greater.

Power and Waste.

Whence the power by which the massive locomotive pulls its great string of cars, its infinite burden of freight? In the steam. Whence cometh the steam? From the great coal bin at which the locomotive, nervous and restless already, to begin its long run, stopped and stood dead still till an ample supply could be stored in its bunkers for the tremendous journey. And no engineer counted that time lost in which the coal, the source of energy and power, was being taken on. Yet a man starting on the perilous journey of the day, counts it lost time, counts it time that he hasn't to spare, in which to seek the source of his energy and strength in prayer. Starting the day's journey without prayer is no more lost time nor waste of energy than holding the locomotive for a needed supply of coal for the long pull.

Daily Intercourse With Deity.

Bobbie Burns, the great-hearted profligate and prodigal, but Scotland's sweetest singer, wrote in his diary, "If ever any young man in the vestibule of the world chances to throw his eyes over these pages, let him pay a warm attention to the following observations, as I assure him that they are the fruit of a poor devil's dear-bought experience. I have literally, like the great poet, the great gallant, and in consequence great fool, Solomon, turned my eyes to behold madness and folly; nay, I have with all the ardor of a lively, fanciful, and whimsical imagination shaken hands with their intoxicating friendship. In the first place, let my pupil, as he values his own peace, keep up a regular and warm intercourse with the Deity." The safe-guard of every young man's life is daily prayer.

Keep Getting Up.

David Graham Phillips related that when he was a boy, skating, another boy said to him enviously, "How did you learn to skate so well?" "Oh, just by getting up every time I fell down," said I. And that was the way Phillips came to be a success as a writer—just by getting up every time he fell down. It is not the one who falls down that fails; it is the one who does not keep on getting up when he has fallen. Keep on getting up, brother. By the grace of God you will stay up after awhile.

Ants.

Not men of brain, but of soul; those of restless energy, but those of consecration, prove the saving of the world. Voltaire's brain was big enough, and Voltaire's energy without bounds; but where are the results of his labors today, and the achievements of his monumental efforts? A recent scientist declared, "If ants had better brains than men they would either destroy the human race, or reduce it to a state of slavery." Not unless the ant had a soul in keeping with his brain, and an unselfish devotion to the good of others and the glory of his Creator. "For by strength shall no man prevail." (I Samuel 2:9).

The Longest and Best.

Many omit reading Psalm 119 because of its length. Yet this Psalm contains the very sum and substance of both Old and New Testaments. Again and again, for one hundred and seventy-six times,—for that is the number of its verses—it points out man's greatest need, God's law. In every verse of that long chapter the word law, in one form or another—"statute, commandment, precept, judgment, word"—is used. And this is the meaning, the purpose of the Word of God, to teach us His law, His will, His testimony. The longest is the best because it brings us forcibly face to face with the necessity of God's law. "The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul."

Number 41,435.

To conceal his identity, and cover his besmirched name, they have just given him a number. Julian Hawthorne employed all the powers of his inherited genius, used the magic of the printer's highest art, summoned all the assets bequeathed to him in the influence of a noble family name—to get rich. His hopes were realized, success crowned his effort, checks and notes poured in upon him by the tens of thousands. And now, with honor gone, citizenship taken away, removed from home and loved ones, locked in a federal prison to serve time for deceiving the poor, even his name is taken from him, and is just given a number, 41,435. The erratic one may at last consider the wise one's word printed large in sacred writ long years ago (Prov. 28:22): "He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him."

Difference In Religious Opinion.

It is the irony of fate that often when men have sought to be most intensely religious they have been most intensely irreligious. The bloodiest wars have been religious wars; the most pernicious feuds have been religious feuds; the narrowest and silliest opinions have been opinions bred and advocated as religious opinions. The fact is that truth, religious truth, is so large, so broad, so infinite in scope that the finite being who decides that he has made a "corner" on it, or grasped all of it makes a simpleton of himself. Lord Chesterfield sagaciously observed: "We all want the truth; but God only knows who has it. It is, therefore, absurd and cruel for us to hate or persecute one another on account of a difference of religious opinion."

Woman's Uplift.

Christ had no human or earthly father. But he was born of a woman, flesh of her flesh and off-spring of her love. Maybe that is why our Savior had no harsh word, no bit of criticism, no stinging rebuke in all His earthly career, for a woman. And through Him woman has been liberated from unspeakable thralldom and given her right place in the Christian world of privileges and opportunity. Every sect and creed and denomination of Christendom honors and elevates woman. Every sect and creed and dogma of paganism subjects her to unspeakable servitude. A missionary once asked a Hindu whether the different sects of his extensive religious system were agreed in any particular. "In two," replied the Hindu. "We agree in the sanctity of the cow, and the depravity of woman." And forty million women of India in bonds and chains more binding and galling than ever tortured the galley slaves of Ancient Greece testify to the veracity of the Hindu's laconic reply. Jesus Christ, and he alone of all the world's great teachers, is woman's true friend and liberator.

Worry Through, or Pray Through.

Many of us worry through our troubles when it would be far more comely for us to pray through. Charles M. Alexander, the well-known leader of song relates this personal experience; I was standing at a Bank counter in Liverpool, waiting for a clerk to come, I picked up a pen and began to print on a blotter, in large letters two words which had gripped me like a vice: Pray Through. I kept talking to a friend and printing until I had the big blotter filled from top to bottom with those two words. I transacted my business and went away. The next day my friend came to see me, and said he had a striking story to tell me. A business man came into the bank soon after we had gone. He had grown discouraged with business troubles. He started to transact some business with the same clerk over that blotter, when his eye caught the long column, Pray Through. "That is the very message I needed" said the business man. "I will pray through. I have tried to worry through in my own strength, and have merely mentioned my troubles to God; now I am going to pray the situation through until I get light." It is better to pray through than to worry through.

ON THE INCREASE.

Very few things continue to increase. The things of this present world all have their limitations. They begin, they grow, they develop; and then decay. This applies to flowers and to forests, to folks and families, to friends and fortunes, to enterprises and institutions. That which today seems perpetual and everlasting tomorrow begins to wither and to die.

No wonder John the Baptist, in speaking of Jesus said, He must increase, but I must decrease. John was speaking in the light of prophecy, and in the knowledge of human affairs; for we ourselves and all about us must decrease. Jesus alone, and the power of His might and majesty will increase and increase forever. God gave good Isaiah the power to see this when he wrote "Of the increase of his government there shall be no end forever." (Isa. 9:7). That is the only thing we mortals know anything about which is to increase forever—through time and through eternity. The government of Jesus Christ is on the increase, and this increase will continue forever, till it cover the earth even as the sands cover the sea-shore.

Even in outward growth His government is on the increase. It took about one hundred years to gain the first million converts. The second million were won in about twelve years. They are now being added at the rate of a million in six years.

In 1800 there were only about 70,000 Protestant converts in all pagan lands; fifty years later there were 211,000; one hundred years later, in 1900, there were 1,375,000; ten years later, in 1910, there were 2,223,000. In short it took a hundred years to win a million souls to Christ in foreign lands, 1800 to 1900, whereas that number has been won to Christ in those same land in the last ten years.

In 1858, scarcely more than half century ago, Protestant missions began in Japan. In 1912 there were 70,000 communicants in Protestant churches in that country alone—more converts than were in the whole non-Christian world prior to that time. On Christmas Day of 1887, a quarter of a century ago, the first convert to Christianity in Korea was baptized; now there are over 200,000 converts in that country alone—on an average of a convert every hour of the day and night since Protestant missions began work there.

Or, coming closer home. In the "good old days" of a hundred years ago here in America there were only 364,872 members of Protestant churches out of a population of five million, about one in every fifteen. Today in a population of eighty millions there are twenty million communicants of Protestant churches, one in every four persons.

One hundred years ago only one in every ten college students in America was a member of the church. Today one from every two, practically every other college student, 50 per cent. are members of the church.

Or putting the matter broadly: At the end of the second century A. D. there were in the world two million converts to Christ. At the end of the tenth century there were fifty million; at the end of the fifteenth, one hundred million; at the end of the eighteenth two hundred million; at the end of the nineteenth five hundred million. This speaks of the outward growth of Christ's government in the world.

Now bear some facts in mind like these: One hundred years ago there was not an asylum nor a retreat in Christendom even for the feeble minded, the lunatic or the idiotic. These unfortunates were supposed to be possessed of devils, and were treated as such, or confined as criminals. Homes and schools for the deaf, the dumb and the blind are all growths of Christendom and that, too, within the last century. Till men put the modern and benevolent interpretation on Christ's teaching a few years ago there was not an orphanage on earth, nor a public place of refuge for the worn and the weak and the weary to find rest and food and comfort—save to be treated as an outlaw and a criminal.

Even a hundred years ago when a man was shot down on the battle field in severe or fatal wound, he was left to suffering and his fate there, unless a comrade or ill-equipped ambulance bore him to a place of comfort and of comparative ease. Today wherever the warrior goes and grim battle does its deadly work the Red Cross goes with its hand of mercy and its errand of tender care and sympathy.

All other things, thoughts and theories of this earth rise, flourish and are doomed to decay; but the government of Jesus Christ will not only continue, but must increase forever. Reason teaches it, facts prove it and revelation proclaims it. "Of the increase of his government there shall be no end * * * forever."

THE FLOODS IN THE WEST.

Our columns last week and this tell of the intense suffering, the great destruction of property, and the tragic loss of life by flood in the West, particularly at Dayton, Ohio, where the loss was greatest.

No one can read for certainty the lesson of this dispensation of Providence. We just stand appalled before it, and think and speak of it as some awful and unavoidable happening. In God's sight, we are persuaded, nothing happens. Things seem to us to happen, simply because we cannot see the underlying cause, and that which is to result from the cause.

It behooves us now to bow before this great catastrophe, and strive in our hearts to make the most of it, opening our purses to help the needy and the distressed there.

As will be seen from reading Dr. J. P. Barrett's letter, our good brother, Rev. J. G. Bishop, D. D., and his devoted wife seem to have suffered as no others did of our public servants in Dayton. As Dr. Barrett writes, Bro. Bishop and wife were driven from home, were heavy losers financially, and were already living on a very meager salary. These two have literally worn themselves out working for the Christian church and for the advancement of God's kingdom. Now, in their old age, they are called upon to sustain a loss they cannot stand.

We believe that many who will read Dr. Barrett's letter will be moved to send Dr. Bishop a contribution.

Why not, CHRISTIAN SUN readers, unite in giving Brother and Sister Bishop a good purse to help them out now in this time of sore need? To this end we offer our services in collecting and forwarding to Bro. Bishop any amount that may be sent us. We will acknowledge same through THE SUN and forward the amount as soon as a sufficient sum is sent in to be of real worth. If you wish a part in this matter forward your check today.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Thank you, brethren, thank you. Now, all we ask is that you give THE SUN a square deal in your congregations.

—We can keep up the lick, and maintain The Sun at its present high standard, only on condition that our subscription list be doubled. And it is easy enough to double—if the pastors really care, and will help.

—From Rev. I. W. Johnson: "New CHRIS-TIAN SUN received. The improvement is fine, and I am much pleased. Accept my congratulations."

—Miss Elsie Bray, Nathalie, Va.: "I am much pleased with our new CHRISTIAN SUN. Am glad that we now have our own Publishing House and can print the paper at home."

—Rev. J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va.: "Received only one sample copy of the new SUN. I want ten a week for a month." Thanks Bro. Foster. We know what that means and you shall have them.

—Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C.: "Find enclosed $1.50 for THE CHRISTIAN SUN a year. The first number of the new SUN looks mighty good to me. Hold it up and let it shine. But do not let it say any more that I am seventy-five years old when I am only seventy-three years young."

—Bro. R. H. Joyner, Franklin, Va.: "Please find enclosed check for my subscription to THE SUN. I am glad the paper has moved home. I do hope that those who do not take their church paper will do so right away so they can see what the Christians are doing. My best wishes and heartiest congratulations."

—Rev. H. E. Rountree: "I received THE SUN yesterday in its new dress. I am proud of it and think it is the best it has ever been. I just can't help talking about it. I am canvassing for subscriptions. I hope to be able to send in many during the next month. I hope you are going to cut the sheets at the top of the pages." (Sure.)

—Rev. Henry Spencer Booth, Norfolk, Va.: "I congratulate the editor, the stock-holders generally and the mechanical staff upon this most auspicious beginning, together with the Christian church at large upon the possession of such an organ. I expected something good; but my expectations were entirely surpassed as I read, scrutinized and criticised the copy of the first edition (of THE SUN) from the new Publishing House.

—Brother pastor, will you help THE SUN now? Or are you still ashamed to mention it in your pulpits, or work for it among the intelligent members of your congregation? If you are ashamed of its shape, size and make up now, then you are ashamed of any and every denominational paper that we know anything about.

—We want our people to see THE SUN in its new and greatly improved form, and on that account we are sending the pastors sample copies for distribution.

—The date of the Woman's Missionary Mass Meeting at Elon College this Spring has been changed from May 14th to May 27th. This change was deemed advisable particularly on account of the meeting of the Young People's Convention at Burlington on May 29th, as many desired to attend both.

—Rev. L. I. Cox has just returned from "the South" where he has conducted two revival meetings for Rev. H. W. Elder, one at LaNette, Ala., and the other at Richland, Ga. Bro. Cox reports that he had a splendid good time with Pastor Elder and his good people. The Lord wonderfully blessed Bro. Cox's preaching in these meetings. There were some 50 or 60 professions of faith, and scores of church members renewed their covenant with the Lord. The congregations were good, the attention fine, and at some of the services many were turned away for lack of room.

—Leo D. Varien, a waiter in Buffalo, N. Y., was sentenced on March 21 to pay a fine of $500 or serve 180 days in jail for pressing unwelcome attentions on a young girl while riding in a street-car.

THE PASSING THROG.

—Both houses of Congress convened in extraordinary session April 7, the Executive and both branches of the congress being under Democratic auspices.

—Five hundred suffragettes invaded the capitol last Monday at the opening of Congress and presented a monster petition for a constitutional amendment allowing women to vote.

—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson is the daughter, and the grand-daughter of a minister, and is the seventh minister's daughter to become mistress of the White House. President Wilson is the son of a minister, and is the third minister's son to become President.

—The master builder of one of the largest and most powerful ships afloat, the Thunderer, can neither walk nor sit up, and has to be wheeled around the ship yard in an invalid's chair, says Youth's Companion. We admire the man's energy and pluck beyond words to tell, but we wish his great skill and ingenuity had been turned in some other direction.

—President Woodrow Wilson broke another precedent, one of more than a hundred years standing this time, when he went before Congress and delivered his message in person rather than by the printed page. Some of the staid and dignified were agog; but President Wilson, being a good speaker, had the same right to appear in person and establish a custom as Thomas Jefferson, who was a poor speaker, had to remain away and send in his message in writing. Precedents don't count much with Dr. Wilson.

—When the Panama canal is finished ships will save in travel from London to San Francisco 5,755 miles, the distance now being 13,814 miles, thus cutting off more than a third of the distance. From New York to San Francisco by ship will only be 5,189 miles, whereas the distance now is 13,358 miles, a saving of 8,069 miles. From New Orleans to San Francisco will only be 5,197 miles, whereas it is now 13,775 miles, a saving of 8,578 miles. Surely man never took such liberty with nature as he did in digging this Panama Canal.

DENOMINATIONAL BASEBALL.

A writer in these columns awhile ago asked the question, How increase interest in the Sunday-school? This laconic reply came forth from an observant reader, "Have your Sunday-school organize a base-ball team." We printed the reply but had no idea that the churches, in addition to the Sunday-schools, would take our "observant reader's" advice so readily. But presto; practically every evangelical denomination in the State organized, forthwith, a base-ball team and then they went up against one another in bold and bloody combat.

It is so set down in daily print, and it must be true.

The following accounts are taken from the dailies and we have not seen them denied:

"The Methodist fans made things interesting at athletic park yesterday, but the Baptists carried off their scalp with a whoop—the score being 6 to 2 in favor of the deep water folks." From which we gather that the Methodist will have to employ tom-a-hawks, or something equally as bloody, instead of fans, next time they enter into mortal combat with their deep water "brethren" on the athletic field.

Here is another affray which must have been equally as fatal. "The Christians played good ball, hit hard and put up a beautiful fight to the finish, but their batting was wild, their field work poor and in fact were no match for their opponents. The Presbyterians on the other hand had a splendid battery and received fine support by every man on duty." No wonder the Christians bit the dust before their stalwart Presbyterian opponents in an affray like that.

In the following the affray was not so long drawn out but we presume was equally as interesting and fatal, "What the Quakers did for the Presbyterians at athletic park last p. m. was enough, though the aggregation from Davidson made things lively, even thrilling, throughout."

Brethren times are growing better, the world is improving. The denominations have quit quarrelling and fighting one another from the pulpit and the sanctuary and are having their innings now out under the open sky, on the ball ground, between youngsters who can fight and enjoy the performance as they go. Whereat we take courage and press forward.

Rev. Neil Rowland, a Methodist evangelist, was conducting a revival a few years ago at Plymouth, a Christian church, when of a sudden two dogs near the door fell to fighting. "I thank God," cried the quick-witted evangelist, "I thank God that the devil has gone out of the folks and got out on the yard."

This writer has longed to see the day when the devil of denominational differences and schisms and divisions would get out of the church. It seems that the good day has dawned. Our denominational differences have escaped the sanctuary and taken refuge in the athletic field. There we feel that the affray though bloody, is of short duration, and is comparatively harmless in results.

We certainly are living in a progressive age and a merry time. Play ball!

FRANKLIN NOTES.

The great Bible Conference at Atlanta, Georgia, made us so enthusiastic that we thought we would write a great deal on the subject, but when we try to write it is difficult to decide what to write. All the speakers were good, but there is no doubt that Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, was the greatest teacher present. Dr. Broughton was the most popular preacher, and moved the congregation more than any other speaker.

We would like to give an account of two sermons preached by Dr. Broughton, first from the texts, "Then Jesus called his disciples unto him, and said, I have compassion on the multitude," and the second, "After that Jesus put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up; and he was restored, and saw every man clearly." In the first place he showed The Compassion of Jesus, and the second, he showed The Divine Touch, which makes man whole, and prepares him to see men as they are.

Dr. Morgan delivered eight lectures on the subject, "The Teaching of Christ Concerning the Kingdom of God." It was not our privilege to hear all of his lectures, as we did not arrive until the third day of the Conference. The vastness of the subject makes it impossible for us to say much on the subject.

He said that his purpose was not to deal with the subject exhaustively, but rather to survey the teaching of Jesus in outline, and to consider the actual words of the Lord. He endeavored to show the Fundamental Conception, some different phases of the one fact, as they are unified in the Lord, the Lord's view of the existing Anarchy, the redemptive process which the Lord revealed,—the cross, the church, the Conflict, the Crisis of the second Advent. He closed with the Individual Application of the Lord, or His revelation of final realization.

Dr. Morgan said in closing these lectures, "The Lord had to sift the ranks, because the Kingdom, ere it could be established, would demand strenuous toil, constant conflict. The only true attitude towards the Kingdom of God is that in which the whole life is surrendered. What is our attitude towards the Kingdom of God? Intellectual approbation, emotional attraction, and volitional antagonism? Then we are not in the Kingdom; we cannot eat its bread, we cannot help its King; and at last even that King, so fair, so lovely, so patient, so infinite in pity, even He will cast us out."

OLD FRIENDS.

A well-known and well-loved author tells us that, when she was a little girl, there hung in the family sitting-room a set of black walnut book-shelves, holding a motley collection of books that ranged from "The Arabian Nights" to "David Copperfield," and from "Scottish Chiefs" to "Ivanhoe." When she had read all of them, and it did not take her long, she began afresh, and read them all over again—a process that went on without interruption from the time she was six until she was sixteen. It no more occurred to her to grow tired of her friendly books than of the living friends with whom she played, and walked, and talked during those ten fruitful years.

She was better off, this clever child and future writer, than if she had had the innumerable story-books of the modern nursery, and the innumerable novels supplied by the public libraries to-day. She was far better off than if she had skimmed through volume after volume, forgetting each one before she had finished its successor, and reducing her vigorous mind to an intellectual pulp. The book that we never wish to read again, unless it be something very long and very serious, might just as well have been left unopened. It has yielded us no pleasure worth the having, it has played no part in our development. If after reading "David Copperfield," we never want to go back to it, never want to wander again with the child, David, through the London streets, or follow him on his perilous journey to Dover, it is not worth our while to have known the wonderful record of his adventures. The men and women to-day whose early reading was both a delight and an education, who love books and who have profited by them, were once little boys and girls in the country, who, like the child, Robert Burns, knew their scanty libraries by heart; or perhaps little boys and girls in towns, who like the child, Charles Lamb, saved, penny by penny, the money to buy some long-coveted volume at the book-shop. Those boys and girls were not likely to forget whether they had read a book or not. They never had to glance over the first chapters to see if names and episodes looked familiar, or said that they thought they had read "Quentin Durward" last winter, but could not remember what it was about.

When that distinguished scholar and critic, Sir Leslie Stephen, wanted an hour's recreation, he used to send one of his children to bring him a volume of Scott, any volume of Scott, from his library shelves. He left the choice to fate. True he liked some of the stories better than others, just as he liked some people whom he knew better than others; but all old friends, whether human beings or printed books, were welcome companions.—Youth's Companion.

THE OVERCOMING CHURCH

Annual Sermon, By Rev. L. I. Cox, President, Delivered Before the Western North Carolina Christian Conference.

Text.

"I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see."

"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."

"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."—Rev. 3:18, 21, 22.

This is the last of seven honors set before the Christian conquerors in the epistle to the seven churches; and the throne of which this blessing speaks is itself described in St. John's next vision.

We know what a throne it was which he saw unveiled before him. We see at once that this throne means the center of creation; that the glory of it is as of One invisible, and, except of his own will unknowable; and that in that heart and center of all things lives One who has suffered, One who has died. One who is and who ever has remained sinless: the Lamb that had been slain and dieth no more is in the midst of the throne.

Perfect sympathy with pain, perfect deliverance from evil, are there in absolute life and light; and the Lamb, the Victor-Victim, speaks, and says, "He that overcometh, I will give to him to sit down with me in my throne, even as I also overcome and sat down with my Father in his throne."

The Lord said to the church of Smyrna that He knew their poverty, but they were rich; and the testimony shows that their riches consisted of that which was finally to put them in possession of a crown of life.

Says James, "Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" "Faith," says Paul, "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

To be "rich toward God"—rich in the spiritual sense—is to have a clear title to these promises, to be an heir of that inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for us. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:29). And how, my brethren, do we obtain the promise; that is, through faith (Rom. 4:13, 14). "For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."

"For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect."

No wonder, then, that Paul should devote an entire chapter in Hebrews (chapter 11) to this important subject, setting forth the mighty achievements that have been accomplished, and the precious promises that have been obtained through faith; and that he should, in the first verse of the next chapter, as the grand conclusion to his argument, exhort Christians to lay aside every weight, and sin (of unbelief) that so easily beset them!

Nothing, my friends, will sooner dry up the springs of spirituality, and sink us into utter poverty in reference to the things of the kingdom of God, than to let faith go out and unbelief come in. For faith must enter into very action that is pleasing in His sight; and it is through faith, as the chief agent under the grace which is the gift of God, that we are to be saved (Heb. 11:16; Eph. 2:8).

So we see that faith is one of the principal elements of spiritual wealth. But no one grace is sufficient. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for," says Paul. Hence, hope is an inseparable accompaniment of faith (Heb. 11:1; Rom. 8:24, 25).

And again Paul tells us that faith works by love, and speaks in another place of being "rich in good works" (Gal. 5:6; Tim. 6:18). Hence love cannot be separated from faith. We, then, have before us the three objects associated together by Paul in (1 Cor. 13) faith, hope, and charity, or love; and the greatest of these is charity. Such is the gold tried by the fire which we are invited to buy (Rev. 3:18).

Thus in a formal and solemn manner we are counseled by the faithful and true witness, under the figures of gold, white raiment, and eye-salve, to seek from Him, speedily and earnestly, an increase of the heavenly graces of faith, hope, charity, that righteousness which He alone can furnish, and an unction from the Holy Spirit. But how is it possible that a people lacking these things should think themselves rich and increased with goods? It will be observed that no fault is found with the Laodiceans on account of the doctrines they hold. They are not accused of harboring any Jezebel in their midst, or of countenancing the doctrines of Baalam or the Nicolaitanes. So far as we can learn from the address to them, their belief is correct, and their theory sound. The inference, therefore, is that, having a correct theory, therewith they are content. They are satisfied with a correct form of doctrine, without its power.

My brethren, is not this the true condition of the Christian Church at the present time? Having received light concerning the closing events of this dispensation, and having a correct theoretical knowledge of the truths that pertain to the last generation of men, we are inclined to rest in this, to the neglect of the spiritual part of religion. It was by their actions, doubtless, not by their words, that the Laodiceans said they were rich, and increased with goods.

Having so much light and so much truth, what can we want besides? And if, with a commendable tenacity we defend the theory, and in the letter, so far as our outward life is concerned, conform to the increasing light upon the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus Christ, is not this righteousness complete?

Rich, and increased with goods, and needing nothing! Here is our failure. Our whole being should cry out for the spirit, the zeal, the fervency, the life, the power, of a living Christianity, and our righteousness should consist in a swallowing up of self and all its works in the merits of our Redeemer.

Are you on terms of friendship with character? Are you trying to walk humbly in His footsteps and obey His teaching? If not, read your fate in the cases of those in the parable, of whom it was said, "But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me." Happy they to whom the rightful Sovereign, the all-conquering King, at last can say, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Again the kingdom of God is placed before the Church as a matter of hope. The Lord did not teach His disciples a prayer which in two or three years was to become obsolete. The petition may as appropriately ascend from the lips of the patient, waiting flock in these last days, as from the lips of His first disciples, "Thy kingdom come."

We may each of us spend our lives either in the world or in God. If we live in God, "if that life which we now live in the flesh is lived by faith in the Son of God," then we are living in the world of reality; if we are living for the world, if we are setting our affections on things of earth, we are living in the midst of fatal delusion and fading shadows.

Obey Him, or disobey Him, at your pleasure and at your peril; believe Him, or disbelieve in Him, at your pleasure and at your peril; but He is, and His law is, the sole truth of your life. He who makes the Church of God depend on mere outward form, he who bases its high claims on some unprovable theory which may be fiction, builds upon the baseless and shifting sands of multitudes of views and practices such as higher criticism, and a great many other things, now thrust almost by force on groaning congregations and on alienated people.

The true Church depends solely on the presence of Christ. Where Christ is, there the Church is; and where love and holiness are, there Christ is.

Wherever we find the fruits of the Spirit which are love and holiness, there the Spirit is; and where the Spirit is, there the Church is. We must be true men, or we cannot be true Christians. Reason and conscience illumined by prayer—these are the torchbearers of eternal truth.

Seek truth, and you will find it, because God is the God of truth. If you desire heaven, you must, by the aid of Christ's Spirit, win it—you must win it by faithful obedience to the eternal laws of God. Reality, sincerity, holiness: the elementary Christian graces, faith, hope, love: the primary Christian duties, soberness, temperance, chastity, these are the things and these are the tenets of a true religion.

The life of faith follows the life of obedience; it is a step within a step higher toward the celestial state. It is characterized by the recognized presence of the Lord in all that one thinks and feels and does. Loyalty to Christ demands of us the uttermost of sincerity in the inward parts. Yet, are there not men who claim to be Christians and are living a lie? There are lives that are honey-combed by all manner of unfaithfulness, dishonesties, injustices, and injuries to others and by many secret sins. What does the lesson of loyalty to Christ have to teach us about these things? Are covered sins safely hidden? Are they out of sight forever? Oh, no; be sure your sin will find you out. It will plague you, spoil your happiness, make your life wretched.

What shall we do about all these things we have done? A life of loyalty to Christ means a life that is white, clean through and through. None can build a beautiful, shining character on covered sins. Joy is a part of a complete Christian life, and no one can be joyous with sins concealed in his heart. If you ask me what one thing is most necessary for the Christian worker, I answer unhesitatingly, personal holiness.

No gifts, however brilliant; no labors, however diligent, can ever supply the place of this. It stands to reason it must be so.

"To get to heaven," is a worthy desire, but it does not cover the scope of Christianity, nor does it satisfy the demands of the gospel, nor meet the soul's needs. Regardless of the future rewards of godliness, holiness of heart and life are profitable in all things here, in this world.

The life that is governed by the principles of godliness gets the best and escapes the worst in this world. He who follows after righteousness has everything to gain and nothing, absolutely nothing, to lose thereby in this life, and besides, has the promise of the life which is to come. It is the promise of God that to those who seek first His kingdom and His righteousness, all other necessary things shall be added.

The Master said that those who leave all for His sake and the gospel's shall receive an hundredfold now, in this time, and in the world to come, eternal life. But the emphasis of our godliness should be put where it belongs, and where Christ puts it—not on the hope and desire of future reward—but, as He says, for my sake and the gospel's.

Holiness of heart leads to holiness of life. The heart must be cleansed of all impurity if the life shall be pure. No doubt can arise in the mind of any right-thinking person concerning the rightfulness of this position. It admits of no controversy. It is a proposition the statement of which carries conviction to all. We are fearful that many fail to look at this matter in the proper light. Turn the light in on your heart. Make a close inspection. Resolve that, "My heart shall be clean of all sin and that my life shall be holy."

It is the declaration of the angel to Daniel, "For thou are greatly beloved." The angel brought this declaration direct from the courts of heaven. It expressed the state of feeling that existed there in regard to Daniel. Think of celestial beings, the highest in the universe—the Father, the Son, the holy angels—having such regard and esteem for a mortal man here upon earth as to authorize an angel to bear the message to him that he is greatly beloved. This is one of the highest pinnacles of glory to which mortals can attain; wealth of heart and soul beyond estimation.

Abraham reached another height when it could be said of him that he was the "friend of God;" and Enoch another, when it could be said of him that he "walked with God." Can we arrive, my friends, at any such attainments?

God is no respecter of persons; but He is a respecter of character. If in virtue and godliness we could equal these eminent men, we could move the divine love to equal depths. We, too, could be greatly beloved, could be friends of God, and could walk with Him. And we must be, my brethren, in our generation what they were in theirs.

There is a figure used in reference to the last church which denotes the closest union with God: "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me" (Rev. 3:20). To sup with the Lord denotes an intimacy equal to being greatly beloved by Him, walking with Him, or being His friend. How desirable a position!

Alas, for the evils of our nature, which cut us off from this communion! Oh, for grace to overcome these, that we may enjoy this spiritual union here, and finally enter the glories of His presence at the marriage supper of the Lamb!

The coming kingdom! This ought to be the all-absorbing topic with the present generation. Friends, are you ready for the issue? Are we overcomers? He who enters this kingdom enters it not merely for such a lifetime as men live in this present state, not to see it degenerate, not to see it overthrown by a succeeding and more powerful kingdom; but he enters it to participate in all its privileges and blessings, and to share its glories forever; for this kingdom is not to "be left to other people." Again, my friends, we ask you, are you ready? The terms of heirship are most liberal; "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Supreme satisfaction in the service of our Lord Jesus Christ is only possible where such conditions prevail. It may cost you self-denial. It may mean the crucifixion of certain things that you imagine add pleasure to your life, but you can never attain unto that blessed spiritual realization, where all your heart's desires are fixed on things above, until you shall bring your heart under supreme control to the highest law of its best being.

Oh, my brothers, aim high! For the honor of Christ, for the love of the Church, for the salvation of the flock, for your own soul's safety—aim high. Never rest satisfied with low standard. Even the world itself, in these days, expects much of you. Take heed unto the flock; take heed unto the doctrine, but, first of all, take heed unto yourself.

A PERSONAL LETTER TO HIS MEMBERS.

Dear Brethren:

I am asking the following brethren: R. A. Hyslop, T. E. Baird, E. Ed. Salyer, T. A. Walker, M. J. and Mesdames Logan McCloud, Bessie Epps, Ruth LeCler, Olivia Albright, to act as a Church Paper committee of this church from now until April 14. Your work will be to see how many subscriptions and renewals you can get to our church papers in that time.

The Herald of Gospel Liberty is our main church paper. It is a 32 page weekly; the oldest religious newspaper in the world; covers the whole field of our brotherhood.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is our church paper in the south; not quite so large as the Herald, but is to be issued this week from the new presses and is to be enlarged. Not covering so large a field as the Herald it covers the local states and section more fully about our brotherhood, and carries some items of denominational information from other sections.

The two papers are $1.50 each or less than 3 cents a week; same proportional rates for less than a year.

The Christian Missionary is our monthly missionary magazine covering all our home and Foreign Missionary work, fields, letters and reports from our missionaries, receipts for all monies, brimful of the freshest and best things that our church is doing anywhere in the world; has 32 pages each month and costs fifty cents a year. For a short time "Men and Missions" a fine interdenominational missionary magazine published by the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and one of the best, goes with it without extra cost, the two for fifty cents.

Brethren: I am asking you to do no unimportant work in helping to get these papers into the homes of our people. Every home ought to have a religious paper; and the first one should be their own church papers. It is vital to those new homes and new members to give them Christian reading; because they do not take our church papers is the cause that so many lose interest in the church and kingdom. Very few people who take the church papers backslide because it is a constant reminder of the Christian life, prayer, Bible reading, Sabbath observance, etc. When you get some one to take their church paper you are doing a good deed and a Christian act.

We do not grow faster denominationally because we have been slow to read the church literature and work for it and put it into our homes.

I cannot possibly do all this work with the multitude of church duties upon me and I am counting on you to do your best. I want to see how many we can get between now and Monday the 14th. I have sample copies of THE SUN but I fear that the Herald and Christian Missionary will be waylaid for a short time perhaps. Please do not push or advocate one paper to the disadvantage of another. Brethren, I am counting on you to do your best; it is a good work and Christian; it is important to know what and where our people are doing; the papers are the pastor's assistant, and I can be of much more service to the home and family when they take our papers.

Your busy pastor,

WARREN H. DENISON.

OFFICIAL NOTICE FROM DAYTON.

Dear Friend:

Many inquiries have come regarding the flood and our Christian Publishing Association and Churches in Dayton and I have only today been able to secure definite word after ten days' endeavor by wire and post to reach our people who have been marooned in Dayton and are still under military rule.

The following facts come from our Editor, Dr. Barrett, through Judge Whitelock and from our Secretary Halfaker who succeeded in getting into Dayton last Monday:

FIRST: So far as reported no lives of our people are lost.

SECOND: Our Publishing House was in the main path of the flood and a raging torrent 10 to 12 feet deep swept through its lower floor and basement causing great damage—how much cannot be estimated, but it will surely be impossible to issue the Herald or any of our publications for weeks to come.

THIRD: Our First Church, Dayton, suffered greatly. The homes of some of its members were swept away and probably nine-tenths of its members were in the path of the flood and suffered some loss of real or personal property. The Church building had from three to five feet of water in its auditorium and filling its basement. Its members have all suffered so much loss that the case is very hopeless for the church unless outside help comes.

FOURTH: Our churches in Piqua and Troy and Columbus were affected through the water reaching the homes of some of their members, but Dayton's great catastrophe has completely overwhelmed that great Ohio valley which has suffered so much all along the line of the waters.

I have talked and written to many of our people and we believe that Dr. Samuel, as president of the American Christian Convention, should issue an appeal to our churches for help in this emergency for the Dayton Church.

I would be glad to hear from you with any suggestions.

Sincerely yours,

HERMON ELDREDGE.

FROM OUR CONTRIBUTORS

THE GREAT FLOODS IN THE WEST.

Dayton, Ohio, April 3, 1913.

Dear Bro. Atkinson:

Your telegram of March 31 reached me April 3, too late to give you any information for THE CHRISTIAN SUN of this week, and believing I could reach you in time for the next issue, I sent you in reply only a brief telegram. Now I will try to give you more particulars in regard to the great disaster which has befallen Ohio and Indiana.

When I left the office of The Herald of Gospel Liberty on the evening of March 24, the rain was falling in torrents. When I crossed the Miami river, I discovered the stream was rising rapidly. Already the Dayton View car line had ceased to run as the water on Leham street was too deep on the tracks. All night the rain poured down. At three o'clock on Tuesday morning I heard a whistle, apparently in North Dayton, give the distress signal. At six o'clock following, the same signal was repeated. As soon as I got breakfast, I hastened to go to the office, but was soon informed that I could not get to the office, that the river had overflowed its banks and was already half way from the river proper to my home. Soon the news came that the swelling flood had reached Helena street. Though the rain was still pouring, wife and I walked down Main street to see the oncoming waters. The waters were then about a half a mile out of the river banks. While standing looking upon the scene never to be forgotten, I saw the trolley wires shake violently. I asked some bystander what caused it, and was told that a house was passing under the wires down the street. I looked and it was so. My heart grew sick at the thought. There was nothing I could do—we all felt so helpless. The police and others were doing all that could be done to rescue the imperilled people. Mr. Netum Rathbun, our publishing agent, was living in that community. I found that he had gotten to safety with his family. The waters continued to rise. By this time the stream must have been nearly two miles wide, sweeping right through the heart of the city. In the center of the city it reached a depth of 18 to 20 feet, and stood there for nearly forty-eight hours. In this moment of great peril to the people of Dayton some heroic scenes were witnessed. Men were seen walking from house tops across the street on trolley wires. You say that was impossible! You do not know what can be done till you have to do or die. There were different lines of wires, one line above the other. With the feet on one line and the hands on the one above, they escaped from peril to safety. In many instances people were driven from the first floor to the second in their dwellings, and then to the attic, where whole families were imprisoned for forty-eight hours. The boatmen were active doing everything possible to relieve the distressed prisoners, but in many instances it was impossible to reach them, the current was so swift. No ordinary boat could live in such waters. One man told me that from the little window in the attic of his home he saw a big house go past him, rushing on the bosom of the mad waters. He watched it and saw it strike a large maple tree, and the tree went down before it as if it had been a little sapling. Hundreds of buildings were thus swept away. In many instances men and women and children could be seen on the roof of the floating buildings and they were calling for help, but no help could reach them in such dangerous waters. In the midst of this appalling disaster came another. Fire broke out and raged furiously, consuming many large and valuable buildings. On Wednesday at noon I went to Dayton View (a part of the city on a bluff on the north side of the river) where I could get a full view of the angry waters. Such a scene I never witnessed, and if it can be the Lord's will, I hope never to look upon another like it. Buildings were floating down the river, lodging in trees, or against bridges, and going to pieces. Already the great railroad bridge over which move daily the great through passenger trains of the Pennsylvania, the C. H. and D., the Erie, and the Big Four, had gone down under the great weight of the waters. Fifth street bridge had gone and other bridges were in peril. Looking across the raging waters, the buildings were standing in water to near the second floor, and then to add to the distress, I saw a number of residences burning, going down under the consuming flames. Such a scene was awful to behold. No one it seemed could reach those buildings, and if people were in them, as most likely they were (for many refused to leave their homes, believing there was no danger till it was too late to leave in safety) they had to choose between death in the fire and jumping from the burning building into the wild waters, which was almost certain death. No language can tell of the awfulness of the situation. Meantime the fires continued to spread in different parts of the city. Through all of Wednesday night the heavens above the city were illuminated by the great raging fires, meantime the waters began to fall. Hundreds of horses and dogs had perished—no possible way of escape. One horse was found in the third story of a house (dwelling) and he was alive. Two or three were found in the Y. M. C. A., and about the same number were found in the Fourth National Bank and alive, but 1250 have been found dead. As yet it is well nigh impossible to tell just how many people perished. We are devoutly thankful to report that the first news as to the number of deaths was too large. It now seems that between two and three hundred have been found. Of course many may never be found, for in such a mighty volume of water, moving so swiftly and with such power, no doubt many were carried far away. One remarkable fact was noted by the men who served in the rescuing of the imperilled ones, and that was the number of children which were born in the midst of these moments of peril. Some were born in the little frail boats while taking the mother to a place of safety. I think 38 instances of this kind were reported. In one case twins were born in the boat.

When the waters began to go down, then was revealed to the people of Dayton a condition such as few people have ever seen. There is not, I think, a single residence, or a single store in all of the main part of the city which was not terribly damaged. To look into a house or a store was to behold a scene which language is not able to describe. Everything, practically, which was in the reach of the waters, was destroyed, or damaged so as to be of almost no value. I suspect that thousands of pianos were destroyed. The few I have seen look as if they never could be used again. In the stores the destruction was complete. There was hardly a big plate glass front left intact—almost every one was broken out, and as for the goods inside, I think an earthquake could not have produced a more complete ruin. No language at my command can give the reader an adequate idea of the destruction which was wrought. In our own publishing house every one of the big plate glass in the front were destroyed, the partition wall between the stores was swept out. In the basement of the building our presses are to-day under eight feet of water. It will take days to pump this water out and then the presses must be cleaned before we can issue another Herald. We may decide to issue a small one next week from a job press, simply to let our people know our situation. All of our paper worth from $1200 to $1500, is ruined, and we must order more before we can do much. The loss to The Christian Publishing Association will most likely reach $3,000. Understand this is only a guess. I cannot be sure of the actual loss for some time yet. The main offices being on the fourth floor were not damaged. The receding waters left in every building a deposit of the blackest mud, and in many instances it was a foot deep or more, making the work of cleaning a task indeed.

So far as we can learn the people of the Christian Church had no loss by drowning, but of course they lost in common with others in damage to property, etc. I have received a number of telegrams, asking if I needed help. I am thankful to say that our home, being on an elevation, was not in the flood line at all. I cannot be grateful enough for this deliverance. I know much of the horrors of the flood, but I know little compared with what many suffered. It was the first time that starvation seemed to look me in the face. As soon as the people realized that we were in a great flood, there was a rush for the grocery stores which were outside of the line of the flood. Soon all was gone, and there we were without food, without city water, without gas (upon which we were depending for light and cooking), without electric lights, meantime not a train could come to the city, nor a traction car, and no street car could run at all; there was no telephone or telegraph service, and no mail going either way, and there we were, helpless. We had not a warm meal from dinner, March 25, till dinner to-day (April 3), when we borrowed of a neighbor a gasoline stove long enough to cook one meal, and I tell you it was good! Perhaps in two or three days we will borrow it again, and so keep along. Do you ask me, Why we do not buy one? Oh, because there are none in the city for sale—the stores are all destroyed. Let our friends in the South rest easy so far as we are concerned, as we hope to get through in good condition. There was much food sent in after about two days, but it was sent in for the flood sufferers, and as we were not in the flood, we could not feel it was right for us to apply for it. It would have been furnished to us free of charge, if we had applied, but we did not believe we ought to use the food sent for those who were losers in the great disaster, and so we did the best we could on the little we could pick up here and there. I am told that Dr. Bishop is hurt worse than most of our people. He and his wife are aged, and their house suffered more from the flood than did the most of the houses in that community, so Dr. Powers informed me to-day. I do not wish my friends to send me any financial aid, as I did not suffer losses, but if any of our people in the South feel like helping dear Brother and Sister Bishop, I am sure it would be help well and nobly given and just as truly deserved. I am making this suggestion without the knowledge of Dr. Bishop. He is now almost eighty years old and his wife is not very far behind him, and with such a calamity befalling them, it does seem pretty hard for them to meet the situation, and if any can help them, I am sure it will be a blessing to them. He has always worked on a small salary and lived very economically, and am sure he needs help just now as he stands face to face with such a disaster. He estimates his damages at $1,000. His address is Rev. J. G. Bishop, D. D., 1231 W. Fifth St., Dayton, Ohio. Help him if you can with money—to help him put his house in order.

It is estimated that the property and business loss in Dayton will reach as high as $25,000,000, and for the entire flooded district in Ohio and Indiana, as much as $300,000,000. That is only an estimate, but it will surprise me if it does not go beyond that sum. However, the people of Dayton are getting in good spirits and cleaning out and going into business again with a vim. They are planning to have the United States Government deepen and strengthen the Miami river and raise the levees, so as to guard against another such disaster in the future, but at best it will take years for Dayton to regain what it has lost. Do excuse me for writing so much, but there is much to tell, and what I have said in this long letter will be but a drop in the bucket of what might be said. We thank God for safety and for the love of friends who have so generously offered to come to our assistance.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

OUR BRETHREN IN OHIO.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

I am just returned from Defiance College, where I spent Sunday, March 30th, and preached in the morning in the College and at night in the Presbyterian church at a Union service.

About one fourth of the students of the college were back from their Easter vacation, but the others were marooned either at home or en route. One young man was courageous enough to walk twenty-four miles to get back to his work.

The town of Defiance was hard hit by the flood and lost one bridge over the Maumee River, and several of the manufacturing establishments and commercial houses were sufferers from the flood. Some ninety houses were either wrecked or carried off down the river. On last Sunday two hundred families were under care of the Relief Committee. Even on Sunday, as the waters had gotten back into the bed of the river, many of the people were engaged in scrubbing walls and floors and treating them to antiseptics, so as to avoid disease.

Our college people were on high ground and so do not suffer directly. But they will suffer much indirectly in the losses of patrons and friends. Both in contributions and students the difference is sure to be noted next year. But the courage of President McReynolds and his helpers is undaunted.

All our friends at Defiance were much disturbed about the situation at Dayton, both as to the safety of our many friends there, and the amount of loss sustained by the Publishing House. There must have been very serious loss in stock and in injury to presses and the building, for the House was situated right in the flooded district. But word from Dayton was not to be had while I was in Defiance, but since my return I have word by the way of Fall River of the safety both of Mrs. J. J. Summerbell and of Dr. O. W. Powers. And our conclusion, from the lack of mention of others, is that the most of our friends have escaped bodily harm, even if some of them suffer financially.

It is needless to mention that the floods in Ohio and Indiana of 1913 have struck our Christian churches and communities in that region the worst blow that they ever have experienced. They will receive the heartfelt sympathy of all the people within the radius covered by THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

"THE DAYTON FLOOD AND OUR PUBLISHING INTERESTS."

Inasmuch as many inquiries have come to me regarding our interests at Dayton, for the benefit of our people I wish to make the following statements regarding that very great disaster.

Last Monday I went to Dayton, in company with another one of the ministers here. The railroad company refused to sell tickets to Dayton, but we bought tickets from Springfield to Xenia, thence to Dayton, and in this way, secured transportation to Dayton. When we arrived there our first duty was to secure passes to get access to the city which, since the flood, has been under military rule. We went to the National Cash Register, and there, after bluffing some, and practically fighting our way through several lines of police force, we were able to see the Secretary of John H. Patterson; I had no trouble to convince this gentleman that my visit to Dayton was important, and he gave us an "Emergency Pass" which gave us the right of the city.

The Dayton flood is beyond description. It is one of those very strange freaks which it does not seem possible at first thought, to understand. But on investigations we find the reason for it to be obvious.

The first thing that appeared to us in the flooded districts were wrecked houses, with fine furniture, covered with mud and slime. I can not see how it can be anything but a total loss. On our way to the business district we counted eight dead horses in one place. Three fine touring cars were piled in one heap; the finest automobiles that money could buy are now lying in the rubbish and debris of Dayton with wheels upturned. Street cars that were overtaken by the flood in the business district, were covered with the waters and literally beaten to pieces by the currents. Hundreds of the finest pianos were washed out of the homes and stores, set afloat, covered with mud and slime, and now they lie on the street, hang on the porch roofs of homes, and are beaten to pieces.

The entire business district was flooded. Every thing on the first floor of every business house in this district was ruined,—covered with mud or washed away. Canned goods, groceries, meats, dry goods, office supplies, drugs, liquor, hats, suits, shoes, and many other things washed through the streets in one conglomerated mass. Horses swam between buildings in water ten to fourteen feet deep, trying to climb the buildings and telephone poles, whinneying for help, to finally sink and drown. Two horses were on the fifth street bridge when it was swept away, frantic with grief they were running from one end to the other, after it had broken loose at either end, and went down with it. The water striking corner department stores, swept through these stores diagonally, breaking out the plate glass windows, and covering the floor with from four to six inches of mud and slime.

No person will ever know the extent of property loss, or the number of lives lost. These facts are kept as secret as possible for the sake of the city's future. All of our people there connected in any way with the denominational work, were saved, but most of them had experiences that were severe tests of their faith and nerves. I wish I had space here, and time, to relate some of the harrowing and gruesome experiences related to me. Think what it must be to be driven by a flood to the second story of your house, in black darkness, with the water creeping up two feet per hour, with no sign of relenting, while you know that to try to escape from the house would be almost sudden death. But I must not try to describe these experiences, for no doubt the Dayton people will tell us about it.

The loss at our Publishing House will be $1,000 to $1,500 I am told. There were four feet of muddy water in our new Dayton First church, and it was about that deep in the pastor's home. I am told almost nine-tenths of the families of the First church there suffered almost total loss of property, and there were two deaths out of the congregation. Under such circumstances the Dayton First church must have help if it is to have a future. The people of the denomination ought to come loyally and heartily to their relief at once.

The response from all over the country to the relief of these stricken people is generous, but we must not leave our work to other people. As you sit at your comfortable fireside, or in the pleasant evening breeze, if you live in the South, when you read this I would like to have you remember that men and women in Dayton who are in good circumstances, who have bank accounts, and good homes, are standing out on the "bread-line" where trucks and wagons pass along, with a man standing in each one of them, to hand out sandwiches and coffee. What a helpless thing money is, sometimes!

What God intends to teach us by these lessons, we may not now understand, but surely one thing is, how useless it is for us to put our trust in things that floods beat upon and wash down. Many men in Dayton, whose business was washed away, had been trusting too much in this business of making money. It seems that God needs to resort to very forceful methods sometimes before man will remember that He is able to restore again any thing that He has caused to be. The same power by which men built up these businesses, will help them to build again, and through it all teach them, if they will be taught, that He is author and giver. And then, too, what fine demonstration of the tie of sympathy in human hearts that binds our race together! Surely God made of one blood all nations to dwell on the face of the earth! And now we forget all except our desire to help all these people who are in need.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Readers of THE SUN will no doubt rejoice that Suffolk voted "dry" for the third time, on March 31st, with a good clean majority of 88 in a total vote of 805. Those who believe in saloons secured an order for the election through a petition which was their right under law. Those who do not believe in saloons met the issue on the defensive line through the pulpit and the "Citizen's League." The emphasis was placed on the "moral issue" with much proof of improvement in business during the four years of "dry." The ministers kept the moral issue before their congregations in repeated sermons by exchange of pulpits, and addresses in union meetings on Wednesday nights. Public and private citizens made speeches in churches and on the streets, and individuals reasoned successfully with individuals in favor of local option. The "wets" conducted a quiet personal campaign, without the courage to accept any challenge to defend their cause in public speech or public print. The campaign was conducted by local men except Sunday night before the election on Monday, Rev. Dr. G. W. Perry.

JACOB AT BETHEL—HIS DREAM.

Sunday School Lesson for April 13 with Suggestions for the Superintendent.

Time: B. C. 1700 (Ussher).

Places: Beersheba, Bethel.

Person: Jacob.

Golden Text: "I am with thee and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest."

Leading Thought: God is always near.

If you will turn a minute to last Sunday's lesson you will be reminded why it was necessary for Jacob to get away from Beersheba. Rebekah did not wish him to leave clandestinely—that would create scandal; neither did she want her husband to know why she wanted him to leave. So it was proposed that Jacob go in search of a wife. The dislike of the natives was natural—we see the same things today—it was racial and tribal prejudice. Isaac sympathized with the idea and consented to Jacob's going. Probably servants were sent also.

From this time Isaac drops out of sight, while Jacob at the head of the chosen family holds the center of the stage. Rebekah thought Esau's rage would soon die out; that Jacob would have a delightful time and soon return to her, the family would be reunited and all would be well. It is well to reflect in how great a respect her hopes were in vain, and to notice the sorrow that must naturally have followed her improper conduct of the last lesson.

Esau had already two Hittite wives, but ascertaining the feeling of his parents took a cousin for his wife.

Verse 10. In obedience to his father's commandment Jacob went. It is probable that servants went with him. Esau was hardly present when the adieus were spoken. No doubt father and mother wept. Haran was the city from which Abraham had journeyed. Ostensibly Jacob left home for a short time but in fact he was running away a sinner and in order to save his life.

Verses 11-12. It took three days to reach Bethel—it was fifty miles from Beersheba. Again he stopped for the night, just as Oriental travelers now do. It was very much like the travels of "Gypsies" in our own time.

Here it was the dream took place. Orientals have very strong beliefs in dreams. The ladder may have been a great structure like a temple, or it may have been the rocky slopes of the mountain side in the gloaming.

Verse 13-15. "The Lord stood." A personal vision of Jehovah, and then were repeated to Jacob the promises that had been made to Abraham and to Isaac. "I am with thee." Through all the tedious years that were to follow Jacob could look back to this time and receive energy and encouragement in his trials. There was the promise of God—to ever be with him and to bring him again to his own land. But as is often the case with God he was to have a great testing time in the 14 and more years in Padan-aram. From this time Jacob was no doubt a changed man.

Verses 16-19. The awakening and the pondering sleeplessly over the wonderful dream. It was revealed to Jacob that God was not dealing with him harshly but in love. He was teaching Jacob that while he could deceive Esau and Isaac and escape he could not escape God nor get away from him. He was as near in the desert as in the home of his patriarchal father.

Fear came upon Jacob. He had been dreaming of a wife and his return home triumphantly, suddenly to be awakened to a knowledge of the fact that God was near him.

Verse 20-21. The effect of the dream. If God was to be with him then he would serve God. He made a vow to serve him and to give the tenth.

LESSON CONTRASTS.

In our last lesson, we saw Jacob in his home with father, mother and brother about him; in this lesson we see him a wanderer, far from home and all that he could need; in this lesson he has no one to spread his couch, and can find only a stone for a pillow. But for Jacob, as for many another, "Sweet are the uses of adversity."

In the safe and sheltered home, the spirit of evil lurked, and Jacob readily fell into the evil ways of lying and deceit. But around him as he pillows on the barren heath, holy angels hover, and the voice of God reaches the aching heart, whereas it could not reach the scheming one. Jacob had forsaken God, but God had not forsaken Jacob. Now, at the earliest opportunity the heavenly Father calls his wandering child, lifts his thoughts to higher things, fills his brains with heavenly visions, and melts his heart by forgiving love. And, best of all, Jacob hears and heeds. He repudiates the evil one and his works—whom our last lesson found him obeying—and he takes the holy God of his fathers to be his God and personal Friend and Guide.

LESSON ANNOUNCEMENT.

To-day's story is about the first part of Jacob's life alone and without money. Next Sunday's lesson tells of the very different circumstances of his home-coming. You remember what Esau threatened to do to Jacob for stealing his birthright and his blessing. Jacob remembered this threat, too, and when he got back to the neighborhood of Esau's home, he was exceedingly frightened. Next Sunday's lesson tells how Esau acted and how Jacob won a new name. The origin of our Mizpah verse which we use so often in Sunday-school and other meetings will also be found in studying next Sunday's lesson.—Hageman.

TRY THE "WISH BOX."

A Novel Plan For Getting Valuable Suggestions.

A plan which I have seen in use in a country school as a help in filling up the library shelves acceptably was called the "Wish Box." Any one—teacher or pupil—was welcome to drop in a slip saying, "I wish I had" (naming the book). As every "wish" was seriously considered, and as there was only just so much money to spend on all of them, they were not dropped in the box too recklessly. As the months went on, some really valuable additions were made to the library—valuable, mainly, because they were books that were bound to be read, being the choice and desire of one or more who wanted them enough to ask for them.

It would be a good idea to utilize this plan for helping to solve the annual problem of selecting papers and lesson helps. Establish a "Wish-box," and request that the "wishes" be signed, and reasons given. If a teacher prefers this or that Lesson Help, the reason should be illuminating. If a pupil likes one paper better than another, let him mention the particular thing in the paper; or the special department that interests him. These are points very well worth knowing. Of course, the final choice depends on a variety of reasons. These are helps toward wise choosing.—Rex Fernald.

AN HONORARY MEMBER'S MEETING.

Notes on C. E. Topic April 13. "I Can Do All Things." Phil. 4:13.

First of all, the prayer-meeting committee should carefully arrange a programme for the meeting somewhat similar, perhaps, to the programme suggested below. Then steps must be taken to make sure of the attendance of as many honorary members as possible. Make a list of their names and distribute the names among members of the prayer-meeting committee, with a request to invite the person assigned, personally, if possible, or in writing, to attend the meeting. When the prayer-meeting committee is arranging the programme, definite part to be taken in the meeting should be planned for each honorary member, and when the invitations are given the honorary members should be asked to take the parts planned for them. The suggested part should be handed to them in writing in order to prevent slips of memory. If any of the honorary members cannot be present they should be asked to send special written greetings. This applies also to out-of-town honorary members.

An honorary member should lead the meeting. Seat the other honorary members facing the audience.

NOTICE TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES OF THE WESTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

It will be remembered by those who attended the Young People's Convention of the Western N. C. Christian conference held at Pleasant Hill last July that it was decided to hold the next session of the convention with the church at Ramseur on July 26, 27, 28, 1913. But owing to the fact that the annual conference is to meet with the Ramseur church in November, and by request of the pastor and some of the members of the Ramseur church it has been decided to hold our Y. P. Convention at some other church. Therefore if there is a church or school within the bounds of the Western N. C. Conference that wishes to entertain the Young People's Convention on July 26, 27, 28, you will please notify me at once, in order that plans may be made to make the convention a success.

Yours in the work,
J. F. MORGAN, Pres. Y. P. Conv. of Western N. C. Conference.

A National Temperance Life Insurance Association has been chartered, and the work of securing charter members is now going forward. Its home office is at 95 William Street, New York City. It will not insure any except total abstainers from alcoholic liquors. Its basic principle is that a total abstainer from alcoholic liquor is a better life insurance risk than a drinker, and that he is justly entitled to a lower rate by reason of such abstinence. There are also other important features not generally given in the old line insurance companies. The principle we believe to be a correct one. If any dependence can be put in the recent conclusions of science upon this question, there can be no question but that even the moderate use of alcohol is hurtful to health; and why should those who abstain from it pay the price of those who drink?—Ex.

The best of all prayers is to act with a pure intention and with a continual reference to the will of God. Unhappy are they whose prayers do not render them more humble, more submissive, more vigilant over their faults, and more willing to live in obscurity. The coldness of our love is the silence of our hearts toward God. Without this we may pronounce prayers, but we do not pray; for what shall lead us to meditate upon the laws of God if it be not the love of Him who has made these laws?—Fenelon.

WHY TURKEY'S ARMS HAVE FAILED.

From an article by Dr. Clark in The Congregationalist.

The prestige of Turkey has received a death-blow. Her only asset, the sword, has proven a broken reed. Her generals outclassed, her commissary department broken down, cholera raging among the troops, her provinces dropping away from her one by one, no wonder that the Bairam feast of 1912 was the most sorrowful one in her history.

Strange tales are told in the East of the reasons for the utter collapse of all the Turkish military plans. The cheap ammunition bought in Germany proved cheap indeed; the powder half dirt, the cartridges ill made, the shells powerless. The army, when the war broke out, was changing rifles from a more to a less antiquated pattern. The cartridges for both patterns were served out without discrimination and became hopelessly mixed, with the result that the men in the ranks found themselves with ammunition that would not fit their guns, in the face of a well-armed enemy, and they had to allow themselves to be shot down without a chance for defense.

Large appropriations, I was told, had been made for the troops in the vicinity of Beirut, but all had been expended for gorgeous raiment and for swords for the officers, while the soldiers were left with poor old guns and worse ammunition.

When the battles began, some surgeons were hurried to the seat of war, but they had no equipment. The apothecary stores of Beirut were searched for supplies. A few rolls of bandages and a few scissors were all that could be found, and the surgeons were sent off without a single knife. When they reached the army, shattered legs and arms appealed to them in vain for amputation, and the poor fellows died in swarms for lack of the simplest appliances and remedies.

Such unutterable carelessness and lack of common precautions in face of a war which has been long expected seems incredible, but my information comes from one of the most honored residents of Beirut, who has long lived in the city and who has taken a peculiar interest in governmental affairs.

In an extended journey throughout Palestine and Syria, taken while the war was at its height, we saw many indications of the desperate straits to which Turkey had been driven. The best young men had been drafted for the war and the strongest horses and mules had been requisitioned by the government, leaving behind the lame, halt, and blind.

Two drafts had recently been enforced and could only be escaped by paying $200 for each call. One of the most intelligent and best-educated Syrians whom I met, the general secretary of the Christian Endeavor societies of Syria, told me that he had recently been obliged to pay almost $400 in order to be allowed to stay at home and attend to his business interests.

We constantly met elderly peasants, armed with old flintlocks or other muzzle-loading rifles, or with large and murderous-looking clubs in their hands, who went armed day and night for fear of their fellow countrymen who had been drafted, and who, rather than go to the war or pay the fine, had taken to the woods (or rather to the wadies), and were highwaymen by necessity, living off of travellers who were only less unfortunate than themselves.

The whole of Syria, including Palestine, is in a pitiable condition. Business is at a standstill. Travellers, who usually bring in so much ready money, are afraid to come. Cholera has broken out in the north, and Antioch, Alexandretta, and other places are quarantined against the rest of the world. Jerusalem is in a state of much agitation. The few travellers are forbidden to go out after dark, and a provision famine is threatened, it is said.

THE MINIMUM CHRISTIAN.

The minimum Christian! And who is he? The Christian who is going to be saved at the cheapest rate possible; the Christian who intends to get all the world he can, and not meet the worlding's doom; the Christian who aims to have as little religion as he may, without lacking it altogether.

The minimum Christian goes to church in the morning, and in the evening also unless it rains, or is too warm, or too cold, or he is too sleepy, or has a headache from eating too much dinner. He listens most respectfully to the preacher, and joins in the prayer and praise. He applies the truth very judiciously, sometimes to himself, often to his neighbors.

The minimum Christian is very friendly to all good works. He wishes them well, but it is not in his power to do much for them. The Sunday-school he looks upon as an admirable institution, especially for the neglected and the ignorant. It is not convenient, however, for him to take a class. His business engagements are so pressing during the week that he needs Sunday as a day of rest; nor does he think himself qualified to act as a teacher; there are so many persons better prepared for this important duty that he must beg to be excused. He is very friendly to Home and Foreign Missions and colportage, and gives his "mite." He thinks there are too many appeals, but he gives, if not enough to save his reputation, pretty near it; at all events he aims to.

The minimum Christian is not clear on a number of points. The opera and dancing, the theater and card-playing, and large, fashionable parties give him much trouble. He "cannot see the harm" in this or that or the other popular amusement; there is nothing in the Bible against it. He does not see but that a man may be a Christian and dance or go to the opera. He knows several excellent persons who do—why should not he? He stands so close to the dividing-line between the people of God and the world that it is hard to say on which side he really stands.

Ah, my brother, you are making this attempt? Beware, lest you find at last that, in trying to get into heaven with a little religion, you miss it altogether; lest without "gaining the whole world," you "lose your own soul."—Presbyterian at Work.

Aim at a steady mind to do right, go wherever duty calls you, and believe firmly that God will forgive the faults that take our weaknesses by surprise in spite of our sincere desire to please Him.—Jean Nicholas Grou.

If a man while devoutly engaged in prayer, were called by some duty in the Providence of God to cease therefrom and cook a broth for some sick person, or any other service, he should do so willingly and with great joy.—John Tauler.

The truly great and good in affliction bear a countenance more princely than they are wont; for it is the temper of the highest hearts, like the palm tree, to strive most upward when most burdened.—Sir Philip Sidney.

man, of Norfolk, spoke to a great congregation of men at the Academy of Music and Rev. Dr. T. A. Smoot, of Norfolk, addressed a great audience of women at the Christian church.

The campaign all the way through, was conducted on high moral and religious ground and no bitterness of feeling was generated and no fault was found with the result. The mistake is often made of pressing local option measures through, under high-pressure methods, before the locality is really convinced. It is quite plain that Suffolk people are convinced and yield to the conviction that local option is better than saloons. This verdict is a compliment to Suffolk's moral improvement and her confidence in that which is right. Some of the "wets" say they would vote "dry" on "State-wide" election and that Suffolk's proximity to Norfolk is their reason for voting "wet" in the local option fight. To what extent this position is entertained does not yet appear.

Our Easter Service was fine, the Junior choir and "Little People" rendering charming services at the morning hour, and the "Main Choir" rendering "The Conquering King," a grand Easter Cantata, by Wilson, at night. The congregations must have been a thousand at each service, and the reverent and devout spirit that seemed to sway the audience crowned the day with spiritual joy. The offering will meet the conference call and the church moves to other work. The 23rd of March will be remembered as one of our greatest Easter Days. The day itself was perfect and the people entered into the holy hours with a new sense of resurrection and life. Nine canary birds among the beautiful flowers and palms added their sweet songs to the voices of the children and the maturer songs of men and women. "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord," "Praise ye the Lord."

W. W. STALEY.

NORFOLK LETTER.

To remark that now, more than ever, we should all be proud of THE SUN is but stating a truism. Upon receiving last week's issue I was compelled to confess that, although I had expected something good, my expectations were entirely surpassed as I read, scrutinized and criticised the copy of the first edition from the new Publishing House. I congratulate the editor, the stockholders generally, and the entire mechanical staff upon their most auspicious beginning, together with the Christian church at large upon the possession of such an organ.

Dr. Staley came down this morning from Suffolk and gave to the members of the Tidewater Ministerial Association an able and interesting paper upon Church Federation, showing particularly the relation which the Federal Council of Churches in America sustains to this work. His address was cordially received and made a fine impression upon the members of the Association. We hope he can be with us again.

We are expecting to begin our revival services at the Third Church this coming Sunday. We are also hoping and believing that our gracious Lord will pour out the Holy Spirit upon us so that our own membership shall be built up and edified and many sinners converted from the error of their ways. Pray for us that a great work may be done in our midst.

For the present, at least, Norfolk is "closed" upon the Sabbath. That is to say, you cannot buy soda-water, tobacco, ice-cream, or fruits of any sort from any dealer. Of course, there is a great hue and cry being raised on account of this condition of affairs and strenuous efforts are being made to discredit the efforts of the Sabbath Law Observance League by those who wish to exploit the Sabbath only for their own profit. What the final end will be no one can forecast, though it is to be hoped that out of all the agitation there may come something permanently good and healthful, and that the members of the Sabbath Law Observance League will "stick by their guns" until a final victory has been won.

HENRY SPENCER BOOTH.

ALABAMA LETTER.

The writer's last appointment at Langdale gave evidence of an increased interest in the work. We have been preaching here almost a year and a half, and if we mistake not, the past fourth Sunday was, in several particulars, our best day with this people so far. It is safe to say that the attendance was above normal and the sermons were heard with earnest attention. The collections for the day surpassed any previous record. The pastor's salary is paid up to the present and several dollars ahead. Such loyalty and enthusiasm are deeply appreciated.

On our return from Langdale on Monday, it was indeed a privilege to stop off at Lanett and spend several hours with Rev. L. I. Cox who was holding a revival there. Bro. Cox's earnest manner, big heart, devout life and soul-stirring sermons wonderfully awakened and aroused many of the people there. On Sunday night during the meeting, great numbers came only to be turned away in disappointment, every available portion of space in the church having been taken at an early hour. The exact number of conversions and accessions we have not learned. Bro. Cox went from Lanett to Richland, Ga., to engage in evangelistic services there.

The Sunday-school convention which was in session at Pleasant Grove last Saturday and Sunday was not what we hoped for in every particular, especially in point of attendance, there being less than half the schools of the conference represented. Several pastors and speakers were absent also. Notwithstanding, we had a very helpful session.

Officers were elected as follows: Pres., J. F. Beard; Vice Pres., Rev. C. W. Carter; Sec. Treas., Miss Delia Carter.

The time and place for the next convention are to be decided by the Executive Committee, whose names I do not recall at present.

We were delighted to have with us during the convention, Rev. E. M. Carter, Supt. of the Christian Orphanage, whose presence and forceful addresses added much to the session. He brought the cheering intelligence that the work at the Orphanage moved steadily forward. Bro. Carter came to Wadley where he delivered a strong sermon Sunday night. He boarded the 9:17 p. m. train for Elon College. Our prayers go with him.

Brother Pastor of the Alabama Conference, we have not heard from you relative to the "Pastors' Institute" suggested in my last letter. Perhaps you have just been waiting to give yourself time to think this matter over. I trust you have thought yourself full of the institute idea. I feel the need of such meeting. Do you? If so, let's have it.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Dr. W. S. Long writes that he has just completed his book on Systematic Theology and that he will be ready when suitable to the Faculty to deliver its substance in a course of institute lectures before the ministers of the College community and the thirty-five ministerial students studying here. The Faculty has set April 16th and 17th as the dates for the lectures. There will be three sessions daily of two and one-half hours each. After its presentation to the institute the book will be published by the Christian Publishing Association. The College is fortunate to be thus honored by its first president.

The reports from Mrs. T. C. Amick continue to be promising and favorable. She will be in the hospital about three weeks yet, but is now assured of restoration to health.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell, who is vice-president of Defiance College, writes that the recent floods in Ohio did serious damage to the town of Defiance and the constituency of the College, tho' no direct damage to the College plant itself. We sympathize with President McReynolds and his noble co-laborers in this great misfortune.

Dr. Herndon preached a fine temperance sermon Sunday and interestingly related his personal experiences for the temperance movement in the state, when it first began, and was very unpopular.

The Special Normal Term for teachers opens Tuesday and the prospect is for an increased attendance over any previous year. This is the fourth year of its operation.

The Elon Graded School closed Friday. It is rumored that a month's subscription term will now be taught, the regular term being shorter than usual by reason of the expense incurred in equipping the new graded school building.

The enlarged and improved condition of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the occasion of much favorable and congratulatory comment among the College community. We are glad also to have the paper mailed from this office. If the Publishing House does nothing more than give us such a paper as THE SUN now is, it has justified its being. But it has greater things yet in store for us, and we are even assured that the full standard of excellence for THE SUN has not yet been attained, whereat we wait with pleasing expectancy.

Phillips, Associate editor of The Greensboro Daily News, late clerk of the State Senate, and one of the most popular and lovable editors in this State, died very suddenly, and after a brief illness, at his home near Carthage, N. He was one of the most congenial and jovial men in all our acquaintance, and the one who has helped so efficiently in making The News one of the very brightest and most readable dailies in the State.

HAPPIER TIMES FOR CHILDREN OF KOREA.

By ANNA S. DORISS

Korea is a land where the sunny days are very hot and the cold days are very cold. The people have not many nice shade trees to protect them from the sun of the Summer or to supply enough fuel for the Winter.

The Korean people lived many, many years all alone in their small country and not knowing of the boys and girls of other lands, or how they lived. They did not know, even, that in their great hills was a treasure of coal which would keep them supplied with heat. They knew there were precious metals in the earth but were fearful that if they dug the gold and silver, the evil spirits which they were sure were in such places would cause them harm. They did not know about glass to keep out cold and to let the good sunshine into their little dark mud huts. They did not think it was good to let little girls learn to study.

It is about twenty-eight years since the missionaries first went to Korea. I wish you could see how much happier many of the children are to-day than children were twenty years ago.

It is said in Korea nowadays that if mothers and fathers show too much affection towards their little boys and girls the bad spirits will cause some evil thing to happen to them, perhaps even death. A little girl is not cared for or loved in the home as much as a little boy. It is sad to see so many of the really small tots with a younger brother or sister tied to their backs; this is done because the mother is busy or tired of hearing the baby cry.

One of the first little girls I knew in Korea was very sweet, and was laughing nearly all the time. She had five younger brothers, none of whom had names. I found a name which meant "smiling," Kyung Hee, and so named my little girl—the eldest of the family. Another child did have a name, but it meant "outer room" and one day she came to me crying, asking me to change her name.

Their games are very funny. The girls play seesaw, one standing on either end of the plank or board, which is not very long or raised very high. First one jumps, then the other, the jumps sending the other one higher and higher into the air each time, landing squarely with both feet on the end of the plank. It sounds like a circus trick, doesn't it? I know this is fun, for I have tried it!

The boys play "tug of war." The rope is made of many smaller ropes of rice straw which have been rolled and twisted together until the small hands can hardly grasp it. Forming on two sides, the boys line up one behind the other, and while they pull harder

MONEY IN FRUIT GROWING MORE PROFIT FROM ONE ACRE OF PEACH OR APPLE ORCHARD THAN FROM FIVE OF COTTON.

With moderate intelligence and care exercised, apple trees in the Sunny South begin to bear heavily in their fifth or sixth year, and for fifty years or more bring in annual profits of around $300 or $400 an acre. Peach Trees do equally as well if not better—$500 profit an acre being no exceptional returns when properly followed. On June 7, 1912, we sold 280 six-basket crates of peaches in New York for $910.00. The freight and commission on these came to $209.38, we got net returns of $700.62 or $2.50 a crate.

and harder all the time they sing out together, very loudly, some kind of a song. This game lasts late into the Summer nights.

If you were a young Korean you might be sorry when you were nine or ten years old that you had to stop most of these good times and be married, and wear clothes like big men and women wear. But since the Koreans have been learning what the Bible teaches those that become Christians are doing very differently, so there are happier days for our little friends in Korea.

The first time I visited the town of Mir Yang, where my Korean home is, a small child was playing in the road, and seeing me he turned and ran screaming to his mother, saying "Come look at this long thing! Come look at this long thing!"

One day I was returning home and my servant came to the station to meet me. I noticed he was very quiet and presently he asked me if I had some medicine to give his little sister who was going to die. When a Korean does not eat, he is sure he will die. Sometimes they force food down their throats, thus causing more serious trouble. I went at once to see the little girl, but she was too sick to know me. I did not tell them what I was going to do, because they do not believe in water either inside the body or outside, when one is sick. So, with the aid of her big brother and some hot water, soap and towels, we soon had the little girl looking like a different child. We also gave her some good hot medicine to drink, and of course next day she was better, so we nursed her for several weeks until she became quite well.

How would you like to live in Korea and not have your face washed? Some mothers said to me: "It is too cold to wash my baby's face," or "My baby will cry, he does not want his face washed"; and one said "Oh! it is only such a little thing (baby)." So some of them look very, very dirty, and get sore eyes and other diseases.

Are you not glad that we have gone to Korea to help the mothers and babies?—From Over Sea and Land.

No question about it, the water and sewerage is an actual necessity!

Last Saturday and Sunday this writer was attending the Sunday school convention of the Alabama conference. The weather was somewhat unfavorable, but many of the schools were represented and the convention was a success. One thing we are proud of, that is, the people of that section are becoming more interested in the Orphanage.

All the children are well and enjoying these fine spring days.

There seems to be a pretty fair prospect for a grain crop this time.

Mr. Woodard—our farmer—is making "hay while the sun shines." I don't think we could have found a better farmer nor one who would have shown greater interest in the work, anywhere. He fills the bill and does the work.

The fourth Sunday in March, Mr. and Mrs. Woodard took a few of the children out to Bethel (M. E.) church and rendered a short program to the delight of the congregation.

Our cooking stove has given almost completely out and Mrs. Woodard is working to replace it with a new one. It is very much needed. The results of the entertainment may be seen in the list of donations.

DONATIONS:

LIQUOR AND THE LAW.

Most of the friends of prohibition regard the enactment of the Kenyon-Webb liquor law as a triumph for the cause, but many able lawyers, both in and out of Congress, disagree with them, for they believe that the act is unconstitutional. Among those who hold that view are former President Taft, who vetoed the bill, and former Attorney-General Wickersham, who advised him to veto it. Nevertheless, the majority of Congress decided to allow the Supreme Court to settle the question, and so passed the bill again, over the President's veto.

The new law forbids the shipment from one state to another of beer, wine or spirituous liquors "to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such state." Those who believe that the law is unconstitutional, declare that in this clause Congress has surrendered to the states its power to regulate interstate commerce, for it permits one state to make laws to prevent the admission of a commodity from another state. They say that if a law against the shipment of liquor is valid, a law against the shipment of tobacco, wheat, flour, furniture, or beef would also be valid, since all are "commodities."

The temperance people, on the other hand, maintain that liquor is not a "commodity," but a dangerous poison that menaces public health, and that consequently it should be classified not as property, but as a plague and a pest. They regard it as just as reasonable for a state to outlaw liquor as to bar smallpox, or yellow fever, or any other menace to the public health; and that power, of course, all the states have.

There are already eight states that prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor, and thirty-six others that under local option laws forbid it in all or a part of their territory. Those states, nevertheless, have been powerless to prevent liquor dealers in other states from shipping their goods across their borders. The new law is the latest attempt to put an end to that condition, but it remains for the courts to decide whether or not the attempt shall succeed.

The Supreme Court will pass, of course, on the validity of the law, not on the desirability of its aim. If it decides adversely it will say, in effect, "You have not found the right way." Certainly a community that wishes to prohibit liquor should not have its will thwarted by the contrary-minded in other states. With thought and care, the right way will ultimately be found.—Youth's Companion.

DEATHS

Truitt.

The funeral services of Miss Lavinia Truitt, who died Friday afternoon, were conducted from the First Christian church yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock. The auditorium was filled with friends of the deceased and the family. Rev. H. E. Rountree, the pastor, conducted the funeral, assisted by Dr. L. F. Johnson, who preached the sermon.

Miss Truitt was 44 years of age, and well known among a large circle in this city, especially in South Greensboro. Her piety, her interest in human needs and her loyalty to home and God distinguished her already lovely character as beautiful in service, helpfulness and alms deeds. She was a member of the well known Truitt family of South Greensboro, whose grief is unsurpassed because of their loss. Her sisters are Mrs. R. W. Williams and Mrs. J. R. Foster, and her brothers are James R. and W. B. Truitt.

During the last seven months of her life she was a great sufferer, and the anxiety of her loved ones was intensified from month to month, as she was helpless and death seemed inevitable. Death came as a great relief, having lived unto the Lord and died with most beautiful assurances left behind. Dr. Johnson, who was pastor while the church was under construction, said: "She had something to do with every piece put in the building."

The pallbearers were B. B. Phillips, C. C. Johnson, C. A. Hines, S. A. Caviness, J. L. Cogle, H. V. Simpson. The floral designs were numerous and beautiful. Interment was made in Green Hill Cemetery.

H. E. ROUNTREE, Pastor.

Boyd.

Deacon Murphy Boyd, E. Durham, N. C., died February 28, at the age of 81 years and 14 days. Deacon Boyd was a member and deacon of Christian Chapel Christian church for 40 years, and lived a consistent Christian life. He was twice married and reared two sets of children who mourn their loss. Our sympathy goes out for the family and his brother, Henry Poe, at Lillington, N. C. This writer was his pastor for seven years and found Bro. Boyd always cheerful in his Christian life and faithful in Christian service.

Thousands of farmers learned in 1912 what many, many thousands already knew—that Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers are more than ordinary fertilizers. That at least one-and-a-half bales of cotton to the acre is not impossible, nor 100 bushels of corn per acre so very difficult with up-to-date farming methods, frequent cultivations and working of the crop, and several applications of V.-C. Fertilizers. That with the use of these excellent fertilizers the average yields of Tobacco, Wheat, Oats, Fruit, Rice, Peanuts and Truck can be often easily increased from fifty to a hundred per cent.

OUR MEETING IN MAY.

It is hoped that many of the women of our church are planning to attend the missionary mass meeting at Elon College on May 27th. The Convention Board at that time will attend to the business that may claim their attention. Then it is planned to have some speeches on different phases of the work and Missions in general. We need to become informed, we need to know how to become missionary in spirit; we need to have our enthusiasm kindled. Let us come together with a determination to learn and to know more about Missions. It is a neglected field among us as a church and it is high time we were engaged in its cultivation.

The people in Elon will provide entertainment. Inform Mrs Harper of your intention to attend. They would be glad to see our interest in the work evinced by a

THIS WILL INTEREST MANY.

F. W. Parkhurst, the Boston publisher, says that if any one afflicted with rheumatism in any form, neuralgia, or kidney trouble, will send their address to him at 701 Carney Building, Boston, Mass., he will direct them to a perfect cure. He has nothing to sell or give; only tells you how he was cured after years of search for relief. Hundreds have tested it with success.

That was a broadminded clergyman who recently, in one of his sermons, asserted that God does not fix the death rate. There are many agencies that contribute to maintaining a high death rate, and chief among these are those persons who think that disease and death are sent by a Divine Providence as a punishment for our sins. Then come those who flout at all health laws and refuse even to be taught how to do the things that make for community health and safety.

Sit, stand and work erect. Practice deep breathing at regular intervals, and always breathe through your nose. Bathe frequently and use plenty of soap. Wash your hands very carefully before handling food. Don't put your fingers, your money, or your pencils in your mouth. Don't bite your finger nails. Clean your teeth night and morning. Careful attention to these suggestions will help to keep you clean and well.

Just Half In Bed.

Clyde, Ky.—Mrs. I. A. Decker, writes from Clyde: "I recommend Cardui, the woman's tonic, to any woman in need of a remedy. For five years, I was unable to do my own work. Half my time was spent in bed. At last I tried Cardui. Now I am well and happy, and can do my own work." Don't suffer pain, headache, backache, and other womanly miseries, when your own druggist has on his shelf a remedy for such troubles—Cardui. Get a bottle for your shelf. As a general tonic, for weak women, nothing has been found for 50 years that would take its place. Try it. It will help you.

Prevents Nose Rot in Sheep and Murrain in Cattle
I have given your remedy to my stock for three years, and have found it to be excellent for all kinds of diseases, and an especially effective cure and preventative of Murrain in cattle. At one time my neighborhood was infected with this disease, and many cattle died near me, while my cattle never had the least symptom of it. Your remedy is also a boon in raising sheep. I have a herd of seventy-five to one hundred that always have access to it, and none of them ever had nose rot, so common among sheep.

NORTH CAROLINA SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The program for the North Carolina Sunday School Convention to be held in Greensboro April 22-24, is nearing completion, and promises to be one of much interest and helpfulness.

Three speakers of international reputation have been booked for this Convention in addition to the splendid array of home talent to be used.

A large, new warehouse with a seating capacity of three thousand has been secured for the regular sessions and a large platform will be built to seat a chorus choir of three hundred voices.

Messrs. Tullar and Meredith, the well-known music composers and publishers of New York City, will have charge of the music, which insures life to this department.

Who are delegates? The counties can send two delegates for each township in the county, though they do not need to be elected by townships, but can come from any part of the county that seems most convenient.

Each Sunday school of all denominations can send two delegates. They can be pastors and superintendents, or two others volunteering, elected, or appointed, and should more desire to come from larger schools they will be taken care of as long as there is room.

Colleges and High Schools can send two for every fifty students.

All who expect to attend should send their names to the North Carolina Sunday School Association, or to C. C. McLean, Chairman of Committee of Entertainment, Greensboro, N. C., that homes may be provided as early as possible.

As a specialty is to be made of the Secondary Division, there should be a number of delegates sent from classes of teen ages, so send some bright boys and girls.

DR. FREIDMANN'S "CURE."

Is there a "cure" for consumption? Has Dr. Friedmann found it? These are live questions these days. Many people are found who do not hesitate to answer, "Oh, yes, I think there is a cure for consumption and I think Dr. Friedmann has found it." But have such people any right to an opinion? Are they not predicting a long way outside of their territory? Is it not probable that their opinions are tempered to a large extent with their strong desire that such a cure may be found? Many eminent doctors and health officers have expressed their opinion that a cure for tuberculosis would be found in this generation. We hope Dr. Friedmann has found it. He has been working along the right line. But in the meantime, it will certainly be the part of wisdom for the average citizen, if not for the average doctor and health officer, to possess himself with patience until some more authoritative body than Dr. Friedmann and his own medical staff can pass on this matter.

Many treatments have already been made by Dr. Friedmann in New York, and the United States Government authorities are busy testing the remedy to ascertain for certain, first, if it is harmless, and second, if it will really cure consumption. It will probably take six or eight weeks before much of an opinion can be given, even by these experts.

In the meantime, those of us who are so unfortunate as to have the disease should not lose any time, or falter one step in the well beaten, time-trodden path of cure that we now know so well, namely, rest, fresh air and pure food. If Dr. Friedmann has discovered a cure, so much the better, but until that fact has been well demonstrated and until his cure can be generally obtained, let us not waste any valuable time.

Bad air kills more people every year than are killed by bullets.—

BRIEFS

The Bible and Flies.

Flies are a pest. They are here, not to keep, but to kill. Like deadly diseases, we destroy them, or they destroy us. They haunt our guests, throng our houses, swarm our tables to tell the story of filth and uncleanness. Swat the fly as you would any other pest or plague. Even "dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour." (Prov. 10:1).

When Men Are Great.

It was a sage who said, "Those are the greatest men who are oftenest in men's good thoughts." And men are greatest, not when others are compelled to do for them, but when they do for others. Every man is measured, in this world, by the service he renders, not by what is rendered him. Yet there are would-be great men who are seeking positions of comparative idleness in which they may make others serve them.

The Sins of Fathers.

In a lucid moment Charles Dickens wrote "I think it must be some where written that the virtues of the mothers shall occasionally, be visited on the children, as well as the sins of the fathers." But the original puts it stronger than that, for whereas the iniquity of the father is visited to the third and fourth generation of them that hate, mercy is shown unto thousands of them that love God and keep His commandments. The virtues of mothers, visited unto the children of the tenth and twelfth and hundredth generation have been the saving of the race. Napoleon was right when he said "What France needs is better mothers."

Keeping Sin Secret.

Hatred, expressed or unexpressed, is sin. He that hateth his brother is a murderer. The thought does not have to be expressed for God to know it; and sin is the attitude, not of man to man, but of man to God. Malice, envy, strife, vanity carried in the heart God seeth just as if they were proclaimed from the house-top. "Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bed chamber; for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter." (Prov. 10:20). Sin cannot be kept secret. Birds and winged things of the air will make it known. So it hath been decreed of almighty God.

Weighed in the Balances.

For a thousand years, far more than that, the saloon has been on trial, and in all that time it is said that no man has ever lived who could say truthfully that the saloon had made him a better man. Over against this put the millions who could say, and all too truthfully, the saloon has been my ruin. If not once in a thousand years the saloon has made even one individual better, is it not high time sensible and sane people were putting it out of business? The greatest curse ever sent to man was not war, nor famine, nor pestilence, nor tempest, nor flood, nor disease, but the saloon. It is the scourge of the human family, and the sooner all sensible people learn this the better for the race.

Holding a Grudge.

A grudge is like a passion, has its roots in the feelings, and grows by feeding. Feed an appetite and you satisfy it; feed a passion and you multiply it. A grudge soon passes beyond an appetite and becomes a passion. Beware! Your grudge will grow beyond you, and, being intensely personal, like the toothache, will cling close to you and result in hurting you worse than it does any one else. Yet "How we do love to nurse a grudge, and hug it close to us, making sure that it is alive and growing," recently wrote one. One would far better run the risk of carrying a snake in one's bosom than carry a grudge in one's heart for the snake is neither so poisonous, nor so apt to strike at the unexpected moment.

The Full Meaning.

Sometimes changes wrought in a word give an added conception of what the word means. For short we say "good-bye," the real meaning of which, though seldom thought of at the time, is, God-be-with-you. Another change is even more significant. When our Saxon forbears, being recently converted to Christianity, wanted a word for God, having no fit word in their language, they condensed their virtues, kindness, mercy, patience, forgiveness, love, all into the one word, Good, and then the word good was shortened into God. There is no higher conception of God than this—He is good, contains in himself all the noble and exalted virtues known of. God is good; good is God. Wherever there is goodness there is God; wherever God is there is goodness.

A Wider Field.

One of President Woodrow Wilson's daughters, Miss Jessie, has discovered that there is a wider field of usefulness for the daughters of the White House than to play cards, preside at pink teas, and lead the gay social whirl. Miss Jessie Wilson is enjoying social life in Washington, and doing a great work beside, namely, helping to build up the Young Woman's Christian Association. The throngs were so great who wanted to hear her in Richmond last Saturday that doors had to be closed much before the hour of speaking began. The door of usefulness, privilege, enjoyment, opportunity, always swings wide open to one when one wishes to seek peace and pursue righteousness. Sin bars the door to activity and usefulness; righteousness swings it wide open. The only reason why there are people "with nothing to do" is because there are people trying to live and to walk and to do without God in their lives.

Parental Respect.

The child will respect, and honor, and love both parents as long as parents will respect and honor and love each other, and their children. Children begin to disrespect their parents only when parents begin to disrespect each other. An anonymous writer penned some where the following:

"Parents should bear this in mind, that children lose respect very soon upon hearing them disagree, using bitter, cutting words to each other. This is inflicting the first actual pain on the baby hearts have been called upon to bear. The child experiences conflicting emotions, which end in pity for one parent and contempt for the other. O parent, pause; consider before you lose this hold on the little being who has heretofore considered you perfect! Let there be unanimity of purpose in act, word, and deed, before these little creatures, who are susceptible to every new impression, if you would preserve their love and respect."

The Ministry and Evangelism.

The world regards the ministry in a different light from that of any other calling. The vocation itself has a sacredness about it which people respect—as long as those who are in the calling will allow respect. Now this respect is maintained only as long as the minister will make it understood that he represents not himself, but his Maker. President Wilson relates this incident of his father, which is striking and worth while:

"I remember—for I have had the unspeakable joy of having been born and bred in a minister's family—I remember one occasion which made a very profound impression upon me when I was a lad, in a company of gentlemen where my father was present, and where I happened to be, unobserved. One of the gentlemen in a moment of excitement uttered an oath, and then, his eyes resting upon my father, he said with evident sincerity: "Dr. Wilson, I beg your pardon; I did not notice that you were present." "Oh," said my father, "you mistake sir; it is not to me you owe the apology." I doubt if any other remark ever entered quite so straight to the quick in me as that did, the consciousness that my father, taken by surprise, was at once so conscious that he was not the person offended that he should naturally call the attention of the man who had uttered the oath to what was the simple fact, that the offense was not to him, but to his Maker. It was exactly as if a disrespectful word had been spoken of the President of the United States in the presence of an Ambassador of the United States, the apology would be due not to him, but to his Government. And if ministers could always so contrive it that in their presence the presence of God was manifest, the whole problem of the ministry would be solved and evangelization would be irresistible."

—The program for the World's Sunday School Convention to be held in Zurich, Switzerland, July 8-15, will have for its general theme "The Sunday School and the Great Commission," and for eight days Sunday school specialists from all parts of the world will give their thought to the consideration of the problems of "The Sunday School Conquest of the World."

EDITORIAL

TITHING.

Our age strains at the burden of its immense wealth; and staggers beneath the heavier burden of trying to get more wealth. Thomas Carlyle said that the hell of the England of his day was in not getting rich. The curse of the America of our day is in trying too hard to get rich. We are not satisfied; there is no contentment.

Pick out in your mind right now a man who, fifteen years ago, was worth five thousand dollars. He is now worth fifty thousand; and he works harder, worries more, and sleeps less than he did then. His health is not as good, his happiness is not as abundant, his life not as free and wholesome now as then. The men of the present who are pulling hardest, working most, and resting least are the men with fortunes to their credit. The church owes these men, and all men, a debt. That debt has been long, all too long, neglected.

The church is under the obligation to teach men and women everywhere that they are only stewards; that all they possess really belongs to God; and that at least one tenth of all their holdings, a tithe of their income as stewards, is to be rendered to God for His service in the sanctuary, for the spread of His gospel, for carrying on His work in the world. God could have sent angels to carry on His work here below. But he did not. He loved man so that He exalted him into the position of co-laborer with Himself. I Cor. 3:9, "We are laborers together with God."

Now since we are exalted into co-partnership with Him, He requires, by divine law, that we give at least one tenth of our income for promoting His work in the world.

When Jacob was at Bethel, where he had the vision of the ladder that reached from earth to heaven, he vowed a vow unto the Lord, "And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee." Standing in the light of recent revelation, and carried up to high ground by what he had seen and heard, Jacob would not have made such a vow, but for heaven's law, and the discernment of God's will concerning him.

And so, at a later date, the law was laid down in plain terms. Leviticus 29:30, "And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord." That law has never been abolished, and is even better for the world's happiness and joy today than when it was given.

Again in Scriptures, the tenth of all that was made by the Israelites was set aside for use and service in the sanctuary. The law was pointed and powerful in this particular. Num. 18:21, "I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation." So by divine law a tenth was taken from all the Israelites to be used for service in the sanctuary. The Israelites had to contribute that much.

We find this striking scripture in II Chron. 31:5, "And as soon as the commandment came abroad, the children of Israel brought in abundance the first fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey, and all the increase of the field, and the tithe of all things brought they abundantly." Then still more striking is verse 10, "Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the Lord, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty; for the Lord hath blessed his people."

In Nehemiah 13:12 are recorded these words, "Then brought all Judah the tithe of the corn and the new wine and the oil unto the treasuries." So well was this fixed in the Jewish mind, and so thoroughly established was the law, that it was considered robbery not to contribute the tenth; all of the tenth that a man withheld was deemed so much theft. Mal. 3:8-9, "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation."

Failing to give the Lord a tenth of the income was deemed robbery; and that law has not been revoked or abolished. Old Testament law has been fulfilled, but not wiped out. That is, we are to fill the law full, and then go beyond that, for we are more favored than they for whom the law was made. In Proverbs 3:9 we are admonished, "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."

Our Lord flung wide the door, and instead of abolishing the law, He bade men, "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall man give unto your bosom." And then the greatest of all lessons was taught by our Lord, and one universally known to be true, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

There is a man of our acquaintance in this State who gives a tenth to the Lord, and more besides. The Lord has greatly blessed him. In addition to dozens of other benevolences in which he invests his gifts, he supports fourteen missionaries on the foreign field. We haven't the first doubt but that this man will tell you that he gets far more joy, receives more real life, and happiness, out of what he gives than out of what he gets. The Lord always makes His word good.

If we would be a happy people, as well as wealthy people, and know life at its fullest and best, we have got to learn the lesson and the law of giving. We who are engaged in religious vocations, in furthering directly the work of the Master, owe it as a duty to the business world about us to teach men the art, the joy, the law, and the satisfaction of giving. The Lord is not going to make one any poorer for giving, but richer. God does not want to rob anybody by requiring gifts; God always wants to benefit and to bless. These burdens at which we tug and strain will be easier and lighter when we shall have learned, and put into practice, the divine law of giving. The man who is not giving at least a tenth of what he makes, is not living up to God's requirements, and is missing much of the joy that the divine Hand holds out to him. It is for man's good, not God's enrichment, that man is required to give. Let any man try giving a tenth for one year, and then say if one ever got so much joy, and happiness, and satisfaction out of that much of his holdings, or investments before. God never would have required it had it not been for His love of man.

The Church owes it to the world of men and women, who want and need light, to teach this truth, and so lead them into the light.

EDITORS AND OFFICE.

The Greensboro Daily News inquires: "Are the editors about to lose their rabbit-foot? Congressman Steadman has overlooked them in making recommendations for the post-offices at Burlington and Madison." Did the News want all the editors of the State to quit the tripod and join the office seeking brigade?

If any profession, or vocation, has fared well in the matter of office getting in North Carolina under the present administration it certainly is the newspaper tribe. Fact is, we acknowledge to a feeling of shame that so many of our editorial brethren have fallen over one another trying to get office of late. About the only great papers in the State whose editor or staff have not been in the mix-up at the pie-counter are those of our contemporary, the News and the Charlotte Observer. This is rather a reflection upon our craft, for if there is a field, other than the Christian ministry, in which a man may better serve his day and generation, and help up-lift his fellows, than that of the editor and the newspaper man, we don't know what, or where it is. We congratulate the editors at Burlington and Madison that Major Steadman had, and reserved for them, a larger field of service than that of postmaster, namely, to edit their papers and help upbuild their country.

The editorial life is hard. We know full well its ups, downs, plights and pitfalls. But men of the right make-up are not out looking for an easy place and idle occupation. The editorial life is a life of service, and he who serves best lives most, and attains most nearly the end of his creation.

When man was first created and placed in the Garden he was told to "dress it and keep it." That was service. When man was driven from the Garden he was told to get his living by the sweat of his brow. That was service.

When the Savior wanted to make it known as to who would be the greatest he said "He that would be greatest, let him be servant of all."

The man who tries to escape honest toil, efficient service, willing work in this world is trying to escape all that is best, noblest and truest in life.

HELP FOR REV. J. G. BISHOP AND WIFE.

In last week's CHRISTIAN SUN, April 9, Dr. J. P. Barrett, writing of the terrible situation from the recent floods in Dayton, Ohio, said: "I am told that Dr. Bishop is hurt worse than most of our people. He and his wife are aged, and their house suffered more from the flood than did most of the houses in that community. I do not wish my friends to send me any financial aid, as I did not suffer losses, but if any of our people in the South feel like helping Brother and Sister Bishop, I am sure it would be help worthy and nobly given and just as truly deserved. I am making this suggestion without the knowledge of Dr. Bishop. He is now almost eighty years old and his wife is not very far behind him. He has always worked on a small salary and lived economically, and I am sure needs help just now as he stands face to face with such a calamity."

We offered our services to accept such donations as SUN readers might see fit to make, and to put them together and forward to Bro. Bishop as fast as amounts worth while accumulate. Bro. Bishop's loss is estimated at $1,000.00 or more.

The following have been received:

If others wish to help let them send in the amounts at once. We will acknowledge same in THE SUN and forward to Bro. Bishop without any charge. There is no more beloved or worthy minister in all our brotherhood than dear Bro. Bishop, who has literally worn himself out for his church and for the Kingdom. He has been for years Treasurer of our Foreign Mission Board, and because of his great love for the cause, has worked for barely a living salary. He needs help now. We have heard of some churches who will take collection for this purpose next Sunday. Sums will be gladly received, acknowledged and forwarded. Norfolk Memorial took collection last Sunday amounting to $25.00. We presume this was forwarded direct.

SEARCH, SEIZURE AND TEMPERANCE.

"Sixty gallons of corn liquor, in bottles, brown jugs, barrels, kegs and every other imaginable vessel was taken today at noon by Constable Raymond Hall, and Deputies Lonnie Morgan, Cat Belvin and Ed Couch. This is really the first time that the search and seizure law has had any effect in Durham." The above altogether illuminating paragraph is from the Durham Sun, April 12. So if the search and seizure act passed by our recent Legislature shall be of no service elsewhere, it has proven its wisdom for being in Durham.

The simple fact of the matter is that if liquor is bought, sold, traded, bargained away, or consumed, to excess, in North Carolina now, the fault is with the officers of the law. Sentiment in this Commonwealth is against liquor. The State by an overwhelming majority at the polls voted it out. Two years ago when the "near-beer" saloons were in vogue everywhere, an appeal went to our law-makers to abolish these nuisances. Such a law passed without opposition. This year, when the temperance people asked for an act whereby houses and places suspected of keeping liquor might be searched on suspicion, and if liquor were found, that the same might be seized forthwith, their request had only to be made known and the law went on the statute books without let or hindrance. When the popular and bright young Congressman, E. Y. Webb, from the eighth North Carolina district, introduced at Washington a bill to regulate interstate shipment of liquor, all North Carolina felt that this good man was their own Congressman. And it is a known fact that, throughout the State, prohibition is far more popular now than when it was adopted. And it is well known that those officers, municipal or other, who seek to enforce the prohibition law are certainly held in higher esteem and are more popular than those who wink at the blind tiger, or fail to do their duty.

With these, and similar facts in mind, we are certainly within the bounds of strict veracity and verified fact in saying that the temperance sentiment in this good State is in a wholesome condition, and the cause of temperance grows stronger as the months go by. North Carolina believes in sobriety and sanity and, unless a revolution comes, has closed the saloon, and barred it from her borders forever.

CHRISTIAN SUN DAY.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is now the standard size of religious papers. It is printed every week with new, bold, and pleasing type. Machine finish book paper only is used. It is the only denominational weekly paper in this State we believe that is stitched together, and we think the only one that is cut to size and trimmed by hand. All this means that the paper is being produced at great expense. Beloved brethren, we are doing our best at this end of the line to send out a paper each week worthy of the great cause, the great principles and the great Church the paper represents. Now we ask in return that patronage which the paper deserves, and must have, if it is to continue at its present high standard of cost, mechanism, and excellence.

We want our pastors to appoint CHRISTIAN SUN day at their churches. On that day, let there be a talk by the pastor about the worth of good literature in the home, the need of reading pure and good books, and the necessity of having in the home the church paper. Then let sample copies of THE SUN be handed out—we will gladly supply them free of charge to pastors—and let the congregation be canvassed thoroughly and every member urged to take his church paper. Then let the pastor follow that Sunday work up with some personal work the following week. Brother Pastor, if you will join us in this, we predict that the next sixty days will add a thousand new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN subscription list. What say you, Bro. Pastor? Do you appreciate your church paper, or are you willing for it to go back to the cheaper and smaller form?

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—R. D. Thompson, Jr., News Ferry, Va.: "The new CHRISTIAN SUN is a beauty. The whole church ought to be proud of it."

—Hon. I. W. Pritchard, Chapel Hill: "I am much pleased with THE SUN as it now is, and wish you much success with it, and with our new Publishing House."

—Bro. F. M. Farrell, Pittsboro, N. C.: "The SUN of last week is fine. I am more than pleased with it. It shows progress of the first order. We certainly ought to feel proud of it as our church organ now."

—We appreciate the many kind words about the new CHRISTIAN SUN. What we are still more anxious for, however, is to double THE SUN's circulation, which is a necessity, if we are to keep THE SUN at its present high standard.

—Dr. P. H. Fleming, High Point: "The CHRISTIAN SUN in its new dress received, and I congratulate you most heartily on its improvement. I wish for you and the paper much success. When I can help in any way, command me."

—Rev. W. T. Walters, Winchester, Va.: "I want to congratulate you on the first issue of THE SUN from our new Publishing House. I am highly pleased with it and feel that it will easily compare with the average church and religious weekly."

—The way of the militant suffragette is not all sunshine. Miss Florence Ward who had completed her four months sentence in an English prison for smashing windows in London, was debarred from landing on our shores by the immigration agent.

—Brother W. E. Lindsay, Post Master, Chapel Hill, N. C.: "I want to congratulate you on improvements in THE SUN in many respects. It has been a splendid paper all along, but the subscriber now who doesn't feel that he is getting his money's worth, is awfully hard to please."

—Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville: "I am enclosing a dollar to help our dear Brother Bishop. I wish I could make it more." This was the first dollar received in answer to the meritorious appeal in last week's SUN, the paper going by one mail, this remittance coming by the next.

—The Raleigh Christian Advocate reports eight charges in its Conference in which every official member is a subscriber to that paper.

Brother Pastors of Christian churches, how many official members in your church or churches are there who do not take your church paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN?

—The Executive Committee of the Christian Orphanage was in session Wednesday p. m. of this week. The work at the Orphanage moves along in a satisfactory manner. A water-system has become a necessity and the Committee decided to install and contract was let. The work to be done at once.

—Rev. H. E. Rountree, Greensboro.: "Next Sunday is CHRISTIAN SUN day with us. Please send me enough copies to distribute through the congregation, 50 or more." Thank you, Bro. Rountree. We earnestly beg every pastor in the Southern Christian Convention to follow your good lead in this meritorious matter.

—Our neighbor and esteemed contemporary, The North Carolina Christian Advocate, reports seven hundred and ninety-nine new subscriptions secured this year. THE CHRISTIAN SUN can report that many two months from now, if our pastors will take the matter up with their congregations as the Methodist pastors have.

—Rev. D. E. Millard, D. D., Portland, Mich., April 9: "Yes, Brother Editor, I do like THE SUN's new apparel and enlarged form. THE SUN, of which I have been a stated reader for 26 years, was always bright and luminous, but will be more so now. God bless THE CHRISTIAN SUN, its editor, and The Southern Christian Publishing Company."

—We express appreciation for the following invitation which it will be our pleasure to gratefully accept:

"Mr. and Mrs. Reps Williamson request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter, Mary Regina, to Mr. William B. Warrington on the afternoon of Wednesday, April 23rd, at 3 o'clock, Berea Christian Church, Driver, Virginia."

—Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Chapel Hill: "I must congratulate you on the splendid appearance of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Its form and general make up is a most decided improvement. I have been a subscriber since Bro. H. B. Hayes was editor and I am sure it never appeared so well as it does now. May its prosperity be even as its material growth and literary improvement."

—Rev. Warren H. Dnison: "I am hoping that the new SUN will be all that you can wish. I am much pleased with it and when it gets used to the new press and learns its environment, it will be still better. I have just closed a meeting at Portsmouth with Brother Harrell. There were twenty-four additions to the church and some other professions. The church appears to be thoroughly revived."

—North Carolina Christian Advocate: "We congratulate our neighbor, Rev. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, on the appearance of his paper this week in new dress, printed in their new shop at the college. The paper is enlarged and improved in many respects, and we trust the church which it represents officially will fully appreciate Dr. Atkinson's effort to furnish them a first class paper."

—Alamance Gleaner, Graham, N. C.: "The CHRISTIAN SUN, which has been published in Greensboro for several years, has been moved to Elon College, and was printed last week by the Southern Christian Publishing Company, which has erected a handsome publishing house and installed a new printing outfit. The paper has been enlarged and very much improved in appearance and is a credit to the publishers and to the church."

PRAYER AND MISSIONS.

By REV. J. O. COX.

Throughout the whole missionary world there is at present a very deep sense of need. In every report of every society, this finds expression; in every letter of every missionary, this is revealed. Opposed as our missionaries are by the gigantic masses of heathenism, they feel overwhelmingly their own helplessness. The power of evil is so terrific and the forces of evil are so active, that they are apt to despair. So, from every mission land, the cry of the missionaries comes to our ears. And for what do they cry? Not men, not money, as much as for prayer. Even above the urgent cry, "Come and help us," we hear the words, "Brethren, pray for us?"

In this deepened sense of the need of prayer which is noticeable on every side, we have the token that the church is entering into fuller sympathy with her Lord. For the Lord Jesus has all along told us that the supreme need of missionary work is prayer. In his first utterance on the subject, He makes this plain. "When He saw the multitudes, He was moved with compassion for them, because they fainted, and were scattered about as sheep having no shepherd. Then said He unto His disciples, the harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore." Before "Go," before "Give" comes "Pray." This is the divine order. Any attempt to alter it will end in disaster. Prayer is to the missionary what air is to the body—the element in which it lives. Missions were born in prayer, and can only live in the atmosphere of prayer. The very first duty of the church in organizing its missionary work is to awaken, maintain, and sustain, the spirit of prayer.

Prayer keeps us constantly in mind of what the true basis and the true character of our missionary work is. He who prays for missions never forgets that the work is God's, and that he is aiding in the Divine enterprise of missions. Prayer puts God first. It reminds us that He is the supreme worker. It reminds us also that only so far as we follow the line of His will can we have true success, and it inclines us to wait on God that He may reveal his will to us. How important all this is! We are often tempted to take the management of the work into our own hands. The carrying on of missions involves so many business details that unless the church is full of prayer, men will be tempted to forget God, and will attempt to do God's work in their own way. Prayer, therefore, keeps the eye toward God, and the ear open to His voice, and brings the heart more and more into sympathy with His purpose.

Prayer supplies the means by which the needs of our missionary work may be met. It was so in the early church, whose development for years was almost wholly a story of missionary progress, with every step christened and crowned by prayer. The first and last recorded apostolic acts after the Ascension were prayers—the gathering in the upper chamber at Jerusalem and John's cry from Patmos. The disciples did not at first take up the pen to preserve the memories of that priceless Life, nor was the voice of the world's great need strong enough to call away their thoughts. First of all they sought the Lord's feet in prayer, and in the still Pentecostal hour the first mighty flood of missionary power rolled over the missionary band, manifesting its character, its meaning, and its might in the converted thousands of that day. And not only did prayer secure the promised power, but it converted and equipped the workers in the mission cause. It was in the days that they all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, and after direct request for guidance, that Matthias was chosen to fill the place of him who was guide to them that took Jesus. The seven deacons, Barnabas and Saul, after their separation to foreign service by the Holy Ghost, the elders chosen at the close of their first missionary journey—none of these ventured over the threshold of their work without the preparation of prayer. And it was in prayer that new departures were taken. Cornelius at Caesarea, and Simon Peter on the house-top at Joppa, caught in prayer the commands that opened the door of faith to the Gentiles. Prayer formerly marked the inception of the first missionary tour, as it had brought the impulse of his life to the first great missionary. Hear His own words as recorded in Acts: "And it came to pass that when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance . . . and He said unto me, depart, for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles." And it was to prayer that, in time of need those early workers resorted. Peter kneels down by the death-bed of Dorcas, when he would have the knowledge of the Gospel power revealed at Joppa by a manifest resurrection of the dead. Prayer made without ceasing of the church unto God opens Herod's dungeon doors and sets the apostle free. The Philippian prison shakes, the doors hang ajar, the prisoner's bonds burst asunder amid the midnight prayers of Paul and Silas. And on the last page of the record, Publius' father's bloody flux departed in prayer. With everything thus begun, continued and ended in prayer; marking every emergency, guiding every progressive step, animating every act of wider obedience, is it any wonder that when the flames of missionary zeal and success sank away, it was because the fires of prayer had died low on the altars of devotion? Is there any other reason than this for the reiterated plea in the epistles of Paul, that the churches he had founded would labor together with him in prayer, for the prosperity of the gospel with them, and with him, in all the world?

The first two things in the early church were prayer and missions, and the deepest alliance in the early Church was between missions and prayer. Moreover, when in subsequent centuries the Church has caught something of the spirit of those early days it has been manifest in a new devotion to missions and a revival of prayer. It must necessarily be so, for His Spirit is a spirit of service and communion, of missions and prayer.

The first great need of missions is men. If the harvest field is to be reaped, we must have laborers. But how are these laborers to be secured? Surely by prayer. Is not this what the Lord told us? "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into His harvest." The surest way to get missionaries is by the throne of God. In the evangelization of the world, the missionary prayer meeting is a greater force than the public missionary meeting. A praying church never lacks missionaries.

The second great need of missions is money. The apostle Paul puts the two together when he says, "How shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" Money is needed. How is it to be obtained? By prayer. Teach your people to pray for missions, and you have already taught them to give to missions. People will always give for the support of a work which has real place in their prayers. Prayer meets needs in Missionary work which can be met in no other way. Have we never realized how much has to be done in connection with our missionary work that can only be done by prayer?

We appoint a committee or board to manage our missionary work. How can we be sure that the committee will act wisely, and will judiciously employ the means put at its disposal? Only by prayer. Nothing else will secure that. The men we appoint are kept in touch with God so that in the work, the Spirit of God, as the spirit of wisdom, shall rest on them.

We invite men to be our missionaries. How shall we secure the right men to go forward? What provision shall we make that they may be men full of the Holy Ghost? We send these men out into the heathen world. How shall we preserve them against discouragement, against faintheartedness, against unbelief and even against laziness? Only by prayer. The best men that can be obtained for this service need to be continually upheld, and a church has no right to send out any man unless she is prepared to uphold him by prayer. We gather out from among the heathen, through the work of our missionaries, groups of men and women and bring them into the fellowship of the Christian church. But how are we to encourage them, and to keep them true? Only by prayer. This is the absolute necessity for the proper carrying on of missionary work. If our mission cause is to prosper it must be steeped in prayer.

Durham, N. C.

KEEPING THE CHURCH ROLL REASONABLY CLEAN.

Nearly six years ago during my pastorate at Troy, Ohio, I recommended to the church there the following plan of steady revision of church roll. It was adopted and has been in use since then. In 1908 I recommended the same plan to the Huntington, Indiana, church where I was pastor. It was adopted and has worked splendidly ever since. Several conferences have suggested the plan to their churches and a goodly number of churches have accepted the method as suitable for their needs. It is offered here for what it may be worth to any who have difficulties along the particular line.

Church membership means something worth while. To be a member of church is something more than simply having a name on the membership roll. A church's membership should mean a working force of Christian men and women.

Every church member is expected to do something; to be a consecrated Christian; to have a share in the work of the kingdom; to attend the church services; to lead a Christian life; to lend a helping hand; to give something for the support of the church.

Do you think that a person who will not attend church at all, even when he is able to do so; who will not give anything for the support of the church, if he can; who will not testify to the goodness of God; who places burdens on the shoulders of others and will not himself help to lift the burden; who will not speak a good strong word for the kingdom of God and His church ought to have his name on the church roll? If you are that sort of a person do you think your name ought to be there? We think no church member ought to be such a person. We appeal earnestly to any such church member to turn from indifference to activity and service in the church. Each member has solemnly promised to be true to Christ and to the church; to support it by his help, influence and presence, and help maintain its righteous enterprises.

The church faithfully endeavors to keep in touch with all its members. Pastors, officials and committees try to be of service to every member within reach of the church. It communicates with its non-resident members, sending all its communications, special programs or notices, announcements, special appeals, etc., to all its members, resident and non-residents, and tries in every possible way to keep in close touch with all its members, and their response should be readily given.

We believe: (a) that when a church member will not attend his church services at all when he is able to do so, and maintains such an attitude for years; or

(b) When by open life so inconsistent with what is reasonably expected of one who belongs to a church, and of such a character as to become matter for public discussion, and persists in so doing after kind admonition by brethren or officials in the church; the church may consider either (a) or (b) as equivalent to a request to take such name from the church record.

These reveal the mind of the member and places the responsibility of membership or non-membership upon himself—where it belongs, and not upon the church, thus relieving it of the possibility of reasonable censure.

When a majority of the Board of Deacons regard any name on the church roll as clearly coming under the head of (a) or (b), and report such name to the Official Board, it shall notify such person that such action is being considered, giving full opportunity to be heard, or renew his allegiance to the church. When three-fourths of the members of the Official Board present at any regular meeting shall then so vote, the name shall be stricken from the roll when the church has approved the action of the Official Board.

I think the following should be kept in mind in revising church rolls:

1. The roll of the church should be corrected frequently, discontinuing such names as by reason of conduct and neglect are unworthy of being continued. This should be done gradually, without display, and in a Christian spirit for the good of the local church, and not merely because some statistical report is to be made to conference or other body. No reward or appearance of selfish interest should be a motive to remove names from the roll. The good of the church and the individual are the supreme considerations.

2. The church must have done its reasonable duty to reclaim the indifferent and sinful ones, and to keep in touch with the non-resident member. The church has a duty to the absent member as well as the absent member has a duty to his church.

3. There should be no difference as to resident or non-resident members. A member is a member and distance does not materially change the relationship. The church should correspond with him, send him all printed matter, notify him of special occasions etc., and should expect occasional communications and his help on the support and benevolences of the church. He should be solicited for these as any member of the church is, and be expected to respond.

4. In almost every case a member should place his membership where his residence is. There should be but few exceptions where there is a church of the same order. It is unworthy and should be condemned when ministers and church members urge other church members to keep their membership in a local church when they live in another community where there is a church of their own people.

If a member persists in holding his membership locally he should be expected to do financially the same as though he lived there and enjoyed all the privileges of fellowship and worship. Sentiment and selfishness should not be set over against the general interest of the kingdom and of the spiritual life of the person himself.

5. We should put the burden of responsibility of church membership upon the member himself. Let the church and pastor do their full duty and more, and then if he insists on cutting himself off by conduct or neglect discontinue the name from the roll.

6. Let all these corrections be made in a prayerful Christian way at times during the year when no matters of report or reward are to be considered rather than in a hurried spasmodic effort just before conference when it might be charged that secondary reasons are the motive.

CONSERVING OUR FORCES.

It is very essential that we look well to the interests of our young people, for it is to them that we must look for our future laborers and leaders in this Christian church of ours. The fact is deplorable, but nevertheless true, that we have shown by far too little concern in this direction. That we have been and are still derelict in duty towards the young talent of our church is very evident when we view the situation as it really is. So many young lives radiant with hope and full of promise have been allowed to remain amongst us in the undeveloped state. Our ranks have again and again been increased by those who desired in their very hearts to render valuable service, but for the lack of the proper counsel and encouragement, the lack of being assigned some work to do, their coming has been a disappointment to themselves and of little real worth to the cause. Not all who have given themselves to the church have ended this way, of course. While this is true, multitudes have joined the church only after a short while to be placed on the "inactive list," or reproachfully numbered as "dead heads" for the church to carry as a "burden." The fact is the church is usually responsible in a large measure for its own inactive members, for the reason that these inactive ones were allowed to join an inactive church, take an inactive seat, and remain as inactive members. It is very strange, as well as a great pity, that so much wanton waste has been allowed for a hundred years and more.

We cannot afford to stand and see this waste of our forces continue. The need is too great and the business of our King too urgent to allow even one young life to remain idle in the market-place when there is work in the vineyard that ought to be done. Our efforts should be directed not towards enlisting the first young person of the church in service, but the last; not just a few, but all. There is need for every single life and a single service for every life. This service should not be rendered singly, but in a cooperative way.

Any church that fails to conserve its young life, need not look towards a larger future. On the other hand, that church that keeps its eye on its children and young people, providing the proper means for their development in spiritual things, is sure of success in helping advance the interest of the Kingdom of God. Only by conserving what we have and taking care of those who join us later, can we hope to do our part in giving the gospel to those who have it not.

We feel grateful for the little that has been done towards the care and training of our young people, but we are not awake to the needs and opportunities of this phase of our work as we should be. Our hearts are not stirred by the cry of the thousands of young people in our homes and at our door who are calling for, and deserve, the very best of service and our depest concern.

In this connection, let it not be forgotten that our own Young People's General Convention has not received the patronage and support that it deserves. Now I am no officer of this convention and have no ax to grind. I only see that a great host of us expect the Convention to run by itself as if perpetual motion had been discovered and applied to this department of our work. The Y. P. G. C. has as one of its prime objects the enlistment of a larger number of our people in definite, aggressive, Christian service. An institution with that aim in view deserves the cooperation and support of the whole church.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

I left home on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in March, reached the home of Rev. J. W. Holt about 11 a. m., found him busy getting ready to go to Union Ridge that p. m. I was to go with him. Sister Holt has long been an invalid and has borne much suffering. She has been a good, faithful Christian from early life, and amidst all her affliction has continued, Job like, to trust in God. May God bless her and her faithful husband.

The following Sunday was a beautiful day, and the people turned out in large numbers at Union Ridge. I in a few words spoke of the work at Chapel Hill, and then took a free will offering. Their donations showed their earnest desire for a church at Chapel Hill; for they were liberal, and I believe others that were not at church will send in donations.

I had never seen their beautiful new church before. The membership and pastor, Rev. J. W. Holt, deserve great credit for erecting this nice house. I heard and saw enough to cause me to think church and pastor were knit together with heart strings of love. They all have the thanks of the Chapel Hill Church for the offering made.

Saturday before the fifth Sunday in March found me at the bountiful table of H. C. Simpson, at Palm Street church, Greensboro, N. C., and he was so kind hearted as to give me an excellent dinner and a nice donation for Chapel Hill. He is an energetic merchant at Revolution cotton mills. Rev. W. C. Wickler is the beloved pastor of this church. It being Saturday I had no chance to see the church together. Sunday was a very rainy day, but a few faithful members and their esteemed pastor, Bro. Rountree, kindly gave me an opportunity to tell them about the Chapel Hill work. A free will offering was taken. It amounted to more than double what I was expecting. If all the churches were as liberal to the mission work as Walker Avenue, Greensboro church is, it would be no trouble to build churches. Bro. Rountree likes his work and the church likes him.

While on my journey, I passed through Haw River, Graham, Burlington and Elon College, where I collected several dollars from those who had made previous pledges. At every home I visited I was received with kindness and good will.

We are now standing on the mountain top of success in the Chapel Hill church work and looking over in the valley where we expect to see soon the sweet flowers of a finished house of worship. Let prayers go up and money come in, and soon you will hear songs of praise floating on the breezes from the Chapel Hill Christian Church.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The last three days have been red letter days in Suffolk. The second congressional district school fair filled the city with teachers and children and many patrons and distinguished men. The exhibit of literary, scientific, and manual work in the Armory was extensive and showed talent well improved for contestants so young. Teachers and officials came from Isle of Wight, Southampton, Princess Ann, Norfolk, and Nansemond counties, a street parade of a thousand children, and luncheon served at the Jefferson High School and hundreds of teachers filled a perfect day with great delight. The field contests in ball park attracted a throng that filled the air with shouts at every successful leap or run. Yet some people object to shouting when a newborn soul tells the story of his spiritual success in a religious meeting.

The music and addresses in the Methodist church were a feast for teachers and all who are interested in progressive school work. The principal address on Thursday night was made by N. C. Stearns, State Superintendent of Public Instruction. Two excellent addresses were made forenoon and night, on Friday, by J. Henry Highsmith, Prof. of Education in Wake Forest College, N. C. These addresses were received with great profit and high praise. The school fair and Conference of the Association brought good things to Suffolk and carried good impressions away. The progress in education is manifest in four great brick school buildings in Suffolk up to date in design and equipment and the quality of their work. Three of these for white children and one for colored children.

Prof. De Jarnette of the Driver High School was the prime mover, the inspiration, and the leader in this great and successful school fair. He had the hearty co-operation of most of the school Boards, Principals, and teachers in the second congressional district.

Saturday was Farmer's Day. A great "Farmer's Congress" had been planned, promoted and realized through the persistent and indomitable enterprise of M. W. Joyner, a gripsack citizen of Suffolk. The business men contributed money, the women and men assisted in hospitable service at the High School building, and a thousand people or more enjoyed a free luncheon—yea, a real dinner. Farmers within a radius of twenty miles came as the guests of Suffolk and were not only feasted by friendly hospitality, but the committee provided a great meeting of four hours in the Academy of Music with addresses bearing upon agriculture and human culture by eminent experts in health, soil crops, manures, stock, and domestic life.

Governor Wm. Hodges Mann made the chief address to an audience of five hundred and few men can fill an hour with more real inspiration and aspiration. When the Governor of a great commonwealth comes face to face with farmers, with a sincere and sympathetic desire to help the tillers of the soil, and the boys and girls of the State, it looks as if government was ready to give the people a fair chance. More and more real information is being gathered by the State and given to the people. The function of government is being realized as never before. It is really helping the people in practical life; but this is no gratuity on the part of the State. The people pay for all they receive. The farmer does more for the State than the army. The men behind the plow are the largest army in the nation. They fight grass and weeds, insects and weather, and sleep on their arms. "They draw no rations, no clothes, no pay from the State"; but they contribute of their blood to support the navies, the armies, the schools, the experiment stations, the surveys, and the institutions through which the government acts. This congress was composed of farmers, railroad men, state representatives and citizens, all seeking to promote scientific agriculture, the education of the young, cooperation among all interests and classes, and the highest possible welfare of all. The plow and the steam engine, the experiment station and the machinery of state all have a common origin and mutual ends to serve. W. W. STALEY.

FROM REV. M. L. BRYANT.

Dear Editor and Friends:

It is not often that I try to write for THE SUN partly from medical advice and partly from a sense of desire not to say much about my trouble to the world. I suppose I have the right to beg the disposition realized by about 99 per cent. of those afflicted as I, that is, to long to keep in seclusion until I can think and act as my normal fellows. I have been praying for that time to come speedily in my case. I believe it will. A something I cannot describe to you tells me so. Of course the Doctor encourages me and at my last examination, February 11, of this year he said he could find no active trouble at all but that I must be patient and take the cure until fall.

We patients are all exceedingly anxious to see the results of the famous Friedmann treatment. Some how there is a general feeling that this treatment will prove successful. A successful treatment must come, for God will not turn a deaf ear to the prayers of millions begging for a revelation.

We expect to go home on a visit in June if our plans mature. We are glad to see our "SUN" shining forth in new glory and we pray for a prosperous Publishing House.

Sincerely,

M. L. BRYANT.

PORTSMOUTH LETTER.

Our church has just passed through one of the most successful series of meetings that we have had in many a day. The meeting lasted for two weeks, closing April 6th. The attendance was large throughout the entire meeting, and the interest deep. There were about thirty confessions, and twenty-four additions to the church roll. Rev. Warren H. Denison, D. D., of Norfolk, Va., was with us and did excellent work. His sermons were strong, forceful, and telling in effect. They were well received by the entire congregation, and did much good. The church was greatly revived and we believe brought to realize her responsibility more fully. The place and power of prayer in the life and work of the church was emphasized by Dr. Denison throughout the meeting. He places prayer before everything else. The church can be no stronger than the prayer-life of her people.

The weakness of the average church today is due to the fact that the membership has transferred to the pastor, and placed in his hands, and upon his shoulders, the burden of responsibility that they ought to carry. The minister is expected to do the praying and the work that his whole congregation ought to do. He is expected to make the church a living power in the community, while his members are like great sponges, absorbing all that comes their way, and never giving out anything to help men and turn them to Jesus Christ. The minister can do telling work in a community only as his members become channels through which he can work.

Members must get the work of the church upon their hearts, and shoulder with the pastor the responsibilities that belong to discipleship. The church can be no greater than the life of the individual members that compose it. If every member knows the art of prayer and uses it faithfully, it is impossible to estimate its power in any community and to calculate the work it will do for the extension of the Kingdom in the earth. The church that shoulders the responsibilities of discipleship in earnest will become an evangelizing power, and her interest in men will reach to the farthest corners of the earth.

The average church today is an evangelizing power, only about two or three weeks during each year. This is about the only time that pastor and people put forth a real definite effort to turn men to Jesus Christ. The great business of the church is neglected all the balance of the year. Is the church doing its duty when it fails to stress the great business of the church for fifty weeks in the year? What do you think about this? Is there anything wrong with our method? Are such methods calculated to develop strong churches? Will such methods develop a strong prayer-life in the membership of the church and send them out to be workers for Christ? Will such methods keep the burden of lost souls upon the hearts of our people? Is the great Head of the church fully satisfied with such methods? Let us think, meditate and pray over these things.

FALL RIVER LETTER.

Perhaps some of the southern brethren might enjoy a letter from the city which is devoted mainly to the manufacture of cotton cloth, and whose raw material must all be raised outside of the immediate vicinity, and most of it in the South. It always strikes a newcomer as somewhat strange that a Yankee town works with cotton. Yet such is the fact. Our churches in Fall River are all doing regular work, and I think, advance work. The First Church, Franklin St., will take up the experiment, for it, of the duplex missionary envelope plan of church finance. This is a great innovation for this old parish, but we hope it will be successful. It certainly is worth trying. Bogle St. Christian church is going right ahead with its new pastor, Rev. I. T. Headley. They called him, without seeing him, or he seeing them. And both seem to be more than satisfied. The great number of young people and children in this interesting field makes the long pastorate highly desirable for the permanent good of the church. Bro. Headley is a southern man, who originally came from our Methodist brethren. He has made a very good impression already in his new and important field. The North Christian church (Steep Brook) has recently been frightened by the resignation of its pastor, Rev. Lester Howard, D. D. But everybody insists that Bro. Howard withdraw his resignation. And Bro. Howard naturally likes to oblige folks, and when every man woman and child in the parish insists that Bro. and Sister Howard remain where they are, it is hard to go away. During the week preceding Easter, Passion week services were held by the Christian churches of the Fall River district, composed of the First church, North Fall River, Bogle St., and Pottersville, which is a suburb of Fall River. Good interest was shown in these meetings, and it is hoped that they will long continue to be the preparation for the Easter Time. There must be a closer bond of friendship and acquaintances among our Christian church people in this city. There is need of standing together, indeed by all loyal Protestants. In round numbers, in this city of looms, there are 15,000 of American parentage, 15,000 of English, 25,000 of Irish, 35,000 of French, 7,000 Portuguese, 1,000 Jews, and 12,000 of Armenian, Russian, and Italian birth. Not all the Americans are Protestant, and not all the Portuguese are Catholic, but the racial lines are an index of the church communions. And we count about 85 per cent. Catholic, we see that these support about 20 churches (figures of 1910) and the Protestant support 47 churches. The children of this world are wiser than the children of light. Why?

CARLYLE SUMMERBELL.

NORFOLK LETTER.

The liberty, which every genuinely democratic institution accords the individual to do his own thinking and the freedom which it gives him to form and hold his own opinions, would appear to be based upon the assumption that in the doing of these things he will make an earnest effort to be honest and sincere in them. Otherwise, his liberty will benefit neither himself nor the society to which he belongs.

If, after two or more individuals have each made an honest and painstaking effort to reach the truth with regard to some given proposition, and if, having done their best, they reach different conclusions and find themselves unable to agree, each should still hold his opinion in charitable regard for that of the other, remembering always that when greater light is given they may find that either they are both right or both wrong. At best, human opinions are always frail, and subject to constant revision.

Honest difference of views between individuals of uprightness and integrity need never be the occasion for harshness or ill-feeling between them. If one is positively sure that the other is wrong, and though his error be so patent that there can be no question about it, still, he who holds the truth can afford to wait patiently, since his final vindication is only a matter of time. The maxim that "truth, though crushed to the earth will rise again" is not yet obsolete.

But the search for truth is sometimes a very laborious one, and clearness of mental vision is a much rarer attainment than many may imagine. We are often unable to afford the time necessary to proper investigation of the matters upon which we may feel called to spend our opinion, or else we lack the mental inclination for the painstaking deliberation involved in the reaching of calm and mature judgments. Hence, we adopt a sort of hit or miss method, with the chances nearly all in favor of our missing. Fortunately, many of our mistakes are trivial and lead to no serious consequences, but now and then lasting and far-reaching damage is the result of our haste.

But, reverting to the matter involving individual difference of opinion, it may be trite, but still well to say that criticism of those who cannot see things as we see them should always be given with a desire to help and not to hurt, provided we would make it effective. When offered in this way and where we feel ourselves competent to criticise, it is legitimate.

However, there is much criticism offered in a nagging way which deprives it of much of its value. The right sort of criticism should aim to be constructive, but this sort is more nearly the opposite. People are then apt to suspect that it is based upon prejudice rather than reason, and the receptive attitude which they might otherwise feel is changed, either to one of discouragement or indifference. Many persons, with the best motives in the world, are very timid and easily depressed by harsh comment upon their efforts or conduct.

Then there is an incompetent sort of criticism which also fails in effectiveness. Unfortunately, there are still many in the world who express their opinion with sometimes great heat and warmth about matters with which they refuse to acquaint themselves when opportunity is given. They condemn books which they have not, and will not read; they censure, in terms of the most caustic criticism, men and measures which they do not care to understand, and are unwilling to study. These are not always bad folk, either but a little more charity, and a disposition to think before they speak would make their strictures of far more value and use.

CHURCH REUNION.

On the first Saturday in May, 1913, we shall have a home gathering of the members of Salem Chapel. A song and praise service will begin at 10:30 A. M. There will be preaching at 11:00 o'clock, after which we shall feast our bodies on temporal food. The entire afternoon will be spent in a reconsecration service and business meeting. We are anxious to have every member of Salem Chapel enjoy this reunion with us. We would not be so selfish as to restrict this invitation to the members, but everybody has cordial invitation. Family reunions are seasons of joy and precious memories of loved ones, and the many happy days we have spent together. The church is a Christian family. Shall we not enjoy a reunion of social and spiritual fellowship? Come and help us make this day a Christian love feast—a day every member of Salem Chapel shall love to recall—a day of reconsecration to God and to the service of our fellowmen.

If you are a member at Salem Chapel and can not be with us, will you not write us a letter and let us know something of your spiritual welfare? The church is interested in you and is looking forward to that final reunion in heaven of all who have been members of our church family on earth.

Yours in His service,

B. F. BROWN, Pastor.

—Long, and still longer life, great and still greater prosperity and success to the Youth's Companion which has now passed into its eighty-seventh volume. Hoary with age, as the calendar reckons time, it is the most vigorous, virile and wholesome publication of its kind in this country. It grows younger with increasing years, and its accumulated wisdom of more than four score years makes itself manifest in every issue. The Youth's Companion is a valuable publication and worthy of a place by any and every fireside.

There are always those whose eyes are holden so that they cannot see the beauty and holiness that wait in any place where men live, but must go to the ends of the earth in a vain search for that which stands at their doors. Sir Launfal leaves the Christ at his gates when he goes on the long and idle quest, and finds his Master only when he has learned that the divine is always close at hand. The illusion of the remote, complex, and obscure is the thinnest of veils to those who have once seen life face to face and passed through the process of the reality.—The Outlook.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Brother minister, we are sending you sample copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN in its new and enlarged form. Will you tell your people that we need their subscriptions and need them now; that we are doing our best to merit their approval and their patronage and to give to the church a paper of real worth, and attractiveness, and one that will be read. Help us out, brethren and friends, and the same will be appreciated.

—Rev. G. O. Lankford, Wadley, Ala., April 10: "I wish to congratulate you and your corps of helpers on the first issue of THE SUN from the new Publishing House. This paper in its new form is a real pleasure to the eye, and a delight to the heart, and this is from my heart and not merely on paper. What I've said doesn't look like what I feel. The Lord bless you and yours, and prosper this new enterprise to His glory first, and to our good second."

—The date of the Woman's Missionary rally, of the women of the Southern Christian Convention, has been changed from May 14 to May 27. Pastors should take notice and see to it that one woman is elected from each church, or Missionary Society, to attend this meeting. If ever our women could get together and talk the situation over and understand what to do, there would soon be a Woman's Missionary Society in every church in the Convention.

—Rev. P. S. Sailer, Boston, Mass.: "THE SUN's new dress may not have been fashioned after the latest Paris Model, but I want to tell you it is very becoming and suitable. All hail to the new Publishing House! Your first number from the new presses had some excellent things in it, too. I was particularly pleased with Brother Booth's observations concerning the "big preacher"—the big preacher who can't find a hole big enough to creep into without digging one."

—We are wondering what has become of our beloved Brother Lightbourne, Dover, Delaware. His health was reported in a critical condition some weeks ago, but we have the notion that he is pushing forward in his great work of building up the Delmarvia Christian Conference. The State Sentinel of Dover had this paragraph last week: "Sunday, April 13th, at 2:30 P. M., Dr. R. S. Stephens will preach at Magnolia. We wish every one interested in the Christian Church to be present. Dr. Stephens has a special sermon for those who will hear him, and his presence on that day is to mark a definite step in the progress of the work at that point." SUN readers would greatly appreciate a line from Dr. Lightbourne as to how the work goes in his field.

—The following related in Harper's Monthly has pith and point in it, but must have stung the mother's heart:

"One day in the spring the orphans from the asylum were taken in motor-cars out to the park. A society woman, accompanied by her stylish little daughter, was driving through the park in a big limousine car. They stopped and watched the procession of little orphans, and the mother explained that the little boys and girls had no homes and no fathers or mothers.

After she had finished, she discovered that her little daughter was almost crying; her eyes were filled with tears.

"Why, what's the matter, dearest?" she asked.

"O mother," was the sobbing reply, "I want to be an orphan. Can I?"—

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE SUPERINTENDENT.

Next Sunday's Lesson, "Jacob's Meeting With Esau."

Scripture.—Genesis 33:1-15.

Time.—Twenty years (Gen. 11:38, 41) after Jacob left home (Lesson 2), which was, according to Ussher, B. C. 1760.

Places.—River Jabbok, Peniel, where Jacob and Esau met, Mount Seir, Succoth.

Persons.—Jacob, family and servants, Esau and 400 men.

Golden Text.—Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you.—Eph. 4:32.

Leading Thought.—Blessed are the peacemakers.

After the Bethel experience, of which we studied last week, Jacob continued his journey, was given a hearty welcome by his mother's relatives, fell in love with Rachel, and made a contract with her father, his Uncle Laban, by which she was to become his wife. In this uncle he found pretty nearly a match as a crafty deceiver, although in the long run Jacob outwitted even him.

Jacob got trapped into marrying two wives in order to get the one he wanted, and became the happy father of eleven sons and a daughter. As superintendent of his father-in-law's business he prospered, and became so rich that he was envied by Laban's sons, and there was a prospect that he might figure prominently in another family quarrel. But about this time God told him to return to his father Isaac in Canaan. While Laban was busy with the work and the usual festivities of sheep shearing, Jacob got together his family and effects, and "stole away." After three days Laban heard the news, hastily organized a force and, at the end of seven days, caught Jacob in the region of Mount Gilead. A sharp controversy, coming near being tragic because of Rachel's devotion to her father's idols, was finally settled by a covenant that included Galeed and Mizpah, characteristically representing the Oriental blending of a hateful warning and a loving benediction.

Jacob's circumstances—a bare escape from a furiously angry father-in-law and the approach to a brother who was furiously angry the last time he saw him—circumstances induced by not a little sin on his part, brought Jacob to a keen sense of his need of a Divine Friend, brought him into condition of mind to become penitent, repentant, seeking, trusting. Then, at just the right time, at Mahanaim, God sent angels to give him courage, to assure him of his care, and to prepare him for the mental, moral, spiritual crisis that was at hand.

The hope of this man Jacob, the deceiver, the shrewd, at times unscrupulous, schemer, was that now and then he permitted his nobler self to have the right of way, and put himself into God's hands to be dealt with according to divine wisdom that he might be a better man. He had terrific struggles, fought long and hard, but at last he yielded to be helped, to be saved.

LESSON CONTRASTS.

In last week's lesson we saw Jacob journeying, perhaps alone. In this lesson he is journeying, but with a great company. At the date of that lesson he was a youth; at the date of this lesson he is a matured man. At that time he was unmarried; at the time of this lesson he has four wives, eleven sons, and a daughter. When he was at Bethel he was practically penniless; now he is a man of great wealth in flocks and herds. On the occasion of that lesson Jacob was fleeing from his brother Esau. On the occasion of this lesson he is fearful of meeting Esau who is attended by four hundred men. But when Jacob was at Bethel God made him some rich promises. In this lesson we see he is fulfilling them. In that lesson Jacob had a vision of God in heaven; in this lesson he has a vision of God in the face of a reconciled brother.

QUESTION REVIEW.

1. What two men in this lesson had a "love feast"?
2. What! The same Esau and Jacob who were going to be enemies all their lives?
3. How many years had it been since Jacob left home because Esau vowed to kill him?
4. Where did this happy meeting occur? (Near the River Jabbok.)
5. Who came with Esau to meet his brother?
6. Who were with Jacob?
7. How had Jacob tried to make it right with Esau?
8. How did Esau show that he forgot and forgave the injury?—Leonard.

HELPS FOR THE C. E. MEETING.

Topic for April 20: "Verses in the Psalms." Psalms 19:1-14.

This meeting is the first of a series of five "favorite verse" meetings. The selections this time come from the Psalms.

A good idea would be to have a number of references written on slips of paper and have them read in the meeting, with a few comments. Let each member be handed a reference as he comes into the room. Have everybody to bring Bibles.

Adopt the rule that each member must quote a verse and add an equal number of words of his own.

The following will illustrate the plan:

Great Psalm Sentences.

"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him." If we realize this encircling host we shall not fear any human opposition.

"Depart from evil, and do good; and dwell for evermore." It is no more possible to hold to evil and do good than it is possible to dwell in two houses at once.

"I waited patiently for the Lord, and he inclined unto me." When we wait for the Lord, it is not because he is too slow but because we are too fast.

"I will not trust in my bow." It will break. The string is frayed. The arrows are crooked. I will use God's weapons only.

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul?" If I learn the precise reason for my gloom, I shall probably be ashamed of it.

"Blessed is he that considereth the poor." This means more than investigating; it means helping.

"All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me." Yet in the depths of trouble I will remember that they are Thy waves and Thy billows.

"Let me know how frail I am." Often the longest-lived are those that realize the danger that they may be short-lived, and take good care of themselves.

WHY A MISSIONARY MASS MEETING FOR OUR WOMEN?

1st. For Information. "Information is the key to interest." It is the aim of our Woman's Boards to arouse sufficient interest among our women so that there shall be some form of missionary work inaugurated in every church of our denomination. None of us are interested in anything which we know nothing or very little about. One aim of this meeting is to give out information concerning our women's work specifically and missions in general.

2nd. For Inspiration. Very often it is not lack of interest in missions that hinders our work but that interest is not adequately distributed. Some are deeply interested, others only moderately so and others have no interest at all or are wholly hostile. The remedy will be found in information and enthusiasm. One woman who may have only a little interest, attending such a meeting may get such an amount of inspiration and enthusiasm as to be able to go home and arouse the whole church of which she is a part to heretofore unheard of activity. Our people must be informed and enthused. We must touch their minds and hearts, their imaginations and feelings if we would secure their cooperation and just such meetings as this is where such inspiration may be secured.

3rd. For an Exchange of Ideas. It will be a gathering of women interested in a common object comparing notes as to the best means of attaining that object. Tried and proven plans can be discussed, new phases of work brought out, methods of securing a wider reading of missionary literature discussed and the like. We expect every person who comes to that meeting to come not only for the good she will get out of it personally but for the help she can give as well.

4th. For the Deepening of the Spiritual Life. Every woman who reads these words is urged here and now to begin to pray daily for the success of this meeting. Each one who does this will realize the awakening of a new zeal in her own soul. One cannot go to a meeting of this kind and come in touch with the leaders of such work without being made to feel a responsibility for her share of such work. Then we are brought to know that we cannot do missionary work without God's help and we are made to recognize anew our dependence upon Him. To hear stories of the conditions in heathen lands, to get a world wide vision, to be told of the degradation and superstition of our sisters across the sea will be the means of bringing us to our knees before God in thankfulness to Him for the blessed salvation which we enjoy.

Pray much for the success of this meeting, my sisters, and plan to be there even at the expense of valuable time and money. It will pay.

ABBIE B. DENISON, Norfolk, Va.

A FINE PROGRAM.

The Missionary Society at Elon College rendered its first Literary Program Sunday P. M. at 3:30 o'clock in Y. M. C. A. Hall. Scripture lesson was read from the 13 chapter of Matthew. Songs 108 and 113 in the Alexander Song Book were sung. Three splendid and instructive essays were read "Education, Suffrage, and Abolition," by Mrs. Charles Montgomery. "Forerunners in Early part of Century," by Mrs. J. W. Patton; "Pioneer Society in the Decade Following the Civil War," by Mrs. Rose J. Machen. Miss Pearl Fogleman sang a beautiful solo, Misses Annie Bagwell and Grace Rollings rendered a splendid duet. The program was enjoyed very much by all the members.

PASTORS PLEASE NOTE.

The following letter was on April 2nd sent to every pastor in the Southern Christian Convention, tho' the date has since been changed from May the 14th to the 27th as printed below.

The President of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society for the Convention has asked me to publish this letter in THE SUN and ask each pastor to read it to his congregation. Will each pastor do so? Thank you. The letter is as follows:

"I suppose that you have noticed in The Christian Sun of March 26, that on May 27th at 10 A. M. the women of the Christian Church will meet here in a missionary rally. To this meeting every Woman's Missionary Society is requested to send a delegate and so is every Church which has no such Society.

I am writing to ask you to lend us your very necessary and valuable assistance in this matter and to request of you four definite things:

1st. Have every Woman's Missionary Society in your field of labor elect a delegate.

2nd. Have every Church in your field not having such a Society to elect or appoint a delegate.

3rd. In each instance see to it that the Society or Church pays the delegate's traveling expenses.

4th. Have the delegate's name reported to me at once so that I may provide for her entertainment while here.

I believe you will gladly help in this worthy enterprise, for you know what it will mean for missions in our Church and in your field to have delegates from every Church present. Please attend to this at once. It is the Lord's business and it demands haste.

Thanking you with every good wish for your work, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

MRS. W. A. HARPER, Cor. Sec'y."

CHRISTIAN ZEAL

Zeal to do the best work must have knowledge. We have often seen enthusiastic, zealous persons whose misdirected efforts were often ridiculous and as often pitiful. Other Christian virtues, such as faith, courage, fidelity, unselfishness, and perseverance must be combined with zeal in order to obtain results.

Take Daniel, a true servant of God. He had that faith, zeal, and courage to stand for Christ amid persecutions. Though a captive in the Banquet Hall of King Belshazzar he was directed by the spirit of God to explain the meaning of the hand-writing on the wall which showed to the people present that they were not zealous of good works.

Paul, an apostle of God, was an ever zealous man. While persecuting the church of Christ he was earnest in his work, but when his soul was touched with the saving power of God he exercised his zeal with greater power and became more enthusiastic in the work of saving souls, than ever in the persecution of souls.

Men to-day are zealous, and they exercise their zeal in many ways, though sometimes in the wrong spirit.

We have that Christian Zeal exercised in our own church, among the young people especially. See them as they work earnestly in the Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor. They are wide awake and ever ready to render any service they can for the cause of Christ. It is through faith and courage that this Christian organization was ever established in this church to show to the world that we are endeavoring to do the will of God.

As a model of Christian zeal take Jesus Christ the Savior of the world. In his youth we see him before Priests, and Elders, teaching them truths they had never before heard. And when his parents sought him, asking him why he left them, his answer was, "Why seek ye me? Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

On one occasion when the disciples begged him to eat, for he was wearied from a long journey, he said unto them, my meat is to do the will of Him that sent me and to finish His work.

So you can plainly see that, during Christ's ministry on earth, he was ever zealous in his work and always ready to help fallen humanity.

PRAYER MEETING HELPS FOR APRIL 27.

Topic: "Mission Work at Home and Abroad. IV. Bible Work." Acts 17:1-12.

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal:

But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal.

The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!

Illustrations that Illustrate.

A grat missionary to Japan, got his first Bible class as the result of finding by some Japanese of a little Dutch Testament floating on the waters of Nagasaki harbor. The Bible is transforming nations of men.

During times of fierce persecution in Madagascar the native converts divided their Bibles for safe keeping, and some of them buried the Book, and dug it up occasionally to read it.

A noted Chinese bought a Bible and took it to his village. Within three years, solely by the reading of that Bible, a church was established, and the astonished missionaries were summoned to dedicate it.

After you begin reading missionary biography, you will learn the great fact that even the most fascinating fiction is not so interesting. These Godly men and women who taught and lived the Bible to and among the darkened lands will always inspire.

The Bible is the window through which the marvelous light of the Sun of Righteousness shines upon the heathen world; the Light that shines in darkness, comes by the Bible. You should take up the study of some mission, or mission station and note the results of the Gospel.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—The Ministerial Council of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference was in session at Elon College Tuesday, April 8, and was of interest to those in attendance. Rev. J. W. Holt presided. Rev. J. O. Cox is Secretary and Treasurer. The subject considered was Missions. The address by Rev. A. B. Kendall on the Bible and Missions, and a paper by Rev. J. O. Cox on Prayer and Missions were of especial interest and merit. The Council is to meet again Tuesday after the first Sunday in July.

—Mrs. Abbie Denison sends a readable article for our Woman's Missionary Department. Brother pastor, get a good woman from your church to attend the Woman's Missionary meeting of the Southern Christian Convention to be held at Elon College May the 27th and 28th. If you do this, in all probability you will soon see in your church a Woman's Missionary Society. Get the church to elect a delegate and then pay her traveling expenses. She will come and your church will get the benefit of it.

—The Daily Charlotte Observer, April 7:

"THE CHRISTIAN SUN, published at Elon College, comes this week in an enlarged form and printed on new type of excellent face. THE SUN is edited by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, and is the official paper of the Christian Church in North Carolina. It has been always conducted on broad and charitable lines, and has been a Church paper in the truest sense of the word. It is now in its sixty-fifth volume and there is every reason to hope for a long tenure of usefulness in store for it."

—The following from the Tidewater News, Franklin, Va., speaks well of the thoughtfulness of Rev. C. H. Rowland of his invalid mother and may give a gentle hint to others:

"Those attending the revival services have doubtless noticed an ordinary desk telephone suspended in midair directly in front of the speaker's stand, and thereby hangs a little story illustrating the thoughtfulness of a son to an aged mother, as well as the wonderful versatility of uses to which a modern invention may be put. Rev. C. H. Rowland, Pastor of the Christian church, had the instrument installed in order that his mother, Mrs. Margaret Rowland, who is in her eightieth year and is very feeble, might hear the sermons in her own room at the Christian parsonage. She is able to hear clearly and distinctly, by means of the telephone receiver in her room every word of the sermon, as well as the singing by the audience, etc."

THE PASSING THROUG.

—Pope Pius of Rome has suffered a relapse and is considered quite ill.

—"Only a cheap person will try to make another person feel cheap." And you can usually measure a person by that standard.

—The 171st anniversary of Thomas Jefferson's birth was celebrated at Monticello, Charlottesville, Va., April 13. President Wilson sent a wreath for the Jefferson tomb, and a special train brought a delegation of Daughters of the Revolution from Illinois. A good and great man doesn't die when he seems to die.

—The Boy Scouts come in all right some time, and show the worth of their teaching. On a street car, in some city the other day a woman offered a boy a counterfeit nickel, telling him that he could pass it on to some one very likely. "I thank you," said the boy, "but I can't accept it. I am a Scout." We wish more boys were Scouts if being so instilled such a spirit as that always.

—The noted American deaf, dumb, and blind girl, Miss Helen Keller, the wonderful woman who "has conquered darkness and silence" and is now one of our best educated women, is likely to be called upon to go to Spain to teach the second son of King Alphonso and Queen Eva, who is himself deaf and dumb.

—An anarchist attempted to assassinate King Alphonso of Spain April 13, three shots being fired at the monarch in the streets of Madrid. This is the third attempt to assassinate Alphonso during his brief reign, not that he is a dangerous or a despised ruler, for he seems to be harmless enough; but because he is king. The anarchist despises a ruling sovereign.

—Every time the Pope of Rome sneezes, the papers put his picture before the people, and when he doesn't sneeze, they fear he is going to be ill, and put it in again. We certainly wish the Pope well, long life, and great happiness, but we cannot understand why our dailies have to fall over each other in getting his name and picture on the front page every day or so. Roman Catholicism has certainly learned the benefit and advantage of advertising and believes that it pays to advertise.

—The North Carolina State Baraca-Phila-thea Convention, which was held in Charlotte last week, was attended by more than a thousand delegates, and on Sunday formed a line of march and paraded the streets with banners floating to the breezes, there being 1,100 young people in the line of march. The Charlotte papers say that the like of that was never before seen in that good town—one thousand and one hundred young people in line of march on the Sabbath in the name and under the banner of their King.

—The thirteenth annual State Convention of the North Carolina Sunday-school Association will convene in Greensboro Tuesday night, April 22, and will have sessions for three successive days. Among the distinguished speakers put down on the various topics are Dr. Fraulin McElfresh, Chicago, and President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, on the topic, "The Important and Rapidly Developing Work of Teacher Training." President Harper is also chairman of the Executive Committee of the State Association.

—It is given out that Post Master General Burleson has determined upon a radical reorganization of the postal service, the plan being to put all Postmasters under Civil Service and require them to pass an examination for admission, retention, or promotion, and Postmasters are to be appointed and transferred without regard to locality so that the New York Postmaster for instance may be transferred to Chicago, or a Greensboro Postmaster to Norfolk, etc. Precedents are not cutting much ice in Washington these days.

—Our good friend, the Farmer's Bank of Nansemond, Suffolk, Va., makes a showing at the close of business, April the 4th, 1913, to the State Corporation Commission, which reveals the enormity of the business handled by this remarkable institution. On a capital of $20,000.00, there are deposits of more than $2,000,000.00, surplus and undivided profits of over $800,000.00, and a footing on the date named of more than $3,000,000.00. This bank still holds the place of highest honor of all banks in the United States upon capital invested, which makes it the strongest institution of its kind anywhere in the country.

—One of the most creditable, and altogether praiseworthy publications in this State is The Uplift, a monthly journal published by the Stonewall Jackson Training School, Concord. The type-setting is by the boys of the training school, and the print is neat and at-

Children's Missionary Stories

STORIES are—yes, must be—used by every wide-awake worker among, or leader or teacher of, children.

MISSIONARY STORIES seem to have been the one field well-nigh overlooked until Mrs. Alice Moreton Burnett, Corresponding Secretary for the Woman's Board for Home Missions of the Christian Church, made a compilation of thirty interesting, instructive stories pertaining especially and directly to missions that are sure to be appreciated by workers, teachers, leaders, pastors, fathers, mothers—and the children.

Some of the Important Events of both Home Missions and Foreign Missions are also included, together with Suggestions For Junior Leaders.

They make a book 5 x 7 inches in size, 128 pages, red cloth binding—a handsome, attractive volume. Price 35c per copy postpaid.

tractive. The articles are all of the uplift character and breathe spirit of inspiration and good cheer. If this publication is an evidence of the kind of work that institution is doing then about the best appropriation this State has made to any institution or enterprise in many a decade was that made to build and equip this manual and industrial training school.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY AND LIVE STOCK.

To provide improved facilities for properly handling the growing movement of live stock to Eastern and Virginia markets from the Southeastern states, the Southern Railway is now completing a modern plant for resting and feeding stock on property adjoining the Spencer, N. C. yards.

The plant consists of 33 pens, 20 of which are covered. All pens and alleys are paved with one foot of cinders and are located on a gentle slope, providing natural drainage. Each pen is provided with water trough and feed rack, and the entire plant is electrically lighted. Nine pens are set apart for cattle from the quarantined area and are separated from the others by a solid board wall ten feet high. As all cattle are unloaded at Spencer for feed and rest, this convenient plant will prove an important facility for stock growers.

The construction of this plant is in line with the Southern Railway Company's policy of making every possible effort to aid the live stock industry in the territory along its lines, in accordance with which it has provided special train service for live stock from points where sufficient business is offered and through its Live Stock Department is endeavoring to interest farmers, to disseminate helpful information, and to contribute in every proper manner to the upbuilding of the industry.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN PIANO CLUB PREVENTS WASTE.

You will not find many men who would deliberately throw away one hundred dollars, and yet there are many who unintentionally waste that amount every year in one way or another. Careless buying is one way of wasting money. The founders of the Club had that fact in mind when they adopted the principle of cutting down the cost of pianos by cutting out the waste in marketing them. The Club claims to save its members one hundred dollars or more on their pianos and ask you to give it an opportunity to prove this fact to your entire satisfaction by thoroughly testing the piano in your own home before paying one cent or in any way obligating yourself to join the Club. It will cost you only a postal card to investigate, and if the testimony of Club members who have already joined is to be relied upon you will undoubtedly save a hundred dollars or more on the price of your piano. We have a copy of the Club's catalogue for you. Write for it today before you waste that one hundred dollars through careless buying. Address the managers, Ludden & Bates, Christian Sun Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

GIVE!

The mid-Western floods still stand as one of the great calamities of a century. Whole cities are in ruins, hundreds of their people have perished, property beyond reckoning has been destroyed. The flood-swept region is still in want of many things—food, clothing, shelter, work. If you feel for the sufferers,—if you can put yourself in their place, show the sorrow in your heart by giving generously with your hand. It is not too late even now to find the nearest relief station—and to give.—Youth's Companion.

EFFECT OF ONE BOTTLE

Crandall, Tex.—“After my last spell of sickness,” writes Mrs. Belle Teal, of this city, “I remained very ill, and stayed in bed for eight weeks. I couldn't get up, all this time, and though my doctor came to see me every day, he didn't do me any good. I had taken but one bottle of Cardui, when I was up, going everywhere, and soon I was doing all my housework.” Cardui helps when other medicines have failed, because it contains ingredients not found in any other medicine. Pure, safe, reliable, gentle-acting—Cardui is the ideal medicinal tonic for weak, sick women. Try it.

Now you can play the Piano as well as any one

SIMPLY join The Christian Sun Piano Club and let the Club send you one of the superb Ludden & Bates Player-pianos. You no longer have to understand music in order to produce it any more than you do in order to enjoy it. Club members tell us that they are simply delighted and astonished to find how quickly the Player-piano develops their knowledge and taste for music and what splendid entertainment and recreation it brings to their families and friends.

The Player-piano has come to stay—for it is really two instruments in one—a regular piano for those who can play and a Self-player for those who have never studied music. It enables all the members of the family to produce for themselves the sweetest and the best music of the world's great Masters. Even a child of six short years learns to perform on the Player in a few minutes. To those who did not have the opportunity to study music it opens the door that was locked—the door to the greatest of all arts—and reveals to them a new and beautiful world of which they had only dreamed.

Pianos of Quality

Ludden & Bates, Managers of the Club, were the pioneers in the Piano Business in the South. For nearly half a century they have studied the requirements of the Southern Trade. During this time they have placed over seventy-five thousand pianos in Southern Homes. Your parents and grand-parents, in all probability, secured their pianos from this old and reliable House.

Ludden & Bates Pianos are their own best advertisement for they are honestly made of the best materials, by skilled workmen whose greatest pride is the “Quality” of their work.

The Club brings these superb instruments within easy reach of practically every home. Investigate its many privileges and advantages.

The Ludden & Bates Player-Piano

The Ludden & Bates Player-piano was one of the first instruments of its kind ever offered to the Southern Trade. It is, therefore, not an experiment, but has demonstrated its practicability and superiority by years of successful service. For the home that has no musician and for the home with a “silent piano” the Club performs a splendid service, for it not only provides a piano of the sweetest tone but also confers upon every member of the family the ability to play the choicest selections of the world's great composers. The Club also provides a means by which you can exchange your old piano for a Player-piano.

It is a pleasure which you can easily afford to enjoy, but one that you cannot afford to deny yourself and family. The Player-piano fills the home with new life and interest. It helps to make home what it was intended to be—a little paradise on earth. It provides the delightful entertainment and the pure, elevating pleasure which attracts the young people to the family hearth and prevents or corrects their inclination to roam.

My Dear Children:

I will not answer the letters any more in order to use the space for something else. Just as quickly as I can get the mite boxes we will try to get something new, which I hope will be better.

At the meeting of the Board, the 9th, bids were presented for installing the water and sewerage system. That of Hunt Bros., Greensboro, N. C., was accepted. Now, that looks a little more like business, but we need $500.00 more to pay for this work—we have some on hand. I don't see why, since everyone will recognize the great need, we can't have this money right away. The people want to help this cause, all they lack is an opportunity. Let's do what we can to get this off our hands.

Some of the schools have left off the monthly offering, as you have noticed in the reports. Can we depend on you?

Eight applications for children to our home were accepted and two released. When these eight come in there will be sixty-two children here to be fed, clothed and cared for.

NEEDED AT THE ORPHANAGE.

I have just made a visit to the Orphanage. I find that the institution badly needs a new cooking outfit. The old stove is about completely burned out, so nearly so that it is with great difficulty that fuel is kept in place to get a meal. Besides, this old stove is too small. I am sure the sympathy, and also the pride we, as a people, have in an institution we profess to equip and support, will not allow such need to continue longer than for us to learn of it. Now, Superintendent Carter is in a hard place endeavoring to meet current expenses and at the same time trying to pay off a previous indebtedness of about $500.

As treasurer of the Orphanage, I am in position to see the need of a little special help just now in buying a good range. I appeal to the ladies who may read this to send a contribution as early as possible for this purpose. It will take at least $125.00 to buy a good two ovened range, one large enough to do the cooking even for the 65 persons who are in the Orphanage now. Let the ladies send a dollar, two dollars, or five dollars to Rev. E. M. Carter, Supt., to aid in buying a range.

NEIGHBORS.

Bobby made the snow-man. He had made snow-men in the country, and he knew how. He always made them by the gate, next to the big syringa-bush. He used to cut a stick from a tree for the snow-man to hold, and he generally placed a long chicken feather in its cap. Bobby was only nine, but he could make as fine a snow-man as any one.

But in a city yard that was not even all your own yard, it was different. Recently Bobby's father had come into town to live. Bobby liked the city and the big school, but he did not like the apartment-houses, for the yards were small and there were few places to play.

In the same street lived Joey Rodman, who was about Bobby's age. The afternoon that Bobby made the snow-man Joey kept throwing stones. Bobby tried not to mind. There was lots of snow in the yard, and he made the snow-man unusually large. The other children helped him, but Joey kept calling out and throwing things, and at last he knocked off the head of the snow-man just as Bobby had put in two bits of coal for the eyes.

Bobby could not stand that. He ran after Joey, and Joey dodged, and began to call him names. Joey's sister, Sadie, who cared for the six motherless children, heard the noise in the yard below.

"Do you think it's your yard?" she called out to Bobby. "It is just as much Joey's yard as it is yours!"

Then Bobby's mother opened her window. "Come in, Bobby!" she said; and when Bobby left the snow-man and climbed upstairs, she said, "Son, we musn't quarrel with our neighbors, you know."

"But Joey threw stones —"

"Never mind," said mother. "We won't talk about that. Perhaps we'll get to be friends with Joey after a while. He hasn't any mother, Bobby. And you remember about coals of fire."

That was mother's rule. Bobby knew that text about coals of fire so well!

"But I don't see how you could ever make coals of fire out of a snow-man, mother!" he said. And then mother laughed, and he laughed, too. When you heard his mother laugh, you had to laugh, too, because her laugh was so catching; her eyes wrinkled up, and she hugged you. Joey had not any mother, and Sadie never laughed. Poor Joey!

After a while Joey and the other children ran out into the street to play. Bobby went down, and finished the snow-man with no one to trouble him. He put on the head again, and placed an old broom under its arm. He put it in very tight, so that no one could take it out easily.

Joey's sister, Sadie, was bringing things out to the roof of the two-story extension. It was a tin roof, and sloped a bit. Back and forth her tired feet were going, and the cold air numbed her fingers. Suddenly her foot slipped, and she lost her balance. She clutched at a clothes-line, but it snapped, for it was old and weak. Down she came, hurtling twenty feet through the air. Bobby stood speechless with fright.

But the snow-man—the heroic snow-man—was there to save her. Standing firm and erect, he received the shock of Sadie's fall. It was too much for his head. He lost that first, and then, as he went all to pieces, he made a pillow for Sadie, who lay in a dazed heap. Bobby ran forward.

"Oh, oh, I never will say a word against that boy!" she said, sitting up in the snow. "His snow-man has saved me!" Bobby's mother came running down-stairs and out into the yard; she lifted Sadie up and began to feel of her arms and legs. There were tears in her eyes—mothers are like that, when any one is hurt.

"You poor child!" she said.

"But I don't believe there's a bone broken. Come right in and I'll give you a hot cup of tea."

Sadie came, and Bobby followed. Behind him came Joey, and the two boys lingered round while the tea was made. Sadie drank it, and smiled at Bobby's mother.

"Nobody has ever cared enough about me to give me a cup of anything since I can remember," she said. "You needn't be afraid that I'll be cross with Bobby again."

"I'm not afraid," said Bobby's mother. "We're neighbors. I always like my neighbors, and I want to help them if I can."

"Well, you can count me as a neighbor who likes you," said Sadie. "Come along, Joey—and mind you behave to Bobby like a good neighbor, too."

Bobby climbed into his mother's lap after they had gone up-stairs. "Coals of snow are all right," he whispered in her ear.—Priscilla Leonard, in Youth's Companion.

KEEP YOUR MOUTH CLEAN.

The mouth is the most neglected and ill-kept organ of the human body. Some authorities assert that our neglected and misused mouths are responsible for more human ills and loss of working efficiency than any other one organ in the body. Care of the teeth can not be taught too soon. Children in school should be taught the care and proper use of the "human grinding machine." This is particularly true where children are not taught a few simple, regular habits about cleaning and brushing the teeth at home. Tooth brush drills are a regular course in some of our larger city schools. They should be in every school.

PUBLIC WILL NOT TOLERATE NEEDLESS EPIDEMICS.

Health authorities have easy times these days. The reason is the public has no way of knowing when it gets a square deal. Epidemics come, spread, kill a lot of people, make others sick, and disappear frequently largely because of natural causes and no one gets "laid out" for it. Health authorities sometimes learn about certain outbreaks, and sometimes they do not. Even when they do learn about outbreaks of epidemic diseases they are sometimes slow about establishing quarantine and give the families quarantined but little or no instructions as to what to do.

In these days it matters little how many of our friends and neighbors die of consumption or typhoid—no one says much about it. We seem to think it inevitable. In a few of our larger cities and towns we are getting over this. Our chambers of commerce and a few of our progressive citizens are talking about a lower death rate, or they are regretting that a certain contagion continues spreading in their community. Next year they will grumble still more about such things and begin to look around for some one responsible for a continued high death rate or for permitting an outbreak to spread to secondary cases, and lo! there will be the health department. The next year they will get "hopping mad" over increased death rate, neglected quarantine, frequent outbreaks, etc., and then real health work will begin.

But neither the public nor any one else will ever be able to know just where they stand as regards community health, preventable deaths, or the work of the health department until we get statewide registration of vital statistics.

MRS. DR. J. J. SUMMERBELL WRITES OF HARROWING EX-PERIENCES AT DAYTON.

(Fall River, Mass. News, April 2.)

Mrs. Isabella Vickery Summerbell, of Dayton, Ohio, has written a letter to her sister and brother, Miss Irene E. and Benjamin D. Briggs, of 307 Grove street, this city, telling of her experiences during the floods. The letter was written Saturday morning, and was received here on Tuesday. Mrs. Summerbell was an eyewitness to the horrors which accompanied the floods, and her letter is a vivid account of her harrowing experiences. Mrs. Summerbell's home is at 215 4th avenue, between Conover and Summitt streets, three houses from Conover street. The letter read as follows:

Dear Reine:—Have just heard that we could send out mail some time to-day. I am safe and able to be on my feet. No city water, no gas, no electric light, but we have cistern water and are very thankful, the flood water did not get into the cistern. We boil it and drink it. Dr. Powers' (Rev. O. W. Powers, D. D.,) family, who were water-soaked, have come to live with me till they can get back home, which will probably be weeks ahead.

Water came into the cellar half way to our knees, but Thursday it was out enough for the furnace fire, and we all came in. We have a small gasoline stove and can make coffee and cook a little on top of stove.

Twenty-four of our church people were at Hess' for two days and nights. Boats passed my house in the street; but Ben, you wouldn't know Dayton. The 5th street bridge and railroad bridge are gone; can get to town only on 3rd street bridge. And no one came over on this side till yesterday. The water was 12 feet deep in Main street. It was over the top of the big street lights. The loss of life has been great. People taken out of second stories in boats which would capsize, the current was so strong, and drown. Ben, people were drowned in front of our church. Can you believe it? Soldiers on duty all along Summit street. The water did not get beyond there on the west of us.

The first relief train came in yesterday, and we can buy bread now all we need. We have been making coffee for some of the guard for the two days we have had this gasoline stove. In fact it is hot coffee about all time. The Gobys (next door neighbors) have no stove, and come in here to cook eggs, potatoes, and coffee. It is confusion confounded, but our lives are spared. Men came in and moved my furniture all upon the second floor. The water rose so fast we were afraid to leave it, but it only came into the cellar. The current was so swift down Conover street, three houses to the next cross street, that boats would upset at the corner of Conover and 4th avenue.

I saw them take a man, wife and baby out of the boat at the corner and five men held the boat while these people got out, standing in water above their waists. Oh! The horrors of it all is beyond imagination! Fences, sheds, chicken houses and everything you can think of pushing past in the swift current, and worse than all dead bodies. The church opposite Hess' (within a block) is now a hospital full of sick people. Five babies were born there last Tuesday night. That church was full of people who slept on the pews and floor. All churches were opened where there was no water, and packed full of folks. They are waiting me now, so I'll stop; but this gives a little idea of what we are passing through. Ben, take this to Carl to read, and tell him to phone my friends as I have no time to write any more now. So grateful that our lives are spared, and are trying to help the suffering ones all we can.

I have slept on the couch and given up my beds to those who have none. Did not undress after Monday night till Thursday night, but excitement kept me going, although I did not sleep for those dreadful two nights at Hess' fearing that our own house might be filled with the horrible flood. The water rose almost to Summit street, and was up almost to the top of our steps. I hope you can get this letter. Sent two telegrams to Carl for him to notify all, and hope he got them. Haven't had a newspaper all the week, but heard that Ohio and Indiana were the only states flooded. Don't worry any more for we are all now safe. Water gone down so people can get to their homes and begin to repair damages, but in some homes only the roof was out of the water. Ben Weiner, where you left the book that night, his house was covered entirely and they have lost everything. The river was over two miles wide. They want me down stairs so I must go.

Your grateful sister, BELLE.

Fires broke out and many buildings were burned in town, also over here on the west side. No one could get to them, and they burned themselves out. It was a dreadful sight, both flood and fire.

THE CHURCH AND OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

We have often heard the false accusation that there is no room in our Church for ambitious young men and women. This statement has lodged in hundreds of hearts throughout our land and among all denominations. False it is, for those who have made such statements have failed to get room in other churches and among other denominations, which proves, that it is in the man and not in the institution.

But never have we seen the opportunity so great and the door of service open so wide as it is now. Last week's SUN bedecked in her new gown and coping with any religious paper in the State, new, clear, and fresh from the press of our people, marks another mile post in our progress. Elon's recent addition in room by the erection of a handsome three-story building opens up a new vision to our success as a Church and points the on-looker to a continued progress and prosperity. The enrollment of over 350 students at the College this year is a convincing fact that the people know the worth of a good institution. The enrollment of almost twice the number in the Teachers' Normal Course, which opens today, is a living testimony of the success of this recent addition to the College curriculum. The Elon College Weekly with a circulation surpassing any other College publication in the State, carrying news of intellectual progress every week from the College, and portraying the congenial spirit of the institution, points one to the living administration of Elon and lends a clear vision to its future.

Not only is this heart-satisfying success seen in this community, but throughout our entire brotherhood the hands of willing workers and the efforts of sincere hearts seen and the final outcome cannot be estimated in this generation, though great success is crowning the efforts made in our day and making visible to all the value of true service.

Churches in the Southern Christian Convention have enjoyed marvelous growth during the last ten years. Last year an annual with 120 pages held the proceedings of the Conferences and the church statistics in the Convention; this year 160 pages of condensed form was necessary to record the happenings and workings of the churches in the Southern Christian Convention. Everywhere the prospects are brightening and the impossibilities are being removed by united hearts in the cause of Christian service. There is much being done and much to be done. The young man or young woman who has a desire to serve the church can find a place of usefulness amid great activity and among willing hearts. There is a call to the young men and the young women of the Christian Church, there is a challenge for them, there is eminent success that awaits them. May the call be heeded, the challenge met, and the fulness of success be found in surrendering of lives to the cause of the Kingdom.

DEATHS

Allison.

D. S. Allison was born February 29, 1832, and died March 18, 1913, at the age of 81 years and 17 days. He professed faith in Christ in his boy-hood days and joined the Presbyterian church, in which he soon became an elder, and held this position until death. He died in the faith. He was a soldier for four years, '61 to '65, being a member of Company D, 56th N. C. volunteers. He was married June 5, 1859, to Miss Martha Montgomery, and to their union God gave ten children, six boys and four girls. There are twenty nine grand children, and his dear wife whom he lived with 54 years. A host of friends and relatives to mourn their loss. A good man has fallen on sleep. May God's blessings comfort the bereaved ones.

To this union God gave fourteen children, nine of whom are living. She was a member of Pleasant Ridge Christian Church and was always glad to have the preachers come to their home. She was a good woman. May the blessings of God rest and abide with the loved ones. Funeral by the writer.

Mrs. Etta May Barrett, born 19th of November, 1883, departed this life April 2, 1913. She had been a great sufferer, yet patient and ever trusting in the Lord. She was a member of Dendron Christian Church up till she and her husband moved to Petersburg, where she united with the Disciple Church. She was a good Christian woman, and will be much missed in the home, the church, and the community. Funeral service was conducted by the writer, and interment made in Wakefield cemetery. She leaves to mourn their loss a husband and a host of friends. May the Lord bless the bereaved ones.

Price.

Mr. Joseph Thomas Price, a well known and highly respected gentleman of Elberon, Va., passed out to the spirit world very unexpectedly April 9th, 1913. Brother Price was seventy-five years of age, served the four years war in the sixties as a brave soldier and a loyal citizen. He was a faithful member of the M. E. Church, yet he loved all Christians and helped any and every where he could to advance the Lord's cause. He leaves to mourn their loss his dear wife, five children, and a host of friends. A good man has gone, a helpful neighbor is missed, a kind and loving husband and father is now in the realms of the dead. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Heath, of the M. E. BRIEFS

Not Wealth, But Willingness.

Church work is carried forward not by those who possess the most wealth every time, but by those who are willing. It takes devotion, consecration, a willingness to sacrifice, to push forward the work of the kingdom. The New York Christian Advocate declares that "Five hundred consecrated servant girls could build almost any church Methodism might desire to erect. They would require a longer time than a millionaire would ask for the same purpose, but when their work was finished it would have a much larger significance." What wealth needs is consecration; willingness, unselfishness. Then it becomes significant.

An Idle Brain.

An ex-prize fighter, known as "Kid Carter," but whose real name is William B. Jennings, apprehended, and incarcerated in a Boston jail, awaiting trial for murder, after having admitted the murder and confessing to other crimes, said: "I have played my cards in luck till to-day. Now I have played my last one. I never did a day's work in my life." The blame of that criminal's shocking and blood-thirsty career must be attributed to those who allowed him to grow up in idleness. It is a fearful indictment. The curse of youth is not wholesome toil but unwholesome idleness. Parents owe it to their children to let them share the joy and satisfaction of service, labor, occupation. "An idle soul shall suffer hunger." Prov. 19:15.

Search and Seizure.

By repeated acts of its General Assembly the people of North Carolina have shown that they want to give the cause of temperance a fair show, and a square deal. On this account the officers who wink at violations of the law may expect, sooner or later, to share the infamy that their failure to perform their plain duty deserves. We sanction most heartily this editorial utterance from the Raleigh News and Observer:

"The officers of North Carolina who will not get busy in enforcing the search and seizure act ought to resign. And if they do not they should be summarily dismissed from office."

The people have spoken repeatedly, and these officers who are derelict to this public duty have read awrong the temper of the people if they think to tamper with the expressed will of the people and themselves go unrebuked.

Religious Reading.

That is a poor home indeed into which some religious periodical, some church paper, does not go, week after week, reminding the household of the duty, and the pleasure, of reading something every week about religion and the better life. The church paper seeks to remind, to enjoin, to admonish, to instruct, to edify, to teach, to help. Pity the person who does not stop long enough once at least each week to read a religious paper. The Methodist Book Concern, which not only supplies books but publishes The Christian Advocate (N. Y.), persistently remarks:

"The Book Concern is a servant of the whole Church. It must not do less than serve the whole—young and old and middle aged; the wise, the unwise, the cultured and the ignorant; the indolent, the short-visioned people and the people who struggle with doubts and fears; and, not least, those who are broken-hearted by the pain and sorrow of the world."

Cigarettes and Youth.

When you see a boy under seventeen years of age, in North Carolina, smoking a cigarette, bear in mind that he is not only violating the laws of safety for his own mind and body, but also the laws of the State. Wise men have set in council on this matter, and through legislation have said that cigarettes shall not be sold in this State to boys under seventeen. The deadly cigarette is sapping the very vitals of many a youth, and impairing their strength for the race of life. All other things being equal, the boy who smokes cigarettes is not hope to cope in life with the boy who does not and is doomed to see the non-smoker outdo him in the years ahead. The State would bounce forward in material and moral prosperity if the law against minors smoking cigarettes were every where strictly enforced. Parents should, in the light of love and reason, appeal to their children, and officers should, in respect to their sworn duty, appeal to the law and its enforcement.

Why Not Reason.

A wicked man who had shot to death a fellowman the other day cried out from the anguish of his soul when the electric chair loomed up before him, "Oh! why did I not consider? Had I but just stopped for one moment and reasoned with myself as to what my rash act would lead me to! But it is too late now." Such conduct on the part of men who will not stop and consider made the great prophet cry out (Isa. 1:18): Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." The prophetic emphasis is on the word now. It is only when men can come, and go, or stay, that they may reason in time. Come now and reason; when prejudice and passion and hate have done their deadly work one can neither come nor reason. Oh! that men would consider! Stop and think before the baneful act, the sinful deed is done.

Each One A Part.

No man liveth to himself. Each one is a part of a greater whole. All Christians help to make up that which our Savior said He was—the way. He is the way; each follower of His is a part of the way. He identifies Himself with His own. The Sunday School Times very pithily puts it after this manner:

Christians are in the world to make it easier for other people to get to heaven. The ladder that Jacob saw at Bethel, reaching from earth to heaven, is fulfilled in Christ. As suggesting our part in that ladder, Dr. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut has well said: "We should be stepping-stones to heaven, not stumbling-blocks. Christ revealed himself as the way, and we, as members of Christ, are part of that way." For we are members of the body of Christ; members of him whose life was poured out and whose life is now lived to connect heaven and earth, God and men. In this marvelous mission of Christ's he would use every member of his body, and use us all the time. Do all our actions, words, looks, and thoughts, suggest heaven to those about us? Have we realized that Christ is equal to even this miracle-use of our lives?

The Way of the Hazers.

Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, has issued this sane and sensible mandate: "Your hazer is a bully and must necessarily have a streak of innate cruelty. The United States Navy has no place for youths of this kind. I take this opportunity of saying that this senseless and dangerous practice will not be tolerated at any educational institution founded and supported by the government. Future manifestations of such character at the Naval Academy will meet with vigorous action."

Daniels is a member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina and as such had experience in helping to handle the grave and deplorable situation which was precipitated at the University last Fall when student Billy Rand met his death at the hands of the hazers. So, if this terrible tragedy shall have the effect of eliminating hazing from the United States Navy, this noble life will not have been offered in vain. God not infrequently overrules the wicked inclinations of a few to the furtherance of a great reform and the saving of many. Many a single life has been lost in a cause which did not mean half as much to the world as it would mean for the nefarious practice of hazing to be eliminated from our higher institutions of learning. We doubt if God ever permits a noble life to be offered, in a sacrifice of blood and death, but that untold good comes, in some way, to the world to honor and requite it. Young Billy Rand is not dead, and the cause in which his young life was, though cruelly and forcefully, offered up, is not a "lost cause."

The way of the hazer, like that of other transgressors, is hard, and, on that account, good people will fight it till its cowardice and abomination have ceased.

Prosperity is a painted window, which shuts out much of the clear light of God, and only when the blue and the crimson, and the golden tinge are removed, is the glass restored to its full transparency. Adversity thus takes away tinge, and color, and dimness, and we see our God far better than before, if our eyes are prepared for the light.—Spurgeon.

Hold fast Christ, but take His cross and Himself cheerfully. Christ and His cross are not separate in this life, however they part at heaven's door.—Samuel Rutherford.

EDITORIAL

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

Sometimes men hunger, but remain silent. They have Scripture for this: "If I were hungry I would not tell thee," (Psa. 50:12). Deep in their bodies the pain of hunger bites; but they remain silent. You must interpret their silence, or their need will never appear to you. The restless movement, the mark of pain, the expression of despair, are sufficient signs. Unless you interpret these your opportunity for service in their behalf is gone.

This age of ours suffers spiritual hunger. We are surfeited with material gain and worldly prosperity. Even rich men are poor, and they know they are. Their wealth has not brought them health or happiness. Poor men are rich; their poverty has not deprived them of health or happiness. Neither riches nor poverty can possibly purchase, nor produce that which is best and biggest and most desirable in this world. Hear the inspired writer. "The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." Now mark the lesson we so much need to know: "More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honey-comb. (Psa. 19:9, 10.) The world of men and women about us hunger today for this sweetness. The restlessness, the nervous hurry and worry, the signs of pain and of anguish tell the story of this world's hunger as never before.

There is the hunger, First, For a spiritual vision.

We cannot be satisfied with things of the flesh. The heart of man teaches him that he is more than a thing of clay. In his soul he knows that beyond the stars there is a life that will never end. His heart-hunger, while here in the flesh, is to catch glimpses, now and then at least, of that celestial home; of the associations and the surroundings there; of the conditions and manners of life and being there. There is today a deep heart-hunger for the things that are above and beyond. Your man of poverty, likewise your man of wealth, wants to lift the veil, or have some one lift it for him, and see and know what is there within. His mind whispers to him that he is not as large as he should be, if he is to enjoy the fulness of what is before, and that he is poorly prepared for the association and fellowship that he expects beyond the skies. There is somewhat that tells us we are not as large as we may be, that we are not as well prepared as we should be, to try consequences in the life that awaits us, and the house that is being prepared.

All the wealth in this world cannot feed this heart-hunger. All the gain beneath the sun cannot satisfy this worthy and holy desire.

Men know well enough that "Life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment" (Luke 12:23). And men understand, when they stop to consider, that "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. (Rom. 14:17.)

Men hunger today, they declare it in silence, and in the signs of pain and anguish upon their faces, to know more and more about the kingdom of God.

There is a spiritual hunger that ravishes the hearts of men.

It is high time they were being fed.

Not long since when a preacher of righteousness, just a private citizen, was leaving England to take up his duties in this country, he was honored of royalty and sought of kings and princes. It was and is understood that this preacher of righteousness, Dr. J. H. Jowett, was first of all a spiritually minded man, and walked close with God and was trying, with all his heart, to feed hungry souls on the real bread of life.

Brethren and beloved, the real cry of the present is, as of yore, "Give ye them to eat."

There is, Secondly, A hunger for the Pagan world to turn to Christ.

Christianity has passed the experimental stage. Wherever it goes it uplifts mankind, elevates the race, redeems the souls of men.

Some of the best talent of the age is being given to send, carry, teach, or preach the gospel to the non-Christian world.

Some of the best books now being penned, or published, are those dealing with the great missionary problem.

Some of the greatest heroes of the past or present are those whose lives have been dedicated to saving the pagan world from sin.

Some of the most talented and forceful speakers on the platform of the day are those who are raising their voices to help save the millions who need, and who have not, the gospel of our Lord.

Some of the noblest gifts of our time, some of the most unselfish sacrifices of the day, are those designed to help those in pagan darkness. The great heart of the Christian world is hungering, as never before, to have a part in helping to evangelize the world.

Feeding the hungry, certainly in these two particulars, is the work of the church. Never before in the world's history did the church have so much to do; and never such an opportunity of doing it. The hungry world looks, longs, in silence cries out, for the bread of life, real spiritual food.

WORTH KNOWING.

Our Motto: In essentials unity; in non-essentials liberty; in all things charity.

Our Leader: The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the church.

Our Name: Christian is a sufficient name for the church.

Our Rule of Practice: The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

Our Test of Fellowship: Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.

Our Claim: The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Our Plea: The church should avoid all debates and disputations, especially of a public character, which tend to create strife, enmity or division among the followers of Christ, and should not employ means of doubtful propriety, but should use those spiritual weapons which are mighty through God, to the pulling down of strongholds.

Our Purpose: The purpose of the Christian church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all the religious teachers in pointing the wicked to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.

Our Requirements: This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist and Christian love finds the brotherhood together.

It is the belief of the unseen things that makes possible the right use and enjoyment of the seen.

HELP FOR REV. J. G. BISHOP AND WIFE.

In THE CHRISTIAN SUN of April 9, Dr. J. P. Barrett, writing of the terrible situation from the recent floods in Dayton, Ohio, said: "I am told that Dr. Bishop is hurt worse than most of our people. He and his wife are aged, and their house suffered more from the flood than did most of the houses in that community. I do not wish my friends to send me any financial aid, as I did not suffer losses, but if any of our people in the South feel like helping Brother and Sister Bishop, I am sure it would be help worthy and nobly given and just as truly deserved. I am making this suggestion without the knowledge of Dr. Bishop. He is now almost eighty years old and his wife is not very far behind him. He has always worked on a small salary and lived economically, and I am sure needs help just now as he stands face to face with such a calamity."

We offered our services to accept such donations as SUN readers might see fit to make, and to put them together and forward to Bro. Bishop as fast as amounts worth while accumulate. Bro. Bishop's loss is estimated at $1,000.00 or more.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Miss Anne Crews, Danville, Va.: "In its new dress THE SUN is a beauty and splendidly gotten up in every respect."

—The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society with sixty-three now in China is calling for fifty others to go, and also for $242,000 for additional property.

—Rev. Henry Spencer Booth, of Third Church, Norfolk, is engaged in a series of meetings with his church, himself doing all the preaching. There is considerable interest in the meetings.

—W. H. Etheredge, Selma, N. C.: "Enclosed find check for $1.50 for my renewal of THE SUN for one year. Looks like I can't get along without it. It is better now than ever. Let her shine."

—The editor is away this week assisting Pastor J. M. Roberts in a meeting at Main St. Christian church, Berkley Ward, Norfolk. He spoke at the Norfolk Y. M. C. A. last Sunday at 3:30 p. m.; also to a Bible Study Class of the business men of Norfolk at 1 p. m. Tuesday at the Y. M. C. A. lunch rooms.

—Mrs. Henry Rosser, Atlanta, Ga., sending a contribution of $2.00 for herself and $3.00 for two others, says: "I hope all readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will aid in giving Brother and Sister Bishop a good, full, purse." If others feel the same way will they send us a check today that the same may be forwarded.

—Pastor Foster of our Waverly church keeps on getting pounded. But the idea of an editor getting jealous! Perish the thought! He could have had a pounding from Dr. Staley and his people at Suffolk, if he had been willing to remit ten per cent. of all receipts to Dr. Staley—a contract which no self-respecting editor would be a party to. Ours is the all-sufficient joy to see others happily and copiously pounded.

—THE CHRISTIAN SUN has, for several years, been equal to our best religious journals in matter. It is now equal to the best in form and mechanical execution. THE SUN deserves a large increase of readers. Let every friend now see if he cannot add one new subscriber. W. P. LAWRENCE.

Elon College, N. C.

—Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., has written an able work on Systematic Theology. Before an institute of ministers, young and others, at Elon College last week the author read many of the chapters, and they were worthy of the man and the cause. This manuscript is likely to be given to the public in book form at some date in the near future.

—Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., April 18: "I have never been in such a meeting as we are now having here. Our town is moved as never before, and Christians are going out and bringing the lost to Christ. It is wonderful. I hope a number of women are writing Mrs. Harper that they will attend our Woman's Missionary Mass-meeting at Elon College May 26-27."

—A good friend and brother, a layman, a man of many offices and responsibilities, took the time the other day to stop and write the editor a good, wholesome, happy, long love letter. It is too good to keep, and yet he wrote in bold letters at the head "not for publication is this friendly love letter." But, my, it made us happy! I wonder why we do not stop more often in the mad rush and seek to do some act to make others happy. Life would be sweeter to all if we would.

—We sanction with all our heart this fine fact stated by the Greensboro News:

The "blind tiger" in North Carolina is fast being backed up against the wall under the search and seizure law. He has come to the parting of the ways. He must either become a law-abiding citizen or go to the chain gang. One path leads to respect for the law, peace and happiness; the other to the convict garb, misery and woe. Which will ye choose, "blind tiger?"

—Dear Brother Atkinson: I have read with much interest and pleasure all that has been said concerning THE SUN's new dress. I am delighted with the improvement, especially the Department head lines. It is just what I have been wanting to see for years. I am also very grateful for the substantial way in which it is fastened together. I am proud of our church organ and shall do what I can to promote its interest. Gratefully yours,

J. O. Cox.

Durham, N. C., April 21, 1913.

—Henry Spencer Booth, Norfolk, Va.: "I shall soon set apart a CHRISTIAN SUN day, at which time I will present the claims of the paper and secure all the subscriptions possible. Again, I must congratulate you. I know that back of the establishment of the Publishing House, and the improved get-up of THE SUN, there has been an immense amount of hard, faithful, self-sacrificing work. It now becomes our duty as pastor to show our appreciation of your service by helping out all we can. I shall try to do my part, at least. May all success be yours."

—E. L. Moffitt, Asheboro, N. C.: "I have been 'intending' for some time to write you my congratulations anent the 'New SUN,' but you know how I am about such things—just like you are, keep putting off till a more convenient season. But, really, I am very much pleased with the form and general get-up of the paper. It certainly now compares favorably with any of the other church papers, in every respect; and you deserve not only the congratulations, but the thanks of our people for the great work you have done in the improvement of our church paper, and in the establishment of such an up-to-date "print shop."

THE MISSIONARY SITUATION.

Dear Brother Atkinson:—I have been interested in your editorials on the Missionary situation and also in the various articles that have appeared in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and Herald of Gospel Liberty on the same subject.

The Christian church, with the Bible as its only guide, ought to be more interested in Missions than other denominations, but from published statistics, we have let many others surpass us in this great work. Two causes have contributed to this result. The first was the looseness of our early organizations. In cutting loose from creeds and obligations imposed by the existing church governments, the founders of the Christian church swung to the other extreme and started a movement almost without organization, teaching every local church that it owed no responsibility or obligation beyond its own membership. With no central organized head, with vested authority, we were naturally slow in entering upon any Missionary enterprise that called forth a concerted action on the part of the whole church.

Our church does not seem to have altogether outgrown this influence.

The second cause that has contributed to no little extent to our lack of Missionary interest, and one that is still making its influence felt, is that we are largely a rural church. Not that the members of the country church are not just as loyal to the church and religious work as the members of the city and town church, but the location does not bring them in touch with large gatherings, great conventions and wide-spread movements, like the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and The Men and Religion Forward Movement, which have proven such a stimulus to other denominations. Where our people have been fortunate enough to come in contact with these forces, there has been a marked increase in zeal and liberality on their part.

We seem to be facing a crisis in our Missionary work, but one that should be easily overcome. A debt of ten cents per member should not alarm us but should arouse us to a greater activity in Missionary giving. The continued increase in Missionary offerings shows that our church is becoming more interested in this important work. And yet we are doing but little in comparison to what we are able to do. I want to emphasize the following needs, some of which have been mentioned by others:

1. More emphasis laid on Missions in our conference sessions.
2. More study of Missions and more preaching Missions by our pastors.
3. More praying for the Missionaries and the people among whom they labor, and for ourselves, that the Lord will direct just what to do.
4. More study as to what the Bible teaches about our duty in the evangelization of the world; and also more study of the work being done and the needs of the various home and foreign fields.
5. A more thorough consecration of our lives.

When the above needs have been met, we will not only take care of the work we have but with the deeper consecration of ourselves and with the broader knowledge of the work, will come the more thorough consecration of our means and the Lord will open our eyes to the larger vision of opportunity and service, and there will follow an expansion of our church work along all lines.

W. T. WALTERS.

DR. W. S. LONG DELIVERS GREAT LECTURES!

Dr. W. S. Long has been a busy man for the past few years,—at least that is the verdict of those who were so fortunate as to hear his scholarly course of lectures here last week.

These lectures were clustered around that often dry-as-dust theme. Systematic Theology, but which now has a new meaning because of his lectures on the matters involved in it. The lectures were five in number, or rather there were five sessions of two and one-half hours each, during which the great doctrines of the faith, by one who has large faith, were unfolded in elegant diction and with masterly grasp.

Dr. Long has no sympathy with higher criticism. He is thoroughly orthodox and his views, as set forth in these lectures, when good in showing the position of the Christian placed in permanent book-form will do great Church in theological belief and practice. The book will also be useful as a text for our ministerial classes. It is a work such as we have been needing for many years,—an authoritative statement of the faith of our people, and as such it will have a wide reading and serve a large purpose.

The book will consist, besides its preface and index, of twenty six chapters as follows:

Existence of God.
Can God Be Known
Divine Revelation.
Inspiration of the Bible.
Completeness of the Bible.
Nature and Attributes of God.
Divinity of Christ.
Personality of the Holy Ghost.
Creation.
Origin of Man.
Man's Original State and Fall.
The Covenants.
Different Dispensations.
The Atonement.
The Extent of the Atonement.
Salvation.
Regeneration.
Adoption.
Sanctification.
The Sacraments.
The Lord's Supper and Baptism.
The Second Advent.
Resurrection of the Dead.
General Judgment.
Duration of Future Punishment.
Heaven.

It goes without saying that whatever Dr. Long might have to say on any of the above subjects would be interesting to his brethren, among whom he has labored so long and so faithfully, and in this book, the result of a lifetime of study and research and thought, he has measured up fully to the opportunity before him. The Church will await this book with peculiar interest and will read it with great profit and uplift. W. A. HARPER.

DEVASTATION OF DAYTON AS SEEN BY AN EYE WITNESS.

Judge Walter D. Jones Tells Thrilling Story of Dayton Flood.

(Sent to THE SUN and published by request of Rev. Warren H. Denison, who is personally acquainted with Judge Jones from whose pen the vivid description comes. It is the most thrilling narrative of the Dayton flood we have yet seen and was first printed in the Piqua Daily Call and then reprinted in the Troy Daily News.)

Out of the jaws of Death.
Out of the mouth of Hell.

In the last few days many people here have faced, and some have met death in a cruel form. In a neighboring city the writer was at same time in a company whose actual physical suffering was small in comparison, I should be ashamed to mention it. But to have stood helpless for two whole days in the menace of a dreadful death in not less than four different forms, is a story perhaps worth telling.

It nears 8 o'clock in the morning on the busy streets of Dayton and the movement of people is increasing. They are going their ways gayly or quietly; there is no thought of danger, all is serene and secure.

Ten minutes! A fragment of time. Ten minutes later and the careless stream of people has changed to a white faced, frightened, bewildered throng, frantically seeking refuge from an awful fate that has stolen on them unaware.

I reached Dayton Monday night on my way home, to find traffic suspended on the cars "till morning" it was said. Remaining at the Beckel Hotel, overnight, I went over to the D. & T. office about 7:30. I waited a little while. "Nothing doing yet," said some one pleasantly. I thought I would go back to the hotel lobby. It must have been nearly 8 o'clock.

As I stepped on the sidewalk a rush of water came down the center of Jefferson street. At the first sight it looked as though a fire hydrant might have been opened.

For the moment I was more curious than alarmed. I walked on to the hotel, and the water covered the street and began to lap over the curb on the sidewalk. I went in, and told the clerk I would retain my room a while longer. The elevator was not running and I hurried up the stairs intending to leave my satchel and coat in the room, and return to see the strange sight. I began to think there might be some serious inconvenience coming.

I entered the room, dropped my coat and bag, and looked out of the window. It had been as in Jean Ingelow's poem,

"The heart had hardly time to beat
Before a shallow, seething wave
Sobbed on the ground beneath our feet.
The feet had hardly time to flee
Before it broke against the knee,
And all the world was in the sea."

A seething, foaming torrent was rolling down Jefferson street.

Before the mind could grasp what had happened, a horrible crash sounded, apparently beneath me, the floor vibrated beneath my feet, and plastering commenced to drop from the ceiling. Women's screams sounded from the next room. I sprang to my door. It would not open. But I heard men's voices outside and I shouted to them to throw their weight against the door and they did so promptly and by doing so saved me the horror of being entrapped on the fourth floor of a sinking building. The occupants of several adjoining rooms were released in the same manner. Walls were cracking and trembling and plastering falling. Some one shouted, "Fire" but was sternly silenced. We fled down the stairs, joined on every floor by ashen faced men and women. It was the only time there was the semblance of a panic, and that was over in a moment. I think all must have realized as I did something awful but unexplained had happened and our lives might depend on keeping cool and quiet.

When we reached the second floor the office that I had just quitted was filling with a mass of muddy, black water that roared as it poured in and rapidly mounted the stairs. It was evident that the only exit from the house was through the second story windows.

Something awful had happened and something worse might follow it as suddenly. And ten minutes before we had all been so secure, and we had never thought that in the midst of life we are in death.

At this time my heart lightened at the sight of the face of a friend. Mr. William T. Marshall, of Piqua, en route home from Florida was at the traction office when the flood commenced and had barely time to take refuge in the Beckel. We shared each other's fortunes for five eventful days and to an old friendship added ties that will last for life. Mr. Marshall was throughout what followed courageous, calm and helpful. I trust that I, myself, at least acted like a man, and indeed in all the horror that came there was no exhibition of cowardice.

Before noon on Tuesday Jefferson and Third streets were raging, roaring torrents of a depth of 12 to 14 feet. It seems to me that the main current of the Miami river must have been diverted through the principal streets of Dayton. The store rooms opposite us filled to the ceilings. Down both streets poured a mass of drift, now a lot of chairs, now counters, shelving, barrels, boxes, crates of fruit from some grocery; several pianos, piles of lumber and worst of all, every few minutes some struggling, drowning horse. Some of the wreckage drifted clear, some struck poles or street lights and broke into fragments, some was hurled against and shattered the plate glass windows of streets. It was a sickening sight of ruin and destruction.

In the rear of the hotel was a small court where a score or more of horses, released from a neighboring stable were struggling frantically and from time to time succumbing and dying.

The rooms on the 3rd floor directly under the one I had occupied, had fallen clear through to the basement, leaving a horrible gap. My room had sunken, but not fallen. A jewelry salesman said his trunks with $30,000 worth of goods in them went down with the lower room. It is not certain yet whether the accident was due to the water undermining the walls, or to the explosion of a small boiler in the basement.

All day long we sat on the second floor and watched the horrible muddy flood and the dreadful drift. The first rush of the waters came half way up the store fronts before any one could realize it, then came the slower, but steady mounting, and there was a dreadful fascination, watching the creeping upward, inch by inch, selecting some mark and watching it until submerged.

There was fortunately considerable food on the second floor, though but little drinking water. The managers of the Beckel thought there would be provisions enough, with economy, to carry us through, and humanely they shared this with all in the house without distinction between guests and refugees.

We made and enforced a peremptory order that not a match should be struck in the house. From the very first the dread of fire was on the heart of every one. One fellow tried to light a pipe, but was properly taken care of. We had as far as I know, no other such creatures among us.

As night drew on, and the water still slowly rose, the horror of darkness was upon us—ominous cracking sounded from the broken east wall and many clambered while there was light to the buildings on the west for greater security. I secured a chair in an insurance office. There were 5 people there who had been caught while at work. They were very kind to me as I shall never forget.

The night was an absolutely sleepless one, and in one or two directions fire could be seen but at a distance.

We had hoped that by Wednesday the flood would be subsiding as rapidly as it came, but when the seemingly interminable night was ended, we were sickeningly disappointed to find that though there was a decline, it was but small indeed. It is said that the waters rose till 3 a. m.

We all filed into the dining room in the morning, and thankfully received a portion of cold meat and fried potatoes, and what was most grateful a glass of water and a cup of coffee.

There was a doleful view of such stores as Kirby's, Hunter & Hardie, the Surprise, in fact everything on Third street with the black water washing up to the ceilings. At almost every window we could see anxious, drawn faces of people marooned like ourselves. There were no shouts or calls for help, for every one knew that no help could come. In the Beckel, people talked but little, and in low voices. Someone went around and secured a list of all our names. There were about 100 guests. "May be useful when it comes to identify remains" said one man grimly, and actually there was a general hoarse laugh, though no one took it as a joke. Then all was silent but the awful roar of the water.

"Will try to give a lunch at 4 o'clock," was the announcement, "and that will be all we can give today." It was never given.

Another loud crash brought every one to his feet. A drug store half a square away had collapsed. We saw some of it float away, but did not dream of what this accident meant to us.

Still another crash, and a man on the opposite roof called over that three buildings on Main street, just south of the Phillips Hotel, had gone down.

We had almost ceased to note time, but I think it was 1:30 Wednesday afternoon, a man near me said in a low voice, "What if a fire breaks out."

"Oh, Merciful God, there it is" came the response.

A column of flames shot into the air like a towering beacon of death not over 300 feet from us. A blaze from the ruins of the drug store had entered the next building.

In this block immediately east of us were many inflammable stocks of goods, including three wholesale liquor stores, whose contents, when ignited, would be liquid fire. Not a hand would lift to fight the flames, which must spread, unchecked by human means. This meant that when the corner was reached, the leaping of the street by the flames and the destruction of the Beckel house, followed by that of the whole block was apparently inevitable.

There was a hurried, whispered consultation, but only for a moment. We must get as far away as possible from the fire, if only to prolong life.

Then began a remarkable march of retreat. Some two or possibly three hundred persons clambered, climbed, and crawled from one end of the square on Third street, from Jefferson to Main. Just how it was done, in every particular, probably no one can ever tell. We got out on the roof of the Beckel Annex. We went up and down fire escapes. We cautiously crossed frail looking sky lights. We scaled fire walls. We took ladders along, and from slippery roofs got to open windows, passed through buildings, and from windows to roofs again. We reached a ten foot alley. A ladder was pushed across it to the next building and we crawled over, one at a time. This was done by men, women, and by one or two children. It was a journey for life, but it was not a mad flight. It was done quickly but quietly and each helped the other. Among those taken out safely was a woman with a broken arm, and Mr. Bennett, the proprietor of the hotel, was carried from his dying bed.

All made the perilous journey safely. That most of us could even attempt it, is simply because it was a dash for life.

At the Main street end of the square we could go no farther and we dispersed into different parts of the Callahan building and that just adjoining.

Our situation was this: There was the possibility at any moment of the building, as we had seen others do, collapsing, and entomb us. A few hundred feet behind us, and moving steadily in our direction, was a roaring, leaping pillar of flame, devouring everything before it. In front of us was the black, hideous, drift-filled current, in which it seemed hopeless for a stout swimmer to venture. But if one could pass through icy water and escape with life for the moment, there would be no heat, no dry clothing, no succor, and it would seem that the exposure would be hardly less swiftly fatal than that by fire or drowning.

Death threatening in every one of our forms, and no one failed to realize it.

What little might be done was done. Two men managed to cut a cable in the elevator shaft. We were in the second story of the Callahan Building, opposite the old court house, where was some open ground around, where one might be comparatively safe. One end of the wire rope was made fast to our building and on a rude kind of scow, it was managed to float the other across the streets where it was caught and secured. The scow upset and that was the last I saw of it. One man came up in a boat and helped a little with the rope, but could not, or would not stay, and his craft whirled away on the current; that was the only boat we saw during the flood.

The life line was stretched, and three or four of the strongest, managed to work their way hand on hand on it, across to the court house. They were almost torn from it, and in each instance were up to their necks in water, drenched and icy cold, and dropping with exhaustion when they had crossed. It was evident that this way of escape would avail very few while the high water and mill race current continued.

There were 25 or 30 people in the two rooms we occupied, and also one horse, that in some way had gotten in. Of our party about 10 were women and one mother sat quietly with fixed, drawn face, and clasped firmly in her arms a little boy of seven or eight years. The child clung to his mother and tried to be and was brave. Once in a while a tear trickled down his face, but the mother never wept.

We were in the cruel position that while we could see the reflection of the fire, and watch the horrible drifting smoke and sparks, it was behind us, and we could not see just what it was doing, but had to depend on what was shouted to us from those on other buildings.

As night approached, most of the men drew together, and a whispered conference was had. Every one believed that the fire would sooner or later reach the Beckel, and when that was done it was only a question of a few hours or even less when it would be upon us. Nearly everyone who expressed himself thought it almost certain that we had but a few hours to live, unless some miracle delivered us. This was my opinion and that of Mr. Marshall.

It was decided that when the fire reached the next building to us that we should divide into parties of three—two men to each woman—try to hold on to our frail line and commit our bodies to the rushing water and our souls to God.

There was no question but that the woman and child must have the first chance, but the trouble was to see any chance for any one.

Darkness came again, that is darkness within, but without lurid, flaring awful light. We could not see each other's faces within. It was very cold, and, outside, snow and rain were falling, but little was thought of cold, hunger or thirst. We were waiting, waiting, waiting to know whether it was to be life or death.

I thought of what might be going on at home—of what the destruction must be there; of my loved ones and where they were, and I wondered whether if I was rescued, there would be anything left to live for.

On the roof of the Phillips Hotel were men with megaphones. They could see the fire, and they shouted news of its progress. We had no megaphone and it was difficult to call to them. It was found that my voice and that of another man seemed to "carry" best to them, and I spent most of Wednesday night standing on a window sill, receiving and repeating the bulletins.

They came like this, hoarsely through the air:

"Oh, Callahan people, the fire has worked one door nearer. What do you say? No, the bank is not burning yet. The Beckel does not seem to have caught yet."

"Oh, Callahan. Another store has caught but the bank is safe yet. The wind seems to be rising and blowing this way."

This bank was the Fourth National, corner Jefferson and Third streets. It was said to be fireproof. Our lives depended on whether its east wall could resist the fire.

At 1 o'clock, "Oh Callahan; First seems to be going down. Think the bank will stand. We believe your danger is almost over."

There were long breaths and murmurs of "Thank God." We had suffered for nearly twelve hours. Was it possible the worst was over.

A dreadful explosion seemed to rend earth and sky. Sheets of blood red ghastly green fire illuminated everything, showers of burning embers and sparks rained down, and hot smoke drifted past. I could only think of the Day of the Last Judgment.

The fire had leaped across Third street and entered Lowe Bros. paint works, and apparently the whole contents had exploded at once.

It seemed that absolutely all hope was gone. Great masses of burning wreckage drifted down the current, threatening to fire buildings in every direction. Some of our people lost, not their courage, but their judgment and wanted to start for the water. I believe

I may have indirectly been the means of saving a number of lives, by earnestly insisting that we should stay till the last moment before jumping into the water. By professing much more hope and confidence than I really felt, and aided by some others, we kept a number of people from abandoning a faint hope to go to certain death, and yet the fire wall held, the wind shifted and as day broke on Thursday morning the fire was going away from us and we were practically saved, after being for at least 18 hours in the immediate shadows of death.

By 4 o'clock on Thursday afternoon we were able to leave the building where we had been imprisoned for 56 hours.

Dayton is a horrible sight. The streets are torn up and in many places half buried in rubbish. The entire stock of goods in the cellars and ground floors of the whole retail business district is gone. On the north side of Third street, between Jefferson and St. Clair, every building but one is burned to the ground, including Schauers, the Patterson Supply Co., Larkin and the rest. One-half the opposite square is burned. These are the fires that threatened to wipe out the business quarter of Dayton, and destroy the hundreds of people trapped like rats on their upper floors. There are many other smaller fires, and many business houses will fail.

On Friday morning, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Bernard Marr, of N. Y., and myself managed after getting a bowl of soup at a relief stand (money is no good now in Dayton) to work over on a returning relief train, as far as Xenia, where we got a car to Springfield. The city was swarming with refugees. Our first news from home was "Piqua practically wiped out. Remnant burning. 800 dead. Dr. Will J. Prince drowned in postoffice lobby." We also heard of the death of Clark B. Jamison. We could hear no word of our own families, nor could we hear just what the flood limit of Piqua was. All was anxiety and frantic attempts to communicate with friends, or to get home. Some queer things happened. For instance, I got acquainted with Mr. Al Harnisch, of Syracuse, N. Y., and found he and I had been talking to each other that night of terror across the black space between the Phillips and Callahan Buildings. I am much indebted to him for what he did that night. When almost hopeless of getting out of Springfield through the kindness of County Clerk Fred Snyder, and the whole souled, generous gentleman, ex-Mayor David Snyder, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Devault, of Covington, and I were brought to Troy in his auto, and my kind friend Sheriff Paul brought me home in a buggy.

Writing under pressure I would say that I am glad to have seen the courage that men and women can show in the face of death.

The death list in Dayton will be much less than estimated, but why this is so is miraculous.

That the property loss there cannot be overrated.

That the suffering in Piqua is in proportion as great as in Dayton.

And finally that all humanity is the debtor to the man who saw what to do and did more than any one else for relief, John H. Patterson, President of the National Cash Register Co. If the government tries now to put him in prison the very stones will cry out against it.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The appalling disasters of the western floods remind us of the insecurity of earthly possessions. When properly considered moral values are supreme. "The things that are seen and temporal; the things that are not seen are eternal."

Besides this, it may be averred that civilization creates the possibilities of disaster by its own advancement. No one will deny that railroads increase the loss of human life; yet no one would destroy this great product and this great servant of civilization. Its dangers are not to be compared with its service.

Civilization has made these destructive floods more possible. When the mountains and hills were covered with trees the leaves held the water back from the rivers and gave them time to carry the waters away. Added to the deforesting of the lands of great watersheds, the lands themselves have been ditched and tiled, so that the rainfall is hurried away into the small streams and, these in turn, hurry the waters into the rivers. Besides this, the plowed lands surrender the soil which is carried off by the rushing waters, till every creek and river bed is loaded up with mud and sandbars. The capacity of streams is reduced while the water they must carry is increased. This double risk is growing with every advance step yet made. Thus new problems arise in the midst of progress. The struggle and the risk of human society grow very little less with all the wisdom and advancement of civilization. It is the price of progress. It is the problem of the ages. It is the school of life. It is the question of civilization. Hence civilization is sometimes forced to abandon the very creation of her own achievements. And this leads to the question of religious progress. It seems that as soon as Christian civilization passes one stage and enters upon another, new difficulties arise in the path of progress. Beyond the Red sea stretches the desert of Arabia; and beyond the Jordan the Hitites, Jebusites, Canaanites, and Perizites.

As soon as we pass the age of ignorance and rudeness we meet the age of learning and luxury. Poverty holds the kingdom back and then wealth obstructs it. Blockheadedness and fussiness hinder the gospel in one age and then indifference and formality chill spirituality in the next age. The ratio of difficulty seems to remain the same. We never get beyond a real fight for advancement. As soon as the pioneer gets the stumps out of his field the grass gives him as much trouble. People seem to be willing to contribute liberally when they have little to give; then they seem to lose the sense of liberality when goods increase. Giving does not increase proportionately with prosperity, and improvement in conduct does not increase in proportion to the increase of intelligence. Much of the prosperity and intelligence are spent in self-indulgence. In other words, spiritual progress is confronted by spiritual danger. As people along rivers must build on higher ground or surer foundations, so Christians must live on higher ground or be submerged by the flood of modern dangers. We are not producing the same type of strong men and women in the church today as we did yesterday. We are improving, but we are not improving in proportion to our opportunity and the world's necessity.

All the movements of the Kingdom of God indicate a growing desire to meet the demands of this great age. The Young People's societies, the Men and Missions movement, the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. and all the organizations whose aim is increased activity in the rescue of the perishing and the training of the new generation prove that the new problems will be solved by the new people fast coming on the stage of Christian activity. The levees must be builded higher, the bridges must be built higher, the cities must be strengthened, the saloon must go, the moral tone must be heightened, manhood and womanhood must be buttressed by public sentiment and the church must resume her place as the source of character and power.

CONSHOHOCKEN LETTER.

Since my last to THE SUN we have had some interesting incidents this way, while our work moves most encouragingly forward with the church more united than since I have known it. Our Easter services were considered very good. Our special offering amounted to $150. An obstreperous choir-master, who was a member of the High Episcopal Church, and a disgruntled official, because we would not allow too much of the High Church ritual in our Easter services, and defeated his plan to displace our own church hymnary for the hymnary of the High church, made a desperate effort to injure both the church and pastor, and especially the latter. They secured the services of a young and inexperienced, yet vainly ambitious, newspaper reporter, and caused to be written up in the Norristown Times, edited by a Roman Catholic, a most sensational article under heavy headlines, placing the church and pastor in an ugly and false light before the public. The startling and ridiculous statements were gathered within sight of the parsonage, and while involving the pastor and church no effort was made to see the pastor relative to the truthfulness of the statements. This publication was gathered by the press generally as "news" and given wide circulation. I have a letter from a dear good brother pastor in Eastern Va. advising me that the vile publication has reached his community and that the Richmond papers have also given it out. In justice to our church here, and that for which I stand, I desire to place the facts before our own people as the only resource to place the matter in its true light before them and correct the false impressions and statements. Following the rude conduct of our late choir-master on Easter Sunday, and simultaneous with the writing of his spiteful publication the Executive Committee of our church sent him the following communication which was subsequently adopted by our quarterly Conference:

Mr. John W. Conrad, Jr.,
Conshohocken, Pa.

Dear Sir:

In behalf of our Church and Sunday School, we wish to thank you for your services in leading our church music and training the children for our Easter exercises and church music. Since, however, the unfortunate incident of last Sunday morning when you openly offered insults to our pastor and openly made attack on his personal character, we are writing to advise that until your offensive statements to our pastor are withdrawn, and apologies offered, you will not be permitted to direct in, nor to lead our church music.

Yours truly,

GEORGE NAGLE, Deacon,
F. V. RINEHART, Secretary,
M. W. BUTLER, Pastor,
Executive Committee.

In the meantime our regular quarterly Conference convened with the largest representative attendance that we have had since I came to the work. Unanimity of spirit prevailed, without a dissenting vote in the entire session. During the Conference the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Inasmuch as our church and pastor, and especially the latter, have suffered slanderous attacks recently in the Norristown Times, and have therefore been placed in a false light before the public, and whereas said publication has a tendency to produce tumult in the church and to bring reproach to the cause of Christ, be it resolved,

1. That we condemn said publication and their author, or authors, as being malicious and spiteful and a hindrance to the cause of peace and harmony.

2. That we express our loyalty to our church and pastor by sustaining our pastor in his position taken on Easter Sunday morning relative to the chanting of the Apostle's Creed in a form which was offensive to many of our members.

3. That we condemn the conduct of the late choir-master, Mr. John W. Conrad, Jr., in our church on Easter Sunday morning when he assumed an attitude of insult and attack towards our pastor.

Not only is the church more united than since I have known it, but the incident has clarified the atmosphere, and put matters in better shape than before in the church membership. I am told by the officials that never before in the history of the church was there as much money on hand to the credit of pastor's fund as at present, and for past six months, even in the face of a raise in salary. Our Men's Bible Class continues to grow. We now have 122 on roll. I have hesitated to ask for this to go before our people until I received advice from Eastern Va. that the malicious publication had reached that section and was given out through the South.

M. W. BUTLER.

WAVERLY, VA., LETTER.

Mr. Editor:

From time to time I notice how jealous it makes you when a preacher reports "a pounding" or some one has gone "a fishing" when you, as Editor, did not get pounded nor could you do all the fishing. Now I've had a little secret to tell for more than a month but have been quiet for two reasons: First, you have been too busy to be made jealous, and to be disturbed by telling you "we've been pounded hard." Secondly, It just keeps pounding! Would not stop long enough for me to write. It begun before the pastor and family arrived at Waverly; loads of wood and kindling were put in the parsonage lot, then turkey for Christmas, and wood, and sausage, and lard, etc. etc., till one Friday night in the absence of the pastor about 60 people just came and stocked the dining room and kitchen with all kinds of substantial food and the very best delicacies for the table. And here is what will make you jealous, Mr. Editor, the habit just keeps up. Every few days its something good to eat from not only members of Waverly Christian church, but Spring Hill, and Centerville members as well, also friends of other churches and those not members of any.

Mrs. Foster and the children enjoy and appreciate these good gifts as well as the pastor. Acts of such kindness and liberality stir the deeper gratitude of the heart and move men to the strongest efforts of their lives. We came to Waverly a stranger, had to learn all names and faces. We are now getting acquainted and believe we are making friends. We had been out of the active pastorate for some time, but hope now to be getting fully into the harness and shall do all we can to show our appreciation of the kindness of the church and do everything possible to help the church and add to the growth of the kingdom in the hearts of the people. There are great possibilities in this field of work. We hope to be used of the Master to accomplish some of the great moral and spiritual possibilities here. We shall make an earnest and honest effort. May God bless the good people who have helped us.

Gratefully,

JAS. L. FOSTER.

NORFOLK LETTER.

It would be difficult to conceive of a fellowship more goodly, or nearly ideal, than that which prevails among the ministers of the Christian church in the Tidewater section of Virginia. Their bi-monthly meetings, in Dr. Denison's office at the Memorial Temple, for study, counsel and mutual deliberations, are always occasions to be pleasurably anticipated.

I particularly enjoyed the recent meeting, held Monday, the week before last. I speak of it at this rather late hour by reason of the fact that last week's letter went in too early for that purpose.

Let's see if I can now recall the names of those present. There were Staley, Garman, Denison, Harrell, Jones, Johnson, Keys, Harward and Booth. Count 'em,—nine in all. Brothers Roberts and Newman were not present, to our regret. Prof. S. M. Smith, the "assistant pastor" at Berkeley, dropped in on us, but left before the meeting was over.

Now, dear reader of THE SUN, imagine, if you can, the brethren whose names are above-mentioned, duly assembled in formal and deliberative conclave. If you do not believe off-hand, as it were, that there is something imposing and august in such an assemblage, just come before us, and we think that before getting away, you will be amply convinced of your mistake. If we do not quite remind you of the United States Senate in session, you will at least have little difficulty in fancying yourself in a meeting of the honorable Committee on Ways and Means.

Of course, dear reader, we should be very dignified when you were present, and duly decorous. But, should you wish to see us really "at home" among ourselves, you would need to be "initiated" in due form and ceremony.

It is certainly one sheer delight to behold how completely and thoroughly the genial "Bishop" Keys, for instance, seems to enjoy himself in our gatherings. He tilts his chair against the wall, swings his feet occasionally, and absolutely radiates good-cheer. It was the ubiquitous Garman who bestowed the Episcopal title upon Brother Keys. Garman himself sits around, and doesn't say much, although an occasional sly wink shows that he is listening.

I do trust that he will pardon me for saying so, but I think that Brother Harward has one of the most becoming mustaches I have ever seen. This is no flattery. He strokes it almost as much as Brother Harrell, who also has a nice one, strokes his.

Dear Dr. Staley is "like to a piece of leaven, which leaveneth the whole lump." It is simply impossible to be narrow in your views when he is about. And the Doctor is especially dear to my heart because he does love a clean, wholesome little bit of humor.

Denison uses his library to get information just as an accountant uses a Burroughs to get his totals. Let a question arise, upon which more light is needed, and Denison pulls down a book here, a pamphlet there, out comes a letter from one of his inside coat-pockets, a newspaper clipping is extracted from some mysterious source, he compares them, strikes an average, and lo, you have the information you want. It is reliable, too, and you can take it and bank on it.

The "piece de resistance" of our varied intellectual men has been Orr's Problem of the New Testament, and as the teacher of this delightfully obvious little bit of literature, Brother Johnson is never happier than when he can involve the brethren in the murky and Stygian profundities of scholastic theories after which he retires into a state of happy and serene contemplation, while the rest of us thresh it out as best we can.

As to the balance, Jones, Roberts, Dr. Newman and this scribe; we all have our individualisms, which at least some of you know very well. But, I will avouch that, as a company of men we get along together as cordially and fraternally as any that could be found anywhere. We hope that the Master's spirit is ours, and that in all our mutual relationships we seek to be guided by it.

At the conclusion of our last meeting, at the invitation of one of our number, we adjourned to Henderson's cafe, downtown, and there dined together in a most brotherly and sociable fashion. We might have enjoyed ourselves even more but for the knowledge of the awful suffering and distress of so many of our people in Ohio and Indiana as a result of the floods.

I hold membership in different fraternal organizations, I have belonged to various clubs and social institutions, and upon a few rare occasions I have been permitted to barely touch the glittering outer fringe of "high society," but I again declare it as my conviction that for helpfulness, true enjoyment, and goodly fellowship, there is nothing equal to that which may be found in the ministry of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The business section of the village is undergoing some improvements in the way of concrete side walks.

Dr. W. S. Long, Chapel, Hill, N. C., founder and first President of Elon College, delivered to the ministerial class Wednesday and Thursday of last week a series of lectures on "Systematic Theology." Dr. Long has just completed a book on the subject and his lectures were the product of his study in the preparation of this volume. Dr. Long is a man who has no sympathy with higher criticism and places the reading of his book on the simple Bible basis. The views of the book are orthodox in the correct sense of that word and all lovers of the simple story from the Book of books will find it in place on the table of every Christian home.

President Harper delivered the literary address of the closing of Sylvan High School in the southern part of the county Friday of last week. He is to make the address of the closing exercises of the Liberty High School, Liberty, N. C., today.

Dr. William G. Sargent, Providence, R. I., Secretary of Education of the American Christian Convention, will deliver to the student body the first week in May a series of lectures on subjects that pertain to the activities of life that College men and women are interested in. Dr. Sargent is a warm friend of Elon and we look forward to his coming with much pleasure.

Delegates have been chosen from the Sunday School to represent the College and Sunday School in the North Carolina State S. S. Convention which convenes in the city of Greensboro Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of this week.

Miss Mary Lou Pitt's music class gave its recital in the College auditorium Saturday evening to a large audience. All who appeared on the program did well and showed that good training never fails to bring the right sort of results.

Dr. J. U. Newman, Dean of the College, filled the pulpit at the eleven o'clock hour Sunday and delivered a masterly sermon to the delight and edification of all present.

Signs of Commencement are seen about the campus and many are thinking of home and friends and of the good old summer time.

Dr. Franklin McElfresh, of Chicago, Ill., delivered a lecture Monday evening in the College Auditorium on some phase of Sunday School work. Dr. McElfresh is a speaker of power and is one of the speakers of the State S. S. Convention in Greensboro this week.

The Graded School closed last week after a year of very successful work. Miss Circe Coble, with her assistants, have brought things to pass this year in the school and all friends who recently contributed to the building of a more comfortable building are justly proud of the step. Miss Coble is now conducting a subscription school to run some weeks which is being largely attended.

Dr. Atkinson is away this week in the interest of the Publishing House.

The Catalogue Number of the College Bulletin is now nearing completion by the Southern Christian Publishing Company and is expected to be ready to mail May first. The Catalogue is larger this year by several pages and contains a message for every young man and young woman whose desire it is to secure a College education.

The shape, size and make-up of THE SUN is something of which we are sure that all are justly proud and we look forward to the day when its light shall shine in every home represented by the Christian church in the South.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Dear Bro. Editor:

The writer has had the privilege of visiting a number of churches since he has been in the "Old North State," and has been greeted by the kind, Christian hearted people with a welcome which always makes a preacher feel at home and gives him such joy and peace that words of appreciation seem meaningless.

On the first Sunday I preach at Salem Chapel. The church seems to be in a fairly good condition and the work goes reasonably well; yet it is not what it might be, nor what we hope to make it. We were happy to see so many at church last Sunday. There was a larger congregation than has been heretofore. We hope that the interest will increase more and we sincerely hope that this will be a most prosperous year and many souls will be brought to a saving knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The third Sunday is the appointed time for services at Belew's Creek. My first visit to this place was on the third Sunday in January. Since that time I have been there every third Sunday. Measles and scarlet fever have reduced the congregations quite a good deal, but these are out of the way now. We have recently organized a Sunday school at this place and we feel that there is going to be untold and lasting good accomplished by same.

At 11 o'clock on the fourth Sunday we hold services at New Center. The work seems to be as nearly in harmony with the teachings of God as we usually find any church to be. We have a telling Sunday school, which is a strong factor in church work. May we continue to claim the blessings of God and proclaim the glad tidings to others.

From New Center we go to Christian Uni-

Some Notes on the World's Sunday School Lesson for Next Sunday.

Bible Text.—Genesis 37:23-36.

Time.—B. C. 1729 (Ussher); 1901 (Tofteent).

Places.—Hebron, Shechem, Dothan, Egypt.

Persons.—Israel, Joseph, Reuben, Judah and the other sons and the daughters of Issaël, merchantmen.

Golden Text.—Love envieth not.—I Cor. 13:4.

Leading Thought.—Envy is very cruel.

LESSON CONTRASTS.

Jacob was the character in last Sunday's lesson; our lesson to-day treats of Jacob's son, Joseph. In that scene Jacob was fearful on account of a brother; in this Joseph is fearless and happy as he goes to meet his brothers. Yet in Jacob's case, an abused brother met him with brotherly kindness; and in Joseph's case, brothers whom he sought only to help, met him with scowling looks and hate-filled hearts. Jacob and Esau parted in peace; but when Joseph and his brothers parted, a terrible crime had been committed and the lad was carried away by slave-traders. Last week's lesson closed with Jacob on the winning side. He had won a new name, new power, new piety, a reconciled brother. But this lesson closes with Joseph apparently on the losing side; he has lost home and father and liberty. Yet the same God was overruling and making all things work together for the good of those who loved him.

Joseph's Pit.

Between the waters of Merom and the Sea of Galilee the Jordan is spanned by a bridge named the Bridge of the Daughters of Jacob, and west of the river, in the same neighborhood, there is an inn called the Khan of Joseph's Pit (or Joseph's well). Dothan was once supposed to be in that vicinity, but now it is ascertained that Dothan, or Tell Dothan (of Gen. 37:17), which means the double cistern, is north of Shechem. There is a pit there by the side of a khan which is said to be the pit into which Joseph was cast. In view of the fact that in this country there is practically no rain from May to October, water is much needed in the summer, and hence cisterns and reservoirs, sometimes constructed of masonry at other times cut in the solid rock, are numerous in many places; most of them are truly ancient and some of them, even in the days of Jeremiah could hold no water (Jer. 2:13). If a person falls into a pit he will never be able to get out without aid from outside. The more ancient cisterns are bell-shaped and consequently once a person is down he cannot possibly get out without help.

NOTES ON C. E. TOPIC FOR MAY 4TH.

Subject.—"The Ideal Christian. V. His Prayers," Matt. 6:5-13. (Consecration Meeting.)

Let this be a chain meeting. Instead of a roll call of names have a call of numbers. Prepare by giving out topics as suggested by the Christian Endeavor World, or other subjects determined by the leader, this to be done a week in advance. Be sure that everybody has a subject; it does not matter if two or three have the same general topic—each will have a different thought upon it.

At the meeting hand to the members small cards numbered from one up. When the meeting is thrown open for general participation call the numbers consecutively, and let the holders of the numbers take part when called upon. The secretary will sit at the back of the hall and record those taking part. If desired, instead of leader's calling the numbers, each one may call the number following that on his card, and the person holding that number will respond.

Begin with sentence prayers, concluding with the Lord's Prayer repeated in unison.

Follow this with a short song service of prayer songs.

Instead of the Scripture-reading arrange with six members a week in advance to study the six daily readings and come prepared, not to read them, but to give, each in half a dozen sentences, the main thought of each reading, each adding one thought of his own.

Follow this with brief prayers by two members of the prayer-meeting committee. If there is any special music—a song dealing with prayer would fit in nicely—introduce it at this point. If not, then a hymn by the society.

The Leader's Talk.

Let the leader begin by calling for a member to read the Scripture for the evening, Matt. 6:5-13. Then let him suggest a few thoughts on the Lord's Prayer: A model prayer. Its brevity—hence the best prayers are not necessarily long. Its simplicity and directness, like the words of a child talking to a father. Its reverence. It puts God first, seeks His glory before personal good. The confession of sin in it. The desire to be freed from evil. The leader should not attempt a long speech, but throw out brief suggestions that others may develop, if they desire, during the meeting.

Suggestive Illustrations.

"So Many Were Praying for Me."—The mother of a family, an elderly woman, passed through a great sorrow, but she was upborne and comforted and sustained. She could hardly understand how it was that she seemed to be so helped and she said, "I think it was because so many of my friends were praying for me."

"Your Experience of Answered Prayer."—Have you watched to see how answers come to your prayers? A gentleman was telling his own experience. There were once five objects for which he offered special and earnest prayer. He had done everything that he could, and the rest must be left to God; four out of the five petitions were answered as speedily as events could come about, and all were favorable. We must work as well as pray. Ignatius Loyola used to pray as if everything depended upon God, and then work as if everything depended upon himself.

A Prayer.

Keep us, Lord, obedient still
To the promptings of thy will.
Make us very quick to know.
Whither Thou wouldest have us go.

Pardon, Lord, the weak complaint,
Low desires and efforts faint;
Help us that we strive anew,
On this earth Thy work to do.

May we listen for Thy Voice,
May we hear it and rejoice;
Round each task and duty then,
With a trustful, glad Amen.

Christian Endeavor Benediction.

"The Lord bless thee, and keep thee;
The Lord make His face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee;
The Lord lift up His countenance upon thee, and give thee peace."

One cannot too soon forget his error and misdemeanors. To dwell long upon them is to add to the offence. Not to grieve long for any action, but to go immediately and do freshly and otherwise, subtracts so much from the wrong; else we may make the delay or repentance the punishment of the sin.—Thoreau.

OUR APPROACHING CONVENTION.

By A. W. ANDES.

The third bi-ennial session of the Young People's General Convention will meet at Burlington, N. C., May 28-30. The Convention will open at 10 a. m. Wednesday, May 28, and close on Friday night, May 30th. From beginning to end this should be an inspiring and helpful convention. I believe it can be made such. But in order that it may be it will take co-operation and preparation.

Every Sunday-school, Teacher Training Class, Organized Class, and Christian Endeavor Society is entitled to one delegate for every 25 members or fraction thereof. All elders and licentiates of the Southern Christian Convention are delegates. The members of the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Boards of the Southern Christian Convention are delegates. The officers of the Sunday-school, Young People's, Sunday-school and Young People's Conventions operating in the Southern Conferences are delegates. Sunday-schools, etc., should appoint their delegates in good time, and in the appointment care should be exercised to select those who can and will go. A few of us cannot get together and have a little Convention of our own that will mean to the Church and the cause of Christ what this Convention ought to mean. If the Convention is to fulfill its mission, a good representation must be there. Let all delegates attend the Convention if possible. What of it if it does take a little time and money? It will be time and money well spent for your own good and the good of the cause.

A few of the attractive features of the program are here given: Reports from Committees on Teacher Training, Rev. I. W. Johnson, Chairman; Home Department and Cradle Roll, Miss Cora Lawrence, Chairman; Organized Classes, Prof. S. M. Smith, Chairman; Christian Endeavor, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Chairman; Music Books, Mrs. J. L. Foster, Chairman; Laymen's Movement, K. B. Johnson, Chairman. These reports are expected to be followed by some discussion of the subjects treated.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, a former pastor of the Burlington Church, will conduct a Quiet Half Hour at the opening service.

Some of the addresses and speakers are as follows: President's Address, Rev. W. T. Walters; Primary Plans, Mrs. J. J. Lincoln; The Duty of the Church to the Young People, and Vice Versa, Dr. W. A. Harper; The Great Purpose of the Sunday-school, Prof. W. P. Lawrence; Co-operation with the Editorial and Field Secretary, Chas. A. Hines; Financing the Convention, Rev. L. I. Cox; Convention Sermon, Rev. C. H. Rowland; Our Young People and Missions, Dr. W. H. Denison; The Christian Endeavor as an Evangelizing Force, Rev. A. B. Kendall; Round Table conducted by Dr. W. A. Harper; Bible Knowledge as an Asset to the Moral and Spiritual Life, Dr. R. Fonville. Other subjects and speakers will be announced later. We are endeavoring to enlist the best talent available towards making the Convention really a great Convention.

The purpose of the Young People's General Convention, as stated in the Constitution, is "to promote the social, intellectual and religious life of the church membership, and to train our young people for efficient Christian service." Surely such an end and aim as this should enlist the co-operation and interest of every lover of the Church and cause of Christ.

"To 'run with patience' the Christian race implies enthusiasm that keeps its glow and a purpose that never flags. Enthusiasm and stability spell—success."

A SOCIETY AT POPE'S CHURCH.

We learn, through Miss Corrina Holmes, of a Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society's having been organized at Pope's church. They began with thirteen members, will meet on Saturday before the third Sunday in each month and are hoping to do something worth while along missionary lines. We rejoice that these women are moving forward in the work and trust that many others will follow their example. Who will report next?

OUR MASS-MEETING FOR WOMEN.

As has been seen through the columns of THE SUN, it has been deemed wise to change the date of our Women's Meeting and bring it to a date nearer that of the Young People's Convention which meets in Burlington. There were a number of requests that this be done, by those desirous of attending both. And so let us not forget the date and begin right now to pray and to plan for the work. We trust that our churches and societies are already planning for a representative to be present and that our pastors will give that matter much publicity in their fields. This meeting means much to the cause of Missions in our Convention, so let us labor together mightily and heartily for its success.

THE PEDRO-ROMAN FUND.

It gives me pleasure to acknowledge the following donations to the above named fund, which retained Bro. Roman for his field in Porto Rico during the last 6 months of 1912:

Third Church S. S. Norfolk	$30.00
Berea, (Norfolk Co.),	17.50
Portsmouth	8.25
Bethany	6.00
Rosehill, Ga.	6.00
Rosemont	37.90
Wakefield, S. S.	15.03
A Friend	5.00

Totals$125.68

In addition to the above the Missionary Society at Suffolk sent in $50.50 direct to Mission Treasury, which makes the total $176.18, less $2.00 railroad fare to Wakefield.

We are exceedingly grateful to all who helped in gathering this fund. It was a great blessing to our work in Porto Rico. It helped to bridge over the crisis. The Mission Board reassumed the support of Bro. Roman at the beginning of the present year.

MY FEEBLE LIFE.

I have no wit, no words, no tears;
My heart within me like a stone,
Is numbered too much for hopes or fears;
Look right, look left, I dwell alone;
I lift mine eyes, but dimmed with grief,
No everlasting hills I see.
My life is in the falling leaf:
O Jesus, quicken me!

My life is like a faded leaf,
My harvest dwindled to a husk;
Truly my life is void and brief
And tedious in the barren dusk;
My life is like a frozen thing;
No bud nor greenness can I see;
Yet rise it shall, the sap of spring;
O Jesus, rise in me!

My life is like a broken bowl—
A broken bowl that cannot hold
One drop of water for my soul
Or cordial in the searching cold.
Cast in the fire the perished thing;
Melt and remold it till it be
A royal cup for him, my King:
O Jesus, drink of me!

SEEING RESULTS.

Old Deacon Brown's zeal for the cause of foreign missions was so well known in Boxboro that it was often mentioned with a smile. However, the smile was always affectionate and sympathetic, for every one in town loved the good old man and respected his pious enthusiasms.

Once, indeed, when he was asking for money to help a struggling church far away in Sweden, Mrs. Foster, who was one of his staunchest friends, said to him:

"Do you really think it wise to scatter our means quite so far abroad? Wouldn't it be more judicious to use this money at home, where we can ourselves judge of the need and see the results of our sacrifice?"

"You can see the result in your own heart," returned the man, "in peace and joy that work for the good cause will give you. There are results in the mission field, too, but the Lord will look out for them. When I think of the self-denying Christian work this pastor, Max Sheppert, is doing in that distant corner of Sweden, it warms my heart to know that I can be of a little help to so good a man."

"Well, here is a dollar," said Mrs. Foster. "Mind, I do not give it grudgingly, but it is satisfying to see for yourself the result of your giving."

A year or two later Mr. and Mrs. Foster moved West, and settled in a little frontier village that was without any church or Sunday school. One of their neighbors told them, however, of a little Swedish church four miles up the creek, and promised to show them the way thither. So next Sunday morning the two mothers and their children followed the train through the buffalo-grass to the little Swedish settlement.

They were made very welcome. "You were right to come," said one of the women in her broken English. "In Sweden our beginnings were small, but help came from far-away America and now here you come, with your singing voice and your good works. 'Gospel seed once started always grows.' That was what our dear pastor, Max Sheppert, often told us in Sweden, and he bade us to start right when we found a home over here."

"Max Sheppert!" cried Mrs. Foster remembering that that was the name of the Swedish minister old Deacon Brown had told her of. "And I asked to see results!"

The results were greater than she could have asked for. All through the long, hard winter in sickness and privation these kind, faithful Swedes stood generously by the Foster family, as they felt personally responsible for their welfare. Surely those who give for the Lord's work in a spirit of love know not where or how they shall reap the fruits of their giving.—The Youth's Companion.

The old-time clock needed weights in order to run; so Christians need troubles in order that they may rise the highest and do the most. Burdens are sometimes happy experiences. Rutherford testified: "Christ's cross is the sweetest burden that ever I bore; it is such a burden as wings are to a bird, or sails to a ship, to carry me forward to my harbor."

We see human heroism broken into units and say this unit did little—might as well not have been. But in this way we might break the sunlight into fragments and think that this and the other might be cheaply parted with.

Work is a great blessing; after evil came into the world, it was given as an antidote, not as a punishment.—A. S. Hardy.

on. We are not so many in number here as at other places, but just as energetic and as enthusiastic as could be expected. We have not yet organized Sunday school, but hope to do so in the near future. We are anticipating great and good results from our labors at this place this year.

I feel that there are great responsibilities resting upon me and I have long since given myself unreservedly to God and am trusting Him for strength and power that I may be able to carry out this work successfully. Brethren remember me in your petitions to God that He may uphold me by His strong arm, and I shall go on my way rejoicing.

HOW A GOOD HAMMER WAS MADE.

Once during a vacation I had need of a good hammer. I went into a hardware store in a certain city, picked up from the counter what appeared to be a serviceable tool and asked the clerk: "Is this a good hammer?" He said: "That is the best hammer made in this country." I turned it over and saw stamped upon one side of its iron head a name which instantly carried me back to my boyhood days. I saw in my imagination a white-haired kindly-faced, bright-eyed old gentleman, whose factory I had one day visited in company with several comrades. He manufactured not only hammers, but also skates, and it was our interest in the latter which had taken us to his place of business. I remember how earnestly he spoke in favor of boys' sports and how he kindled our admiration by the sensible things he said about lads of our sort. Now, this was the man whose name I read on the hammer about which I am speaking.

The story of that man's rise from an unknown mechanic to one of the most famous hammer-makers in the world is very interesting. More than seventy years ago he was the village blacksmith in a little place in the central part of New York State, where the railroad had not yet come. He was not at all satisfied with the hammers he was compelled to use in his work. The heads were either too soft and wore away rapidly, or they were too hard and so would split. Then, too, he was often vexed by having the head of the hammer fly off the handle, a thing which was both dangerous and annoying. In those days blacksmiths made their own hammers, and he knew very little about producing the right kind of iron for his purpose. However, he gradually overcame his difficulties and at last made a hammer which had not only a reliable head but also a handle from which the head could not be easily detached. One day there came to the village a half dozen carpenters who had been engaged to work upon a new church, and one of these went to the blacksmith and said: "Make me as good a hammer as you know how."

The blacksmith's pride was touched, and he said: "Perhaps you do not want to pay for as good a one as I know how to make."

"Yes, I do," replied the carpenter; "I want a good hammer."

The village blacksmith met the case fully. The carpenter was delighted and showed his hammer to his five companions. Each of them came next day and wanted one just like it. Then the contractor, seeing the excellence of these hammers, ordered two for himself. But he wanted hammers a little better than those the blacksmith had made for his men.

"I cannot make any better ones," said the blacksmith. "When I make a thing I make it as well as I can, no matter whom it is for."

A little later the storekeeper of the village ordered two dozen hammers from the blacksmith. Shortly after a dealer in tools who was visiting the village to get orders, saw one of these hammers and left and order for as many of that kind as the blacksmith could make. That was the beginning of his fortune. He hired a man or two, and then others, and kept on until he was at last employing in his factory one hundred and fifteen men and turning out every year an immense number of hammers. Here is the most interesting thing about this man's business. He never advertised his wares. He never reduced the price because other manufactures were reducing the price of theirs. His only care was to make a perfect hammer and to produce as many as people wanted.

Perhaps it is foolish for me to add any words of my own to this simple story, for I suppose every alert boy will see the moral of it without having it stated. Yet I should like to put into form these ideas: First, the village blacksmith did his best with nobody to watch him except God and himself. Second, he did for everybody what he would do for anybody. Third, he did not need to publish the virtues of his own work. I think I see in these statements, if put into religious terms, a good description of a Christian boy, and I am very sure that as the village blacksmith became famous for his hammers, so the sincere Christian will become known by his conduct and his influence in the community where he lives will be felt by all who know and observe him.

Here are two texts of Scripture which may well be read in connection with this story and its lesson: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," and, "Not slothful, in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord."—Editor N. Y. Christian Advocate.

CHURCH REUNION.

On the first Saturday in May, 1913, we shall have a home gathering of the members of Salem Chapel. A song and praise service will begin at 10:30 A. M. There will be preaching at 11:00 o'clock, after which we shall feast our bodies on temporal food. The entire afternoon will be spent in a reconsecration service and business meeting. We are anxious to have every member of Salem Chapel enjoy this reunion with us. We would not be so selfish as to restrict this invitation to the members, but everybody has cordial invitation. Family reunions are seasons of joy and precious memories of loved ones, and the many happy days we have spent together. The church is a Christian family. Shall we not enjoy a reunion of social and spiritual fellowship? Come and help us make this day a Christian love feast—a day every member of Salem Chapel shall love to recall—a day of reconsecration to God and to the service of our fellowmen.

If you are a member at Salem Chapel and can not be with us, will you not write us a letter and let us know something of your spiritual welfare? The church is interested in you and is looking forward to that final reunion in heaven of all who have been members of our church family on earth.

Yours in His service,

R. F. BROWN, Pastor.

"LEARN OF ME."

Jesus Christ came into the world, not only to give himself a ransom for sin, but to show by his life and conduct how we are to live. He is our model in all things. We should ever keep our eyes upon him. If we lose sight of Christ, we have no perfect pattern, and our lives will come to naught, so far as faith and prayer and righteousness are concerned. Children's Missionary Stories

STORIES are—yes, must be—used by every wide-awake worker among, or leader or teacher of, children.

MISSIONARY STORIES seem to have been the one field well-nigh overlooked until Mrs. Alice Moreton Burnett, Corresponding Secretary for the Woman's Board for Home Missions of the Christian Church, made a compilation of thirty interesting, instructive stories pertaining especially and directly to missions that are sure to be appreciated by workers, teachers, leaders, pastors, fathers, mothers—and the children.

Some of the Important Events of both Home Missions and Foreign Missions are also included, together with Suggestions For Junior Leaders.

was crossing the Caspian Sea in a boat. One of the men kept looking up into the sky, and did not take his eyes from a certain star. One of the passengers asked him why he kept looking at the stars, and he said: "Do you see that star? If we lose sight of that one star, we are lost, because that is the only way we know in which direction to steer our boat." So if our eyes are not on Jesus, if we do not love him, and if we love wicked things in this world more than we love Him, then we are lost. It is more important to see Jesus than anything else in the world.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE SWEETEST WORD.

BY MISS EMILY J. BRYANT

God gave the blithesome bird his happy song,—
The song that trembles on the vibrant air,
Sweet with the door of the blushing rose,
Transparent pearl and amethyst most rare.

My heart is full of praise like songful bird,
And melody is trembling everywhere;
Of all sweet words by mortal men e'er heard
Are those that vibrate with the heart in prayer.—Presbyterian Standard.

The best of all prayers is to act with a pure intention and with a continual reference to the will of God. Unhappy are they whose prayers do not render them more humble, more submissive, more willing to live in obscurity. The coldness of our love is the silence of our hearts toward God. Without this we may pronounce prayers, but we do not pray; for what shall lead us to meditate upon the laws of God if it be not the love of Him who has made these laws?—Fenelon.

The census reports are most cheering in the matter of illiteracy. During the ten years between 1900 and 1910 the illiteracy of the entire population has declined from 10.7 per cent. to 7.7 per cent. The decline is most noticeable in the public-school population, children from 10 to 14 years,—where the decline is from 7.2 per cent. to 4.1 per cent. Indeed, in the northern part of the country illiteracy among the children has practically disappeared.

THE PART OF PRAYER IN THE WORLD'S CONQUEST.

Martin Luther, the titanic man who, under God, "broke the spell of ages and laid nations subdued at the foot of the cross"—he was the man who said: "I have so much work to do today that I cannot get along on less than three hours of prayer." We can hardly think too highly of the apostolic ministries of John Wesley, but I fear that we seldom rightly appraise the significance of those early hours of prayer each day wherein this dynamic life was charged with its spiritual power. John Knox saved Scotland. It was his prayers that terrified the tyrannical Mary. We are told that the study walls of Richard Baxter were stained with prayer breath. No wonder Kidderminster had such a wonderful everlasting-pastor. David Brainerd prayed with a passion that few men have ever known; the savages of the wild to whom he went soon became communities of splendid Christian men and women. And William Carey and Henry Martyn and Robert Murray McChesney and others who have helped to stamp missions on every page of the last century's history learned through the journal of this flaming soul the secret of that prayer life that made them such mighty agencies in extending Christ's kingdom. The revival under Jonathan Edwards in the eighteenth century began with his famous call to prayer. It was in the Haystack Prayer Meeting at Williams College that Mills and Judson were born into the missionary life and the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions was born into Christian history. Moody was successful as an evangelist when the Christian people prayed; he failed when they didn't. Our New Testament tells us that the first home mission revival, Pentecost, followed a ten days' prayer meeting, and that the first foreign missionary enterprise had its rise in a prayer service at Antioch, Syria.

Can't we as followers of Christ learn the lesson of inspiration and all Christian history—that it is the praying Church that is the conquering Church always, and none others? Sin-burdened souls do not fall at our altars and there find glorious deliverance through faith in Christ as they once did because we are no longer the people of prayer that our fathers were. Zeal for world wide missions is not yet the burning passion of the Church that it should be, because the Church knows so little about the real privileges of the "secret place." Let the appeal reach all hearts and wills. Pray, pray, pray!—Rev. Ira Barnett, in Christian Advocate.

DICKY DON'T.

"I'm going to climb a mountain, mamma. See me climb!"

Mrs. Wells glanced up from her sewing, and saw Master Dick, who had just come in from chasing the hens, standing on the seat of a chair with one foot raised.

"Stop, stop! Dicky, don't! You'll surely fall—the chair will tip over!"

Dickey got into trouble so often and had to be scolded so many times a day, that he was nicknamed "Dicky Don't." But he was such a good-hearted little fellow, with his soft black hair and big brown eyes, that nobody could be angry with him.

One day he was playing in the yard when he saw the hired man come out of the barn with a queer, staggering step. The man's face was very red, his pipe between his lips was up-side down, and he spoke crossly to Dickey as he passed.

Five minutes later Dick saw smoke coming out of the window over the big barn door. He ran into the barn and looked up. Smoke was pouring from the hay, and a red tongue of flame shot up through it. What should he do? Papa was away at his work, mamma and a grown-up sister were calling on a sick neighbor, the hired man was gone—Dickey was alone.

One minute he stood still. Then he ran into the nearest stall, untied old Dobbin's halter, and managed to make him back out. A smart pat on the flank sent the horse through the door. The two cows were harder to move, but he did it somehow, though the smoke was growing thick and hot. He lost his way, and had begun to choke and cry, when he was caught up in a pair of strong arms and carried into the sweet open air by a man who had been driving by.

The barn was burned to the ground, but the animals were all saved. After that the little boy's name was changed to "Dicky Do!"—Sunshine.

Last Sunday I was with Rev. S. B. Klapp and the good people of Ingram, Va. Many of the people were kept away from church on account of threatening weather, but with those who did come we had a very pleasant service. The collection amounted to $11.01 and voted to give enough monthly for the support of a child. How nice it would be if more of our churches would do this. I call that a good example.

Below, I give the letter which I have recently mailed to almost all our pastors—five hundred of them. If your church can't be induced to give a monthly offering, won't you take a special offering so that we can get an average of $2.50 for each letter? That will pay the debt and for the water and sewerage.

Dear Sir and Brother:

Some time ago I wrote to the Sunday schools of the churches of your charge and asked them to contribute one of their regular monthly offerings for the support of the Orphanage. Some of them have responded and are enrolled in this good work; and others have the project under consideration. There are about seven hundred schools and if all could see the importance of this work and make an average of 50c per school each month, there would be no question as to its success; but it would soon be one of the strongest institutions of the Church. As it is, we are struggling hard.

Besides the indebtedness on bills and accounts, there is a very important matter which is urgent: that of equipping the building with water and sewerage, to better the sanitary condition of the Home. I am sure you will agree with me when you consider how dangerous it is with sixty-five people in one building without this most needed equipment. The financial condition of the institution is improving; and, with assistance of those who are interested, it will succeed. So I am writing a personal letter to the pastors to solicit their aid and influence, for the church looks to the pastor for advice, and considers him as their counsel.

We have $325.00 to begin with. That will pay about one-third of the expense. It will not mean such a large amount from any one school, or individual, if we can get the schools to give regularly. Now, won't you mention this to your schools and, if possible, get them interested? Your assistance is needed NOW. No one individual is responsible, but it is a responsibility of all.

Assuring you, in advance, of our appreciation of any assistance you may give, or cause to be given, and, with best wishes for the success of your work, I am,
Yours in the interest of the institution,

P. S. If you should know of any one who might be interested by a personal letter, you will do me a favor by sending me his name and address.

Dear Uncle Emory:

We send our money which we think is right. Please let us know if four months for each is correct. Enclosed find 80 cents which pays to May. We are very busy here in our Virginia home. I (Mary Lee) go to school every day and James helps Daddy and Mother. A handy little chap they say he is, too, and when he starts to school, he will surely be missed. You must be on the lookout for a gift from our "Little Workers Society" soon, as they had an Easter service and mean to do more than ever if they can for the Orphanage. We had a fine Easter egg hunt and we are so glad the children at the Orphanage had one too. Let us tell them how we had our eggs. The ladies saved their shells and filled them with candy, peanuts, pop corn, etc., and wrapped in fancy paper, and we guess there must have been five hundred of them. We all paid 5 cts. to hunt and this added to our Easter amount. There were about 65 children to hunt and we all found some, and such a good time. We love our little play mates here and every one is very nice to us. Give our love to the little boys and girls at the Orphanage. Our letter is getting too long so will close till next time.

A CHILD'S QUESTION.

Mamma, is the sky a curtain hiding heaven from our sight; are the moon and sun but windows, made to give the angels light? Are the stars bright flashing diamonds, shining from God's hand afar, and the clouds but vales of vapor, dropped from heaven floating there? If the sun's a window, mamma, don't the angels through it peep, ere it kisses earth at evening; watching o'er us while we sleep? Is the rainbow just a ribbon, girdling heaven and earth about, or a railing made of roses, so the angels won't fall out? Is the singing in the tree tops songs of praise some angel sings, are the snowy flakes of winter feathers falling from their wings? Are the dew drops brightly shining in the early morning hours, kiss spots left by elves and fairies where they slept among the flowers? Is the lightning rockets flying where the Prince of Glory comes and the thunder but the rattle of the baby angels' drums?

The above was executed by Leroy Howard Loomis (Seven years of age), Cleveland, Ohio.

SPRINGTIME CONSERVATISM.

Be conservative about spring. Don't let the small boys and girls get too optimistic, either, about these warm days. Shoes and stockings will not hurt them for a few weeks longer. The ground has not gotten thoroughly warmed yet. There is still too good a chance to catch that last spring cold if we let all the fires go out, change from heavy to light under wear, lay off our vests, or cast aside the shoes and stockings all at once. Better do these things gradually, one at a time, instead of all at once the first warm day.

It is rather strange how otherwise sensible men and women will go from a hot, dry-baked air indoors to the other extreme outdoors these days, and then refer to the resulting cold or pneumonia as a "mysterious dispensation of Providence." Their own conduct ordinarily is the only mysterious thing about it.

Spring Hints.

Here are a few suggestions to aid the ambitious in the worthy project of getting through the spring alive:

Don't shift your underclothing prematurely. Better a little discomfort to the skin than a sore spot on the lungs.

Control your fireplaces and the furnace by the thermometer, not by the calendar.

Keep the air in your house moderately moist by means of pans of water placed under the radiator or near the registers.

Take a cold bath every morning; there is no better defense against taking cold.

Keep your distance from people who cough or snuffle; a cold is as contagious as smallpox.

Don't say, "Oh, it's only a cold." The cemeteries are full of people who will never say that again.

THE POSITIVE MARK.

A successful teacher of young children has written to The Companion: "I am trying to use the merit mark—the positive mark, as well as the negative mark. I think it is the right idea in handling children."

It is the right idea in handling children—and grown people, too, for that matter. Psychologists agree that it is the hope or expectation of reward that gives the main force to all forms of human effort. The reward is not always money or indeed anything tangible; often it is praise, fame, power, leisure, the happiness and welfare of others, or merely the satisfaction that comes with accomplishment. The greater the reward, or the more it is desired, the more earnest is the effort.

A wise man has said that children do not play because they are young, but that they are young in order that they may play; that is, in order that they may test the impulses of their nature, and learn by innocent experience the safe and the unsafe roads of life—the right ones and the wrong ones. It is the duty and privilege of both parent and teacher to help the child to make a good beginning, and they can do so far more effectively by rewarding it for a right start than by punishing it for a wrong start.

A teacher who had to leave her young pupils alone for a few minutes once told them not to get their feet tangled in the rungs of their chairs while she was away. When she returned, every child had its feet so entangled, and in consequence, every child received demerits. How much better it would have been had the teacher left the pupils some work to occupy their minds, and had promised them credit marks if they did the work well!

Those who are responsible for the training of children—both at home and at school—are too much disposed to teach children by saying, "Don't do this!" and "Don't do that!" Better than constant prohibition and warning and punishment is keeping the child's mind so full of profitable things it will enjoy doing as to leave it no time for anything else. It is not always easy to carry out, but it is worth doing as far as possible; it is sound in theory and successful in practice.

Once the demerit mark—the negative mark—was the only mark known in the educational world. It was used to punish the child for the poor lesson or the broken rule—to humiliate and shame it before the other pupils and at its home. The teacher who has written to The Companion has adopted the better plan. We hope that the numbers of teachers who use the merit mark—the positive mark—is increasing, and that more and more parents will deal with the problems of childhood in that way.

Neatness and order are as contagious as diphtheria. Watch your neighbor follow your example when you clean the yard, plant flowers, and care for the lawn.

No individual and no health department alone can ever cope with the fly problem. But all of us, working together can very effectively cope with it.

BIG AUCTION SALE OF Choice Building Lots

AT ELON COLLEGE.

WE WILL SELL FIFTY OR MORE FINE RESIDENT LOTS AT AUCTION AT 3 O'clock P. M., Thursday, May 1st.

THESE are not imaginary lots away out on cross roads, but very desirable lots close in and located in one of the best college towns in the State, on the main line of the Southern Railroad, between Greensboro and Burlington, N. C., surrounded by a fine farming section with good churches and a large, flourishing college to educate your children, and a number of large and prosperous merchants and other enterprises which makes it a very attractive proposition for an investment, especially attractive from an educational standpoint. Buy you a lot and come here and educate your children from the primary grade in the graded school to the highest grades in one of the leading colleges of the South. Your attention is called to the fact that this town is in its infancy, from the fact it is impossible to keep such an Educational Center as Elon College down. We ask you to watch her grow after this sale. Men, listen to reason and buy while you have a chance to get in on the ground floor and buy at your own prices. Think what you could have made by buying lots five or ten years ago in the larger towns of the State. You have the same chance of making it at this sale; this town will grow in the same proportion.

Our terms are easy---1-4 cash, balance 6, 12 and 18 months, with legal interest on the deferred payments.

Ladies and gentlemen, we invite you to this sale whether you buy or not. You may get a lot or a present free, just so you are present. We Expect to Give Away One Lot, Bag of Money and Other Nice Presents Free. We will have a good band, good auctioneering and have a good time in general. OUR BOYS.

Marching to manhood our boys make a big show in this country—15,000,000 boys; enough to make three cities like New York, or three armies as big as that which followed Xerxes, or seven states as big as North Carolina, or seven churches as big as the whole M. E. Church, South.

Marching to manhood our boys are making a bad show in this country when it comes to moral and religion—a big show when it comes to sin and the "Pen." In 1890 there were in the Federal prisons in our country 711 youths under 14 years of age, and 8,984 between 14 and 19. There are more convicts (prisoners) in this country about 23 years old than any other age, and their criminal career started long before this age (23 when they were in prison) in most cases.

"Seven boys in ten go astray." (Dr. Long.) Shocking!

"Twenty-two per cent. of our population are in our churches; but of our young men there are only 15 per cent." That leaves 85 per cent. of our boys not in our churches, but in the school of sin, which has no age limit.

Rev. M. T. Lamb, gathering figures from another source, says: "We are told that not over 5 per cent. of the young men of our country are enrolled in our churches or identified in any form with Christian work." These figures agree in a sad degree!—N. C. Christian Advocate.

Alcoholism and tuberculosis have so ravaged the strength of France that a college of athletics is to be established in Paris, with branches throughout the nation.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

A Pure, Grape Cream Tartar Baking Powder

Royal Baking Powder improves the flavor and adds to the healthfulness of the food.

THE INASMUCH MISSION.

Four men who had long been social outcasts, founded two years ago in Philadelphia the Inasmuch Mission. One of them had never known any other world than that of the slums; the others were men who came from respectable families and who had been well educated; drink had pulled them from a high level to the lowest. They were unkempt, besotted "hoboes." They met by chance in a Philadelphia mission, and something—conversion, or salvation, or redemption—lighting within them the old fires of self-respect and hope, led them to vow that they would be men again, and that they would work together to give material and spiritual help to the fallen of the city.

They have kept the vow, and from the start their work has been successful. Although their combined capital was only twenty-seven cents, the mission they established fed and sheltered within a year twelve thousand homeless people and found employment for twelve hundred men. The founders opened the mission in a street, from which the owner of the building had driven the criminal and vicious tenants. Decent people would not live there. The owner gave the mission the free use of the property and when it was seen that the four men were in earnest in their determination to succeed, financial aid followed. They now occupy several houses, and also have a large tent where in the first year twenty-eight thousand people attended religious and social meetings. Some wealthy persons in Philadelphia have agreed to build for the use of the mission a hotel with eight hundred rooms. It is to be on the plan of the Mills hotel in New York.

Much of the wonderful success of these men is doubtless due to their intimate knowledge of the class they are trying to help. They know from experience every scheme and subterfuge of the impostors; they know equally well when a man sincerely wishes to make a fresh start, and they know how to help him do it. Two years ago these men were human derelicts. In view of what they have done, who shall say that any man is too far down to be reached and brought back to a useful and upright life? Their work gives a new beauty to the motto of their mission:

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Youth's Companion.

THE OBJECT OF THE CHRISTIAN SUN PIANO CLUB.

Briefly stated, the object of the Club is to knock the bottom out of piano prices without knocking the quality out of the pianos. Cheap pianos, as ordinarily marketed, are unfortunately cheap in quality as well as in price. The difficult problem which confronted the founders of the Club was "How can we supply 'quality' pianos to our Club members at 'cheap' prices." The problem would have staggered the average piano dealer who sells pianos in the same old way that his father and grandfather sold them.

The Club has proven a tremendous success because its organizers had faith in the power of the principle of co-operation, intelligently and honorably conducted. They knew fully one-third of the money paid for pianos represented waste, pure and simple. They therefore built their plans with a view of cutting out the waste in marketing pianos for they knew that the piano buyer was paying for the waste.

If your home needs a good piano or self-player piano you can save a hundred dollars or more by clubbing your order with those of other members in a big wholesale transaction. Write for the Club's catalogue which contains full particulars, description of the instruments and letters of the strongest endorsement from members who joined last year. DEATHS

Franklin.

Sunday morning, April 13th, brother H. G. Franklin passed away. Bro. Franklin was the oldest member of Piney Plains Christian church and was nearing his eighty-third birthday. He was one of the faithful soldiers that passed through the entire civil war and likewise a good soldier of the Cross.

For several years Bro. Franklin had been in declining health and much of the time felt unable to be present at the regular Sunday services, but he would almost always manage to be present at the revival meetings where he took an active part in the services, ever ready to testify for Jesus.

He leaves to mourn their loss a wife and several children and two brothers. The body was laid to rest in Piney Plains cemetery. May the Comforter comfort and guide those whom he leaves behind and bring them at last together in a better, brighter world.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

Farlines.

Gela Williamson Farlines, only daughter of W. H. and Jennie Williamson, was born March 26, 1892, and died April 13, 1913, at the age of 21 years and 18 days. She professed faith in Christ and united with Hebron Christian church at the age of 12, and was faithful to her church and lived her religion thereafter.

She was married to A. C. Farlines in December, 1912.

Her health gave way about four weeks before her death and during this time she was confined to her bed, and was taken back to her former home. Mother and father, neighbors and friends devoted their best efforts, and secured the services of the best physicians, for the restoration of health, but without avail. The call had come, and she must go—in fact, desired to go and be with the angels.

She leaves behind an afflicted mother, and a father and two brothers, with a number of other relatives and friends who weep because of her departure, to all of whom we extend a pastor's sympathy. It was one of the most largely attended funerals that this writer has witnessed for quite a while—almost the entire community, white and colored, turning out to pay the last tribute of respect.

We pray Heaven's blessing upon those bereaved. C. C. PEEL.

Gammon.

Marion Christiana, the youngest child of Bro. K. S. Gammon and wife, of Great Bridge, Va., died March 29th, 1913, aged 13 months and 23 days. She was the delight of the home and the joy of her parents' hearts. It was hard to give her up, but the Master called her to Himself. They have the sympathy of a host of friends in their loss. God bless and comfort them. The funeral was conducted from the house in the presence of a large gathering of sympathizing friends. J. W. HARRELL.

NEARLY SMOTHERED.

Chandler, N. C.—Mrs. Augusta Lomax, of this place, writes: "I had smothering spells every day, so bad that I expected death at any time. I could not sit up in bed. I suffered from womanly troubles. My nerves were unstrung. I had almost given up all hope of ever being better. I tried Cardui, and it did me more good than anything I had ever taken. I am better now than I ever expected to be." BRIEFS

TWO WAYS.

To share the moods of sky and earth,
And all that they can give,—
To temper grief with wholesome mirth,—
That is the way to live.

To face the future undismayed,
With courage pure and high,—
To seek the sun beyond the shade,—
That is the way to die.
—Wm. H. Hayne, in Youth's Companion.

Increasing Immorality.

Juvenal, the Roman poet and satirist, nearly two thousand years ago wrote that which, we presume, every keen observer since has felt was true of his own time, to wit: "Posterity will add nothing to our immorality. Our descendants can but do and desire the same crimes as ourselves." Posterity may not have added to, it doubtless has diversified, immorality. On the other hand there never were as many agencies for good as today, nor were men in high places ever so out-spoken against sin and crimes in every shape.

Enemies to the Home.

The city of Chicago has a Court of Domestic Relations which is, as its name implies, the tribunal to which are referred, for trial, those infractions of the law arising from relations in the home. This Court has now completed its second year and Judge Gemmill has compiled an analysis of the 3,700 cases coming before his court for trial during the past year. The judge's tabulation is interesting, as showing the origin of those causes which sever the marriage bond and break up home ties. The causes, with per cent. of the whole, were liquor, 42 per cent.; immorality, 14 per cent.; disease, 13 per cent.; ill temper, 11 per cent.; wife's parents, 6 per cent.; husband's parents, 1 per cent.; married too young, 4 per cent.; laziness, 3 per cent.; miscellaneous, 6 per cent. Of course liquor leads in this, as it ever does, in the destructive and pernicious work of this world. The worst foe the home has, the worst foe man ever encountered in this world is strong drink. And whenever Christian people shall unitedly say that the evil of strong drink must be done away, it will go, and not till then. "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Pro. 20:1.

A Rich Legacy.

In the enjoyment of life, and wholesome health, we may jest and speak lightly of the issues of death, and of that which is to come. But when we face the fact, the real event, that is another matter. Any sane and sober mind that contemplates eternity, that eternity of years and ages without beginning and which has no end, must be inspired by its awe and aroused as to its meaning and importance. Many, in this busy world, will not stop to consider, to meditate, to contemplate.

J. Pierpont Morgan, the master of Wall Street and owner of millions, left to his children and heirs a legacy richer far than that which the amount of his stocks, bonds and securities indicates. In his will were written these words: "I commit my soul into the hands of my Savior, in full confidence that, having redeemed it and washed it in His most precious blood, He will present it faultless before the throne of my Heavenly Father; and I entreat my children to maintain and defend, at all hazard and at any cost of personal sacrifice, the blessed doctrine of the complete atonement for sin through the blood of Jesus Christ once offered, and through that alone." This man's faith in God was simple, child-like and well fixed, and if his children shall live up to this part of their legacy they will never have occasion to be ashamed on that account.

The Secretary of State and Abstinence.

Our Secretary of State at Washington, the Hon. William Jennings Bryan, in giving a dinner to the diplomats recently, refused to serve wine at his table. Upon the papers, domestic and foreign, have been very much to say by way of caustic criticism and otherwise. Meanwhile Mr. Bryan came with an explanation of his side of the matter. Before accepting the position offered him by President Wilson, he told the President that he knew it was the custom to serve wine at dinners to the diplomats, but that both he himself and Mrs. Bryan were teetotalers and that it was a long standing custom of theirs never to serve wine at their table, and that they could not do so consistently, though he should become a member of the cabinet. The President assured the Secretary that his wish in the matter should be respected, and that the matter of what he should serve at dinner would be at his own discretion.

To our thinking nothing could be more far-fetched, unjust, or uncalled for than this criticism of Mr. Bryan for not serving liquor on his table. For him to have served it, under the circumstances, would have been nothing short of glaring hypocrisy. He does not drink himself, and for him to put before others, be those others never such great men, that which he conscientiously adjudged to be useless, dangerous and deadly, would have been inexcusable. All honor here and now to this man who dared to have, and manifest, the courage of his conviction. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him." Hab. 2:15.

A Million to Missions.

The gift of almost his entire estate, estimated at a million dollars, to foreign missions by young William C. Borden, who died at Cairo, Egypt, April 9, serves to further emphasize the manner in which the subject of missions is taking hold of men of means. The series of laymen's missionary conventions held throughout the country last year and this brought prominently to the fore the fact that business men are fast learning that missions is no longer a matter of sentiment or emotion, but a subject worthy of deepest consideration, and a challenge to the very best Christian citizenship can do.

Sensible men make money, not for the sake of having the money, but of getting what the money can buy. They expect returns for what they invest, use, or donate. When this subject of missions has been brought freely, fully and frankly home to men of means they are going to see that their money put into it will bring them more comfort, more satisfaction, more contentment, more agreeable feeling than so much invested in any other thing, cause, or enterprise whatsoever. Not long, and millions are going to be poured into missions: for God himself is certainly taking the pains to see to it that money so invested shall bring forth rich and abundant returns. God makes this evident from His word, and from the experience of those who have taken Him at His word and acted upon it.

"But this I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." (II Cor. 9:6.)

China and Christianity.

That China, with its teeming millions saturated with ancestral worship, and indoctrinated, through untold centuries, with the bigoted religion of Confucius, is awakening to the wisdom, blessings, and benefits of Christianity can be no longer questioned. The most significant event of a century transpired when the daily papers recently carried, in their associated press dispatches from Peking, the announcement that the Chinese government had sent out an appeal to the Christians of China to observe Sunday April 27 as a day of special prayer for the Republic of China in its present crisis. The special objects of the Christian's prayer, as set forth by the government, were for the National Assembly, the new government, the new President of the republic soon to be elected, for the Constitution of the republic, for the maintenance of peace, for the election of strong and virtuous men to office.

All this, coming from such a source, seems incredible. It is a modern miracle. China, heretofore, deemed, the most obstinate and impervious of all pagan nations to Christianity, and among the most recent to rise in revolt and rebellion against Christian missionaries and their teaching, to be the first non-Christian nation of the world to officially ask the prayers of Christian people marks a change of mind and attitude nothing less than wonderful, marvelous, miraculous. It is freely predicted that this will give an impetus to the cause of Christ in China such as has not been witnessed in all the ages. He is an intensely ignorant, or a wilfully blind man indeed, who does not see that our God is moving mightily upon the nations, and that the missionary opportunity was never half so large and inviting as it is today. "Shall a nation be born at once? As soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children." Isa. 66:8.

At a missionary conference in Canton, China, under the presidency of John R. Mott, resolutions were adopted urging the International Conference to be held in Shanghai to take steps looking to the union of all Protestant denominations in China.

EDITORIAL

THE TRUE RICHES.

There are true riches. There are also false riches. To be keen and scrutinizing enough to distinguish between them is greatly to be desired.

A cursory reading of the Word would indicate that riches are a curse. Job. 27:19, "The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered; he openeth his eyes, and he is not."

Again Psalm 73:12, "Behold, these are the ungodly, who prosper in the world; they increase in riches." Proverbs 27:11 "The rich man is wise in his own conceit."

Ecclesiastes 5:13, thus bewails "There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt."

And our Savior said, Mark 10:24, 25, "How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God! It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."

Luke 1:53 records, "He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich he hath sent empty away." And then our Savior again said, Luke 6:24, "But woe unto you that are rich; for ye have received your consolation." And Paul in writing to Timothy said, I Tim. 6:9, "But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition."

Yet, despite these denunciations, biblical and holy, against riches, there is not a reader of these lines who would not be richer than he now is—if he could.

Riches are the reward of industry. Riches often declare their owner to be of superior physical, mental, or moral worth. Riches give prestige, position, place, power. Riches represent an accumulation of well directed energy; are the exponents of painstaking effort and long endeavor. Riches are enticing, inviting, fascinating. The lure of riches causes many a man to lay aside sloth, indifference, indolence.

So, despite the holy injunction against riches, all of us would like to be rich.

There is a reason. Rich men are necessary. The Lord as truly leads some men into great riches in material things as He does others into great riches of holy favor and heavenly zeal.

The Bible pronounces blessings upon riches, as well as cursings. Abraham, the father of the faithful, was a very rich man. Gen. 13:2, "Abraham was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold."

Hos. 12:8, "And Ephraim said, yet I am become rich, I have found me out substance." Rom. 10:12, "The Lord is rich to all that call upon Him." Rev. 5:12, "Worthy is the Lamb to receive riches."

There is then a distinction to be made. The world staggers on in rushing madness and nervous activity today because it does not distinguish between true and false riches.

Riches cannot bring happiness. There are miserable men and unhappy women living in mansions and rolling in riches.

Riches are a means to an end. They are for use; not for hoarding, heaping up, laying away to rust and rot.

The true riches are those which a man gets in the fear of Almighty God, and holds for God as a faithful steward.

All things are God's. We can hold nothing longer than He wishes. Rich and poor alike are accountable to Him. The true riches are those which a man lays up for himself where rust doth not corrupt.

PERSONALITY IN MISSIONS.

It takes neither a prophet, nor a philosopher, to see that the trouble with our missionary situation is that we have wholly depersonalized the matter. No enterprise, most of all, no benevolent or church enterprise, develops to any degree of usefulness, power, or influence without a person behind it. This is a self-evident proposition. Any other method of dealing with church matters is suicidal. There never was a movement, that moved or counted, without a mover.

Now we of the Southern Christian Convention are pretending to make a show for foreign missions, and there is nobody to move in the matter. All responsibility has been taken away in the matter, and the discussion of foreign missions in our Convention and conference assemblies is about as colorless, cold and uninteresting as any heartless performance can be.

Brethren and beloved, before we do anything worth while in foreign missions we have got to inject personal responsibility into the matter. For our own part, it seems to us a shame and a sin that we have not done so long ago.

We have depersonalized the matter. Before we achieve anything we have got to re-personalize it, and lay the burden of getting missionaries, and getting the money to support the missionaries, upon somebody's shoulders.

Since this writer has been intimately acquainted with the public work of the Christian church, the last twenty years or more, there have offered from the churches composing our Southern Convention four men: Rev. D. F. Jones, who was sent to Japan, but long since returned; Rev. D. P. Barrett, now in Porto Rico; Rev. T. E. White, who was in Porto Rico, but now, and for some years, at home on furlough; and another who offered and went but was we believe never regularly employed by the Board and has long since fallen out and returned home.

Is this not a spectacle, brethren—four missionaries called out in a period of twenty-five years, and only one of that number kept on the field! It is a pity and a shame to have to recount these sad and deplorable facts.

Can somebody tell us why God is not calling missionaries from the twenty-five thousand church members composing the more than two hundred churches of the Southern Christian Convention? This writer can pick out any one of a dozen single congregations in other churches about us who can surpass our entire number both in the gift of men and means to the foreign work the past quarter of a century.

Many can, if they will, give the solution to this deplorable situation. In all our numbers there is nobody to care.

Have you ever heard a heart-rending, soul-stirring, men-and-money-getting appeal for foreign missions in our Convention, or in our Conference? We never have.

If we get little money for missions, when conferences are over, we send little in to the foreign mission treasury. If we get much we send much. That ends it with us. We raise our "conference apportionments" in a perfunctory manner, and that is about the only semblance of an appeal to the people we make for missions during the year.

Shall we begin to take interest in foreign missions, brethren, or shall we simply sit idly by and leave the evangelization of the world to others who care?

God cannot prosper a non-missionary people and keep his word. "Be sure your sins will find you out," are words declared to those who were trying to be non-missionary.

READING THE BIBLE DAILY.

Many of us feel that we are too busy during the day, and too tired at night, to read our Bible every day. We are not. We only think we are. As a rule, people do what they most wish to do. Besides this, put the fact that some of the very busiest men in all the world read their Bibles every day. It is a most noble practice. The one who fails is the greatest loser.

As we have quoted before, Emperor William of Germany turns aside from the affairs of state to read his Bible every day. King George of England says that he promised his mother, Queen Alexandra, in the year 1881, that he would read his Bible every day, and to the present time he has kept up the practice. Our President Wilson is the very busiest of busy men, yet he finds time daily for Bible reading. It is safe to say that it is sheer neglect and indifference, and not a busy life, that keeps one from the noble habit of daily Bible reading. Begin today, my brother, and you will soon find that the habit is as easy, agreeable, wholesome, and convenient as taking the morning, mid-day, or evening meal, or as little inconvenient as any other good and necessary daily practice.

We pass on to our readers the following from a recent address by President Wilson:

"I am sorry for the men who do not read the Bible every day. It is one of the most singular books in the world, for every time you open it some old text that you have read a score of times suddenly beams with a new meaning."

"No great nation can survive its own temptations and its own follies that does not indoctrinate its children in the word of God, so that as school-master and as governor I know that my feet must rest with the feet of my fellowmen upon this foundation, and upon this foundation only; for the righteousness of nations, like the righteousness of men, must take its source from these foundations of inspiration."

DANCING AND DIVES.

The low level of sensuality and suggestiveness to which society has carried the modern dance has awakened the secular, as well as the religious, press throughout the land, and from every quarter now comes the cry that the dance has out done itself in recent times, and that a reaction must follow. Almost every secular journal in the land, that lays any claim to decency and morality, has taken up the cudgel against the evil practice, and the demand is that the modern dance savors of the dive, and that wholesome and virtuous people will not tolerate it.

We could give excerpts from any one of many dailies; but the following editorial from the daily Boston Herald will show the tenor of the press at present as touching the ball-room evil:

"Is it to optimistic to hope that good results in all parts of the country will follow the emphatic and unqualified ban which Mrs. Wilson, the mistress of the White House, has put on the 'turkey trot,' 'tango,' 'bunny hug,' and other indecent dances at all the official and private social affairs at which she shall preside as the first lady of the land? The effect of this cannot fail to be felt to a marked degree in Washington society, and thence it must radiate more or less in all directions. As the mother of three daughters, and as a sensible, wholesome woman, Mrs. Wilson has taken a stand that cannot be commended too highly. If all mothers of good daughters, and sensible women who are not mothers, were to show equal courage, the dancing evil would soon cease to present its present serious problem."

"These new dances, which had an indecent origin, were taken up by the so-called society leaders who are always hungry for novelty at any cost. The dancing-teacher took their cue. Young people in school quickly adopted the suggestion. Now those in charge of school dances and of other gatherings of young people are kept at their wits' end to prevent the dancing from falling to the level of the dive. Too often they fail in their attempts, and the dances fall to that level and stay there, or have to be forbidden altogether. Innocent and pure-minded young people who participate in these vulgar dances do not long remain innocent and pure minded. It is not prudish or old-fashioned to deplore the situation, and to hope that people of refinement everywhere will join Mrs. Wilson in the stand she has taken. There must be a reaction from the dancing excesses and indecencies of the past winter, and it cannot come too soon."

HELP FOR REV. J. G. BISHOP AND WIFE.

In THE CHRISTIAN SUN of April 9, Dr. J. P. Barrett, writing of the terrible situation from the recent floods in Dayton, Ohio, said: "I am told that Dr. Bishop is hurt worse than most of our people. He and his wife are aged, and their house suffered more from the flood than did most of the houses in that community. I do not wish my friends to send me any financial aid, as I did not suffer losses, but if any of our people in the South feel like helping Brother and Sister Bishop, I am sure it would be help worthy and nobly given and just as truly deserved. I am making this suggestion without the knowledge of Dr. Bishop. He is now almost eighty years old and his wife is not very far behind him. He has always worked on a small salary and lived economically, and I am sure needs help just now as he stands face to face with such a calamity."

We offered our services to accept such donations as SUN readers might see fit to make, and to put them together and forward to Bro. Bishop as fast as amounts worth while accumulate. Bro. Bishop's loss is estimated at $1,000.00 or more.

In the Moody Schools at Northfield, Mass., there are enrolled approximately fifteen hundred young men and young women, and it is stated that the number of applications each year is fourfold the number of vacancies.

The general strike in Belgium as a protest against the nation's system of plural voting will involve more than 300,000 workmen, it is claimed.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

—Send for sample copies, Bro. Pastor, and have CHRISTIAN SUN day in your congregation.

—As a result of the recent religious awakening in Franklin, Va., Pastor, C. H. Rowland has received thirty-five new members.

—Rev. Henry Spencer Booth is assisting Rev. D. A. Keys in a series of meetings this week at Rosemont church, near Norfolk, Va.

—Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., is assisting Rev. J. M. Roberts this week in a meeting at Main St. Church, Berkley, Va., begun last week.

—Pastor H. E. Rountree's subjects at the First Christian church, Greensboro, last Sunday, were at 11 o'clock "Our Responsibility." At 8 p. m. "The Wages of Sin."

—A good layman told us recently that he had not heard his pastor speak publicly about THE SUN in two or three years; and he did not approve his pastor's silence in the matter.

—Rev. E. M. Carter, Superintendent of the Orphanage, is to preach for the pastor, Dr. W. C. Wicker, at Hines' Chapel next Sunday, May 4, and hold quarterly conference and communion service.

—Annual Memorial services are to be held at Shallow Well church, Jonesboro, Saturday, May 10. Dr. W. C. Wicker is to deliver the address on Saturday and preach Sunday at the 11 o'clock service.

—CHRISTIAN SUN readers will greatly enjoy the splendid enthusiasm of our Brother A. W. Lightbourne whose wonderful work in Delaware is bringing forth an abundant harvest. His Delmarvia Conference letter on another page tells of real progress.

—Dr. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, N. C., is to dedicate the new church building, Pleasant Union, Harnett County, N. C., Sunday, May 4. Rev. J. D. Wicker, Sanford, N. C., is pastor, under whose wise leadership the new church building has been erected.

—Raleigh Christian Advocate: "THE CHRISTIAN SUN has come out in a new and enlarged form and is very much improved. It is now published on its own press, and it will be a stronger force than ever in its denomination. We congratulate it on its good fortune."

—Bro. Pastor: Since when have you made an appeal to your people to take and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN? Don't you think THE SUN now merits your approval and your assistance? We beg our pastors to help us out now. Tell the people about THE SUN in its greatly enlarged and improved form and give them a chance.

—Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor, reports afternoon services at New Providence, Graham, last Sunday, at which Rev. A. B. Kendall, Burlington preached a masterful and convincing sermon on "The Why of the Christian Church." Bro. Kendall is a man of pulpit power, and is winning friends wherever he goes amongst our Southern churches.

—Rev. K. D. Holmes, pastor of the Methodist church, Sanford, N. C., died at his home in Sanford Thursday, April 24. He is survived by a wife, four daughters, and two sons. He was the son of our Brother R. R. Holmes, of Pope's Chapel, Franklin County, and a brother of the late lamented Prof. Holmes of the Chair of English in Elon College.

—If our pastors do not appreciate THE CHRISTIAN SUN now they would not appreciate a denominational paper of any form, fashion or make up. The present SUN is a challenge to our pastors and our brotherhood generally, and if there is not a liberal response and expressions of approval and appreciation throughout the church we shall be disappointed as we never have been in all our lives.

—Rev. J. W. Holt, pastor, announces two services next Sunday, May 4, at Long's Chapel, Alamance, also two services at Union, Alamance, 2nd Sunday, May 11, and Memorial Services at Bethlehem 3rd Sunday, May 18, which will include morning and afternoon services also. Improvements are being made on the building at Long's Chapel which are to be completed by next Sunday. Bro. Holt reports a large congregation at Union last Sunday and that his work is in a very hopeful condition.

—Since our pastors will not solicit subscriptions for THE CHRISTIAN SUN in their congregations will they kindly write us, personally or for print, and give reasons why? It simply passes our understanding.

—As the result of a little effort on the part of Rev. W. H. Denison, pastor of Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, we were handed a list of seven new subscribers to THE SUN with the cash last week. Bro. Pastor, it is easy if you will just try. And your people will appreciate it.

—From Virginian-Pilot, Sunday, 27th: "On his beautiful lawn shaded with ancient elms, Elijah Joyner, surrounded by his children, grand-children and great-grand-children, celebrated his ninety-first birthday at a big dinner today. Mr. Joyner was born in 1822 in Southampton county, and has lived fifty years at his present home in Isle of Wight."

We congratulate our Brother Joyner and wish that he may live to celebrate, in equally happy manner his hundredth anniversary. He is one of the charter members of Mt. Carmel Christian church and has reared a large family who have taken their places in church and community.

—The Herald of Gospel Liberty for April 10 had only four pages but its very size and appearance spoke eloquently and pathetically of the havoc wrought in our church and publishing house interests in Dayton by the recent flood. On April 17 a larger Herald came giving many views of men and houses hard hit by the flood's devastation. Our people are making heroic endeavor to rise from their stricken condition, and present a courageous front to the world. Our loss in Dayton and in the west, as a church, is tremendous, and will be felt for years. The Herald's appeal that all its subscribers send a year's subscription in advance to supply ready cash with which to operate is a worthy one, and should be heeded.

—We are surprised, and greatly pained, to learn that Rev. J. M. Roberts is ill. The following facts are taken from the Berkley Correspondence of the Virginian-Pilot, April 28: Rev. J. M. Roberts, pastor of First Christian church, Berkley, is ill at his home at Windsor, Va., and his condition is regarded as precarious. He had three hemorrhages Saturday and Sunday. Superintendent J. O. Wiggs received a telegram yesterday announcing his illness. His physician has advised a rest in the mountains.

THE SUN's editor was with pastor Roberts in a meeting till Friday night and thought him to be in his usual health, though there was some slight complaint on Friday. He was to spend Saturday at his home and return Saturday p. m. for his Sunday services. We sincerely trust the statements relative to his condition are overdrawn, as Bro. Roberts is one of our strong men and was entering upon a career of great usefulness at Berkley where

DELMARVIA CONFERENCE.

The Delmarvia Conference is thriving. The portable church has served a good purpose and will be of great service in the future. We now have two permanent churches near Dover, at Willis and the more recent one at Wyoming. We will withdraw from the small country work at Magnolia and concentrate our forces at Wyoming, which is an attractive and growing town. We have an opening in Wilmington, and as Rev. Dr. Wolf has just joined our church at Dover, there is a strong probability that he will become responsible for that field. Wilmington has about one hundred thousand population and needs a Christian Church.

The Wyoming church will require financial assistance for a year or two. After that it will be able to maintain itself and enlarge its operations.

Interest in the Washington field is increasing. We must have a church in the National Capitol. It is more than suggestive that our dear Brother L. F. Johnson has become concerned for the success of this proposed movement, it is Providential. We hope to see this movement definitely started during the approaching session of the Delmarvia Conference, which will be held in the Dover church on Saturday before the last Sunday in May. It is also being planned to hold a meeting in Washington by the friends and active supporters of the enterprise. This will take place immediately after the adjournment of the Delmarvia Conference.

Brethren, this is our day of duty and opportunity. Our church has a God-given mission to this generation. Our feeble annual missionary shots at out-of-sight targets are pathetically mean substitutes for the splendid service God expects of us at home. Do both if possible—but our failure at home, with the hungry eyes of the world fixed upon us, will be the tragedy of ages. Christianity must solve American social and industrial problems—we must be vital and efficient Christians at home—or our work abroad will degenerate into a disgusting and Christ-dishonoring competition in demoralizing propaganda. And the day for that has forever passed—thanks be to God!

Strongest minds have heaved the lead in these depths. Mightiest hearts have quaked with strange terror in the presence of these problems. Christianity alone possesses the secret of their solving. She hath won her way hitherto. Vandals, Huns and Goths have bowed their haughty head before her victorious march. There is no trace of feebleness in her form, no hectic flush in her cheek, no halt in her step, no haze in her eye. She intends to conquer. Hoary crowds and gory superstitions tremble at her approach. She comes to make men think and then to act. Revolutionist, indeed, is she! Monopoly of power, of thought, of joy in life, she comes to overturn. Her mission is without partiality or hypocrisy. Her smile is hope and her presence a benediction. Her Divine Head "ascended that He might fill all things." He is achieving His intention. His ideas and principles are silently but surely permeating the world—in commerce, honesty; in law, justice; in government, liberty; in art, purity; in society, mutual helpfulness and world-wide charity.

Our task of leadership in this sublime movement is both easy and appropriate. We have no barriers of traditionalism and dogmatism, and no cumbersome trappings of sacerdotalism and ceremonialism to embarrass our position, or obstruct our progress. Let us abandon our mimic warfare and take up the weapons of a noble championship of the grandest cause the world has known, and win a victory that will seal America for Christ.

CHAPEL HILL.

I was at Chapel Hill last Wednesday, and found all the outside work done on the house of worship except the steps. The flooring and ceiling are in the building and paid for. But the work must be suspended a while for want of money. This is sad, for we have no where to hold Sunday school or have preaching until we can get in the house. There are about forty-five members of the Christian church now in the town, possibly more, and they continue to move in, and no house of our own in which to worship. Many have helped liberally. Will not others do so soon, and help us get in our new home?

We have a nice brick house with a beautiful slate roof on it. But it will take at least $750 to pay for windows and seats, besides smaller bills, as wiring, plastering, flooring, ceiling, painting inside, etc.

Let us have an enthusiastic money move all along the line and the work will soon be done.

The second Sunday in this month I was at Shallow Well. The day was pleasant, Sunday school good and the congregation large. This was my second visit to this church in the interest of Chapel Hill work. The brethren and sisters showed both times they were interested in the work by their gifts. At night I was at Sanford. The church endeared itself to Chapel Hill by their donations. At both these churches, the pastors are held in high esteem.

A PRESCRIPTION OF GREAT VALUE.

BY PENHOLDER.

The accompanying unique prescription for physical, mental, and moral ills is worth more than "gems from the mountains and pearls from the ocean." Nearly all moods, trials, and temptations find in this a formula, a panacea. The wise will make proof of its efficiency; the simple will neglect it, and by so doing will take a cubit from their stature.

BALM OF GILEAD.

If you have the "blues," read the twenty-seventh Psalm.

If your pocketbook is empty, read the thirty-seventh Psalm.

If people seem unkind, read the fifteenth chapter of John.

If you are discouraged about your work, read the one hundredth and twenty-sixth Psalm.

If you are going on a journey, read the one hundred and twenty-first Psalm.

If you are all "out of sorts," read the twelfth chapter of Hebrews.

If you are losing confidence in people, read the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians.

If you can't have your way about everything, keep silent and read the third chapter of James.

If you imagine that your sufferings are singular and superior, read the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah.

Southern Baptists, who have 3,500 homeless Churches, are now in a campaign to raise one million dollars as a permanent loan fund for church-building purposes.

DR. W. G. SARGENT TO LECTURE.

The third institute for ministerial students for the present session will begin on May the eight and the speaker will be the Rev. Dr. W. G. Sargent, whose theme will be the Revelation. The other speakers have been Dr. J. J. Summerbell, Dayton, Ohio, who has since deceased, and Dr. W. S. Long, Chapel Hill, N. C. Dr. Summerbell discussed during the three days of his institute The Effects of Campbellism. Dr. Long's theme was Systematic Theology, and Dr. Sargent will conclude the series with two days' institute work, three sessions of two and one-half hours each day, treating the difficult problems of the Revelation, in which he is a specialist.

Dr. Sargent is pastor of one of the largest and most influential churches of Providence, Rhode Island, and is also Secretary for Education of the American Christian Convention. Before emigrating to this country, he held responsible charges in Canada, being a pastor of one of the oldest churches of Toronto just before coming to Providence.

Dr. Sargent, besides lecturing to the ministerial students on the Revelation will preach twice and speak to the entire student body on one of his recent pilgrimages into the realm of Belles Lettres, his subject for that occasion being, The Spiritual Teaching of Tennyson.

THE LIFE THAT MAKES THE WORLD NEW.

The leading peoples of mankind date their years from the birth of One whom they regard as having made a new beginning in the history the world, Jesus Christ. Much modern scholarship has been employed in showing that this is a mistake, and that nothing happened in Judea at the beginning of the Christian era beyond a felicitous combination of Hebraic and Hellenistic elements in a new teacher. For this purpose, the documents which record his life have been submitted to an unsparing analysis, and every device of scholarship has been employed to show that they prove nothing in him above the level of the historic development of the race up to the time of his advent.

If all those documents were destroyed, however, the actual course of events during nineteen centuries would oblige us to assume substantially some such a story as they record. The direct, growing and elevating influence which began its course at that point in the world's history would be an inexplicable puzzle without the explanation of it which the Evangelists supply, and would force men to the wildest theories and conjectures as to what lay behind all this world-wide movement. For while the influence of other great men fades away with the lapse of years, that of Jesus Christ increases, both in reaching a larger number of human hearts, and in affecting more deeply the mass of men he does reach. It is like the flood Ezekiel saw to flow from the gates of the new Temple, which at once widened and deepened as it went.

What marks Jesus Christ as a personality apart from other men in his character. While the sense of sin is present in every other sane mind, and we all share in the distress which attends this, in him there is an entire absence of both. He challenged his enemies to convince him of sin, and they did not accept the challenge. The challenge still stands for all who wish to limit or undo his influence. A few have accepted the challenge, but even negative critics of the Gospel decline to sustain them in it.

Nor was this a mere faultlessness of character, developed in the absence of strong and real temptation. He was "tempted in all points," but overcame temptation, without even a wavering of his holy will. He passed through inward struggles, but with the conclusion in utter resignation to the will of his Father. He exceeded all other men in his sense of the sinfulness of sin, and in perception of the evils it brought upon them in alienation from life in God. His sense of their sins was far beyond what they themselves felt about them, and his personal influence was to awaken them to a feeling in some measure like his own. He quickened their consciences. But at no point in his ministry do we hear a word of confession for anything wrong in his own life; and his dying prayer is not "Father, forgive me," but "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

No mere negation suffices to describe his character. He was not merely sinless, but holy in a higher degree than the human mind is capable of conceiving. This holiness may be described as the perfect consecration of himself to the will of God, so that he did only those things which his Father gave him to do, spake only those words which his Father gave him to speak, and lived in constant dependence upon God for whatever he needed. He not merely submitted his own will to that of God, but he made that will his own. He lived in uninterrupted fellowship with the Father, realizing God by faith in unlimited measure, loving him with all the powers of his nature, and being alive to him with every fibre of his being. He thus realized the ideal sonship of God, which is the highest conception we can have of man. He is the only realized ideal that history offers us.

Such a character, and the life which expressed it, can be accounted for only as the entrance into history of a new force, through the direct action of God. No combination of what the world already possessed explains Jesus to us. The sons of men, in the natural development of the race, offer almost no approach to him, and certainly nothing in the history of the race could have led us to expect him. He is the son of God, in a unique, adequate and final sense, as he expresses God to us with a fulness which indicates that he is a being of the same nature with God. From the time of his Advent, as Dr. Bellows says, men have refreshed their conception of God by looking upon the perfectness of Jesus Christ. They have felt the truth of his own saying, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

His influence upon the world of men has been in harmony with this. He has made men alive to God. They have felt God to be a reality, as they never did before. He has awakened their consciences to a sense of what keeps them from God, and has brought them to repentance for their sins. He has disclosed the forgiving love of God to repentant sinners, and has kept them from despair. He has reconciled them to the Father by his atonement for sin, and by his blood has cleansed their consciences from the defilement of it. And he has enabled them to die to the power of sin through his sacrifice, so that they come to "bear about in the body the dying of the Lord," and to "crucify the corrupt affections and lusts" of their evil natures by his cross.

This redeeming influence reaches to men of every race and every land. The proclamation that such a Saviour has come into the world for our salvation meets a common need of mankind. The need is fore-shadowed by the religions of the world, which are so many ways by which man has tried to climb to God. The Gospel is the message that God has stooped to man. Into the world's moral winter, when mankind seemed, as Hutton says, to be staggering on the brink of atheism and despair, this Life came to new-make the world.—S. S. Times.

FIFTY-TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS IN A BOX.

We call the attention of our readers to the subjoined article which was written by one who has had large and distinguished experience in the affairs of our Church. He knows whereof he speaks. He has tried it. His experience described was based on a plain, practical appreciation of the value of the Christian Advocate—an appreciation which has not suffered any loss during the passing years:

Dear Mr. Editor: I am not entering your Advocate contest with any hope of winning the prize. I shall not theorize, but simply state how it was accomplished. You know that theory is one thing and practice is another, and it is practice that counts. It was more than thirty years ago, in a small country town station which paid the pastor only $500 salary. The editor, the lamented Fitzgerald, made an earnest appeal to the pastors to assist in increasing the circulation of the Christian Advocate. The pastor learned at the post office that not a single copy of the paper was received. He resolved to put it into every family (fifty-two in number) in his charge. On the following Sabbath he preached on the subject of Christian education and training in the home. Monday morning following, with a specimen copy of the paper in his hand, he went to the chairman of his official board, who unhesitatingly subscribed; then he went to the secretary of the board, who also subscribed, and then on down the line, getting every member of the board. Next he turned his attention to the most prominent families, who were possibly more or less influenced by the example of the official board. After having secured a few of the "first families," the rest was easy sailing. Where it was not convenient to pay spot cash, the pastor assumed the obligation to the Publishing House, with the understanding that the subscriber would hand the amount to him any time before Conference. Many of the families were poor laboring people; but when it was made plain that they could have the privilege of reading such a paper as the Advocate for less than four cents a week, and that they could pay for the same from time to time as it might suit their convenience, they, as a rule, subscribed gladly. How about the pay? The pastor took one hundred and four gold and silver dollars to Conference in a cigar box which he turned over to the Agent of the House. One hundred and two dollars was paid by the grateful subscribers, and the pastor paid the other two dollars; only one fell down on the proposition. Did it pay? The pastor got his salary in full, but—but, let's see. The station was small, with not a rich member in it, a poor makeshift of a church, no parsonage, no missionary societies, a good Sunday school of its sort; but the people were religious, and were willing to be led. This inventory about covers the case. The pastor, unaided, held a two weeks' revival meeting, resulting in the addition of forty-two adults to the membership of the Church. Since that time the little station of a small consequence has grown steadily. It now has a membership of more than half a thousand, who worship in an excellent modern church which cost several thousand dollars; the pastor is enjoying life in a splendid parsonage, with no indebtedness on either church or parsonage; there are two thriving Epworth Leagues, two live Sunday schools, with several hundred officers and teachers (which pay several hundred dollars for missions, specials, etc.); pastor and presiding elder have $3,000 salaries. Yes, we think it paid, and will continue to pay as the years pass. Where people are too poor to take the Advocate, the pastor ought to solicit them.

Note: One street car fare, one visit to the "movies," one package of chewing gum, one cigar, one shoe shine, one coca-cola, etc., more than pays for the paper each week. It is a most excellent idea to read occasionally a selection from the Advocate to the prayer meeting, and sometimes it is a big "hit to read it to the Sunday morning congregation. There is not much in showing sample copies. One sample with a live pastor behind it never fails to bring results. This is not theory, but the experience of actual practice.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A COSTLY PAINTING.

"My! but these art-works do run into money," remarked a passenger. "When I was in Chicago I saw a little painting, about a foot square, that was held at five hundred dollars. If I had a million of money, you'd never catch me paying five hundred dollars for a painting like that."

"That's the way you talk," spoke up a bashful traveler, "but I'll guarantee that you have paid four times as much money for a painting not a tenth part as big."

"What, me?"

"Yes, you. The one at the end of your nose."—Unidentified.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This seems to be an age of the "practical" rather than the "spiritual." It is also, in this state, an age of the "legislative" rather than "constitutional." No advanced stage of civilization has ever written a great constitution; civilization has enacted great laws. Constitutions have been written by great statesmen before prosperity has obscured the fundamental principles on which constitutions rest. Constitutional conventions take on the motive and temper of legislatures in the present stage of our civilization. The different sections are seeking changes that will benefit them, or parties are doing the same thing. Sections, parties, personal or corporate interests must be left out of constitutions. Now, the practical ideas and interests that make it impossible for advanced civil society to write a great constitution, makes Christian society "practical" rather than "spiritual." The very day emphasis is laid heavily on spiritual experience and life some one charges "impractical" or "fanatical." The age wants something "practical"—something that will reach the real needs of the people.

Church life, therefore, becomes active along many lines of education, service, charity, uplift, reformation; but everything must be done "decently and in order." These are important, but they are not fundamental. Constitutions never made great states; but constitutions and legislative acts have made great states. Great experiences alone never made great churches; but great experiences and great activities combined make great churches, and nothing else can. The plea is not for the abolition of modern church activities, but for the restoration of great heart experiences. Religion has become too much of intellectual processes. We are leaving the heart and going to the head.

The sermons of modern days are more intellectual than spiritual. The nature of worship itself is more formal than spiritual. The whole church feels this, knows this, deplors it; but the larger influence of custom and style makes it difficult to enter into real worship with spiritual fervor. It is largely true in these days that a local church is measured in its importance to its denomination by its contributions, donations, and the great people who belong to it. This is not a false estimate except as it leaves out the spiritual quality and real virtues of the membership. Money gifts and charitable activities must not be a substitute for honesty, virtue, and spirituality. "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

Human society swings too easily into tangents and is liable to leave full-orbed life. The practical aims and activities are over-emphasized in these days and spiritual experience and heart worship are neglected. The prosperity that has come in with discovery, invention, and co-operation has loosened the bands of social life, fired the lust for self-indulgence, cheapened the views of business honesty, smothered public conscience, and turned the young loose unrestrained. All these great movements contain Christian possibilities of unmeasured good; but they need the fundamental action of a great spiritual heart. You see sometimes a strong man who has all the appearance of great strength; but one day you hear he is dead. What was the cause? "A weak heart." The weakness of the Christian today; yea, the weakness of the church today is a weak "heart."

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The Phippsiel, our first college Annual, has just been received by the manager and will be delivered this week. The beginning of our Annual meets a long felt need and the first issue reflects great credit both upon the College and those who have labored to make it possible.

The concrete side walks in the business section of the town have added much to the appearance of things and make us realize that our town, as well as our College, is growing.

Following out the modern system of municipal lighting, the college has decided to change its system of campus illumination. In the place of old arc lights will appear incandescent bulbs of five hundred volts power and then at frequent intervals between these, small ones of the two hundred caliber will appear. This while taking no more current will give much better satisfaction, as the ones being suspended from the necessary height had their light cut off and restricted to such a small surface by spring time foliage. The smaller lights can be swung lower and beneath the thickest of the trees.—The Elon College Weekly.

Messrs. K. B. and J. Beale Johnson, Cardenas, N. C., stopped on their return from the State S. S. Convention Thursday of last week and spent the night with President Harper, Mr. K. B. meeting with the Executive Board of the College which was in session that night.

Thursday of this week the Pinnix Realty Co., Greensboro, N. C., will sell at public auction a number of lots in the Eastern section of the village.

Mr. E. P. Hall, Secretary of Y. M. C. A. work in the University of North Carolina, will address the Y. M. C. A. of the College next Saturday at 7:30 P. M. on the importance of the Black Mountain Conference.

President Harper delivered the literary address at the closing of the Bethany High School Tuesday.

The eleven twenty-eight train on Saturday, last, brought to our town that which made the hearts of the many friends of Carl Herndon heavy when they saw him removed from the train in a cot and carefully taken to the home of his father, Dr. W. T. Herndon, on Front St. Mr. Herndon was formerly a student here but has recently been engaged in the practice of law at Zebulon, N. C.

His was a busy life. Being lawyer, editor of the local paper and prominent as a church and Sunday school worker, Zebulon loses a most enthusiastic, talented and excellent citizen. The unfortunate one insists that he is improving and will be out soon, though his condition is such at present as to create grave concern. Having entirely lost control of his body below his waist line, his condition is a helpless one, tho' the brilliant mind and keen intellect remains untouched.

This scribe has consented to take the pleasant task of writing the Elon College Notes, which has been a feature of this paper for some years. We cannot in any manner measure up to our predecessor in the general survey of what happens about the College, but having for nearly two years been his servant in office duties, and having at one time spent seven pleasant months in the hospitable home of the Editor, assisting him in the business side of THE SUN, we undertake the duty knowing that these good Doctors will overlook our faults and failures; also the readers whom we chance to know.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

BY PRES. W. A. HARPER.

In this day of experimentation and unrest in every line of living, there are divergent, conflicting, notions of the manner, method, and aim of education. Some, for example, imagine that in order to secure education one has merely to spend so many years at school, college, and university, and when the student has been drinking for all this time at the Pierian fount, and emerges at last the happy possessor of a sheepskin and some sort of an honorable degree, that of course he is educated. In such cases it is granted that he may carry some of the earmarks of an education, and yet it is not always that such are really educated. For with some there is fundamental and self-evident lack. Some in spite of a college degree are inefficient, unsuccessful and incompetent. I have known men whose names are on the alumni lists of some of our great universities, who have found their vocation in driving a trolley car, and you may have known instances to match. Now, of what use were all those years spent at the university? Nothing is to be said against the business of driving a trolley car, but there are trolley car drivers in plenty who are experts at their job, who never saw the inside of a university. Say of a man like that, not that he is educated, but that he had a good chance for an education, and missed his chance.

Again, it is sometimes supposed that a man who has been at a college, or a university, is educated, if he has a fair command of certain subjects that the universities teach;—if he has some critical knowledge of one or more languages; if he be a mine of information on Greek roots or on the prehistoric voyages of the Normans to America, or the relics of the moundbuilders of Ohio. But again I submit that a man might possess a fund of information on such topics and yet be far from having a real education. He might recite you, off-hand, the list of English sovereigns from William the Conqueror to George V. without an error and name the years of their accession and decease; he might recite you the speeches of Demosthenes, or tell you of the debate between Cicero and Caesar over the prospective fate of Catiline, and yet for all that, when it comes to practical affairs be erratic, vain, not educated. No! getting an education is something more than hearing college lectures, or than loading the mind with an undigested mass of facts, theories and opinions, no matter how well grounded these particular facts, theories and opinions may be in themselves.

What then is it, this education, which so many are in pursuit of; which so many conspicuously fail to acquire, and which some are fortunate enough to actually obtain?

To this it may be answered that one mark of the really educated man is a general knowledge of the topics which are discussed by intelligent people; topics historical, scientific, literary or political, and which renders him an associate on equal terms with people of culture and refinement. Be the place what it may, the commercial office, the parlor of the men's room in a Pullman car, whatever the subject of discussion, the educated man is able to bear his part, modestly and yet fearlessly, because he has thought for himself on all these matters, and has something to say that will add to the general fund of interest. It is at such a time that ignorance has to hang its head in humiliation and silence, because it recognizes its own incompetence in a difficult situation. Education at such a moment enjoys its share of fellowship and feels the uplift of courage and conscious power.

Another benefit of real education is the general training of the mental faculties so that they work together easily and without strain, whenever required, and produce prompt and correct judgments of men and measures. This coordination of all mental forces and powers come only through years of culture and practice. It produces ability to concentrate attention, even under the most adverse circumstances. The really educated man is master of his moods, and when difficulties confront him, the more troublesome they are the more he pulls himself together to overcome them. He can think by himself in the solitude of his library and under the inspiration of the great men, whose books line his shelves; or, like Lincoln, he can write a classic, that is to endure through generations, on scraps of paper, in all the rush and bustle of an express train. Control like this of one's mental and spiritual processes, so that whatever the occasion, the man is sure of himself, and that he can meet the demand of the hour, is one of the ends for which boys are put to school, and which, when it is obtained, is well worth all the years of struggle and preparation. If such control of his own thought powers is achieved, it matters little to a man whether he has so far neglected some field in the broad domain of knowledge, for he can traverse it whenever necessary and win all its treasures for his own uses. Whatever his need he can summon all his active, and all his potential energies to the affair in hand and so can look forward confidently to a measurable success.

Taking this view of a real education, making a man the peer of his associates who possesses culture and refinement, and giving him a control and consecration of all his mental powers, we may perceive something of the value to a community like this of a college which purposes to give its young people training of precisely this kind.

There is commercial value in it at the start. Other things being equal, the trained mind has the advantage over the untrained mind in any pursuit, or occupation, in which they happen to compete. The trained man has the prompt initiative; he decides while the other is debating. He has the better method, for he puts his wits to achieve his result in the simplest way, while the other sticks to the rut in which his father traveled before him. And he applies to his task any helpful principle that his reading supplies, while the other follows the rule of thumb, often to his serious detriment.

Or, put this point in another way. We frequently meet men of little or no culture who have attained great success. They have enjoyed few advantages, but with persistence and energy they have made the best of their resources, and won out, while others with better opportunities apparently have accomplished little or nothing. Such men deserve great credit for their valiant struggle against an unfavorable handicap; and yet how much more the same men might have achieved had they enjoyed proper training. How many mistakes they might have been saved! How many misjudgments might have been turned to benefits! How many ventures that brought losses might have been avoided! The whole question resolves itself into the relative value of a tool that is fit, and the other that is almost fit. Imagine a man chopping at a tree with an axe that is right in all respects save the one of having a dull edge. No doubt, if you will give him time he will get the tree down. If you are his friend you will go to him and tell him that he will save time, if he will but stop twenty minutes and grind his axe. There is the difference in a nutshell. The unrestrained mind is the dull axe. Of course, one can work with it, but the task is slow and painful. The trained mind is possibly the same axe, but with a keen cutting edge, and the way it makes the chips fly is a delight.

If there is such a difference between individuals in the matter of training, the principle is the same when you compare one community with another. The community which trains its children wisely soon takes the lead of the other that neglects education, or that gives education of the wrong sort. The citizens of the former surpass those of the latter in initiative, in enterprise, in progress, and in wealth. Every schoolboy knows that Athens outranked every city of the ancient world in all that counts for excelling greatness, but can he tell you why that town of but moderate population, and with outlying territory of less acreage than some of your western counties, still holds that pre-eminence in the eyes of the nations? The answer is simple enough. Athens led the world because she had more men of culture to the square rod than any city of her own age, or of any subsequent age in the world's history. The education of her citizens gave Athens power, wealth, ascendancy.

How shall we account for the influence of New England in the development of our own nationality? New York State, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, California, Alabama,—all have cities and towns which trace much of their prosperity to the thrift and enterprise of colonists who came from New England, and brought with them the training for which New England has been famous from the day of the Pilgrim Fathers. The idea in New England was to educate the children, all the children, and the result of that idea has blossomed out in progress in New England herself, and in every community to which she has given her sons and daughters.

But so far we have been noting the effect of education on a community in its commercial and social applications. One of the latter, one of the social applications, is deserving more attention in detail.

One purpose of education is to constitute leaders for the people, leaders who are capable of inspiring confidence, and whose calmness and accuracy of judgment will render them trustworthy when they are given positions of responsibility.

In a social democracy like ours it makes vast difference to the public weal who hold the reins of influence and power. We have the right to demand the faithfulest and the best; but if trained men are wanting, then the others, less able and often less worthy, will certainly forge to the front. In case any community fails to exercise its privileges of training its young people, of necessity it will fall behind the other community which educates and keeps on educating.

But it is understood that this real training of the faculties of the man, this real education, includes of necessity the training of the religious faculties. Religion is the true philosophy of life,—the basis of all correct conduct,—the norm from which all moral and social obligation is to be measured. Ethical systems have been invented, which seek to establish moral right upon the pleasure which it confers upon the individual, or upon the advantage to society in the mass to be derived when its terms are generally accepted. But all such systems break down in the serious struggles and temptations which men must face. They lack a cogent imperative, that imperative which is experienced only in God. Ethics without religion is a crutch of straw which collapses instantly when subjected to severe moral strain. If today any of you are questioned why there are so many public men who have bartered their soul's honor for a mess of political pottage;—why so many homes are destroyed by forgetfulness of the marriage vow;—why so many custodians of trust funds have betrayed their trust to the impoverishment of the widow and orphan;—why so many men and women, old and young, rich and poor end their lives with the poison or pistol of suicide, find the answer in the fact that they have forgotten God, or that they knew Him only as one might say by name. He has been no substantial factor in their scheme of being. They have gone their own gait, whether of pleasure, or excess, or of open sin, precisely as if God had withdrawn from the universe, or as if there were never anywhere any God at all. The remedy for all current looseness and extravagance of conduct is in realizing God; in comprehending something of His majesty and His intimate connection with all things that exist; in knowing that all our acts and even our most secret thoughts come under His scrutiny, and perceiving with all this that only as our thoughts and acts are shaped into conformity with His holy laws, can our individual peace, or the prosperity of the community be assured.

NOTICE!

Rev. L. I. Cox, Elon College, N. C., desires to rent, borrow, or beg the use of a tent that will accommodate a congregation of three hundred people. He wishes the tent for use June 26th to July 3rd. It is to be used for preaching services. If any SUN reader can put him in touch with one who could supply his want the same would be greatly appreciated by Bro. Cox.

—Rev. J. Lee Johnson sends us a list of eight new subscribers to THE SUN. We are grateful. No wonder the Lord prospers Bro. Johnson in his work. Every call and enterprise of his church receives prayerful consideration and zealous endeavor at his hands. You may always count on such pastors being in demand and carrying their work forward.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Suggestions on Subject for May 4th for Superintendent.

Scripture.—Gen. 40:9-23.

Time.—About B. C. 1720 (Ussher).

Place.—A prison in some city, probably the capital, now unknown, in Egypt.

Persons.—Joseph, captain of the guard, Pharaoh, butler, baker.

Golden Text.—The breath of the Almighty giveth them understanding.—Jacob 32:8.

Leading Thought.—True wisdom is from God.

Our last lesson concluded as Joseph was being carried to Egypt by Midianites, merchantmen.

Egypt, the country lying at the northeastern angle of Africa, had been a recognized center of empire from early days. Explorations now going on there are making more and more evident its great antiquity, and the high stage of civilization which it had attained at an early date. It was not its rich and rare verdure—the gift of the Nile—which would so amaze and bewilder the young Syrian shepherd, as the evidences of wealth and luxury in its cities, and the dire contrast afforded by the nobles clad in fine and gorgeous robes, living in ease and luxury, and the down-trodden slaves who waited upon them. Several of its fine cities, among them Zoan, Memphis and Heliopolis, are rivals for the honor of having been the city to which Joseph was taken and sold.

Some time after Joseph had been imprisoned and had found favor with the keeper (Chap. 39) the chief butler and the chief baker of the king were thrown into prison. These were important officials. The butler—cupbearer—had charge of all the king's wines, and from his hands the king received everything that he drank. The baker had charge of the preparation and serving of all the food eaten by the king.

It is supposed that the officials of Pharaoh (the Egyptian title of their king) were in prison about a year; the text says "a season." During much of this time they were in close relations with Joseph who was "charged with" and "served them." He proved himself so intelligent and agreeable that they soon learned to confide in him as a trustworthy friend.

Joseph had grace and grit and good sense that enabled him to make the best of circumstances. The most depressing conditions and most unjust treatment did not bemean or degrade his character. The rather he so resisted temptation, was able, so to meet and overcome difficulties and hardships that he came through all these things more thoroughly developed and established in righteousness.

As Pharaoh's birthday, which was a time of national festivity and was celebrated in part by acts of royal clemency, was approaching, this butler and baker were anxiously hoping and fearing regarding their fate, and one night each had disquieting dreams.

OBJECT LESSONS.

A sweet flower. Why do the bees and butterflies gather around a honeysuckle, a morning glory, or any sweet flower? Because it has honey and perfume. Bright colors, perfumes and sweetness attract not only the bees and butterflies, but they are attractive to us also. Kindliness, interest in others, like honey at the heart of the flower, always attract. Joseph showed these qualities wherever he was.

A watch. When I take my watch from my pocket and open the case, I find it running and faithfully marking the time. When I close the case and put it out of sight again in my pocket, does it stop? It keeps time just as faithfully concealed as when I am looking at it. A watch must be dependable at all times in order to be of any use. A true character must be faithful in all circumstances. Fidelity makes one true to right not only when others are looking on, but also when it seems as though no one is looking. To-day's story of Joseph shows him faithful in all circumstances.

QUESTION REVIEW.

1. Who is the hero of the Bible story we are now studying.
2. Are there any namesakes of his in this school? Please stand.
Joseph has long been a favorite name, and Joseph's story is a favorite among all the stories of literature.
3. Have you, his namesakes, any cause to be ashamed of the Bible Joseph?
4. Where did you see him in to-day's lesson? What! Joseph in prison and you not ashamed of him?
5. Why not?
6. Was that prison made better or worse by Joseph's being there?
7. What two prisoners did Joseph help in a special way?
8. Whence did Joseph get wisdom to interpret dreams?

LESSON ANNOUNCEMENT.

To-day's lesson was about some strange dreams Joseph was able to explain while he was in prison. Next Sunday's lesson tells of his explaining the meaning of the king's strange dream and the promotion which resulted from his success.

I wish the boys would try to recall this week some incidents of men who have risen from a lowly position in boyhood to high honor and power, and whether they were puffed up or humble in their high position. I would like to have the girls try to decide whether it is harder to be true to God and to the highest principles when one is rich and honored or when one is poor and not surrounded with admirers. Next Sunday we shall see what effect prosperity had upon Joseph.

NOTES ON C. E. TOPIC, MAY 11

Subject: "Love not the World." 1 John 2:15-25.

Place all the society on one side of the room. If this means crowding, the meeting will be none the worse for it. The leader will sit on that side, but with a chair facing the other side also. As the leader takes part, he will move over to the other side. He will explain that the first side is to be called "worldliness," and the second "other-worldliness," or unworldliness." As each takes part, he is to move to the other side, in token that he earnestly desires his life to be counted, not for worldliness, but for unworldliness; not for the prince of this world, but for Christ. Explain that if there is a season of sentence prayers at the close, those that have taken part will move over in a body. Also suggest that for convenience those seated next to the empty side will take part first, and move over promptly. You will find that this plan will make a very impressive and suggestive meeting, working out with great force toward the end. Try it.

OTHER SUGGESTIVE HELPS.

There are various ways by which one may become polished, according to the world's standard. The Christian, however, can only become polished by rubbing up against stern duty.

Two persons once came to a clergyman to have him settle a dispute, each believing that the other was in the wrong. He heard both parties tell their story and then answered quietly, "Let the innocent one forgive the guilty one."

Transformed Men—Fishermen were changed into apostles, the foundation stones of the New Jerusalem, the leaders of the kingdom that was to transform the world. The charcoal was changed into diamonds.—Peloubet.

Such was Jesus—A little girl directed a stranger, who wished to see her father, to a certain place to find him. "But how shall I know him?" asked the inquirer. "Oh, look for a tall man who is helping somebody!" the child answered carelessly. "He's sure to be doing that—you'll know him that way." He was a man with the true Christ spirit—that of helpfulness.

Delaying the Kind—Pyrihus was greatly troubled at the news of the death of his friend Aeropus because he had put off repaying him the many acts of kindness he had received. His friend died and then it was impossible to requite his kindness. Dues of money might be paid to his estate and distributed among the heirs, but deeds of gratitude can never be paid after one is dead.

"The office of the artist is to express the beautiful." The art of life is no exception to this rule; and any girl can practice it. It requires no musical talent to make life harmonious, day by day. It needs no talent for sculpture to shape a lovely and courteous behavior. Yet such artistic expression is far too rare, and calls for more students than ever enroll themselves.—J. R. Miller.

THE LOS ANGELES CONVENTION.

The provisional program for the Twenty-sixth International Christian Endeavor Convention to be held in Los Angeles, Cal., July 9-14, 1913, is published in the last issue of the Christian Endeavor World, and occupies more than two pages. It is the most comprehensive program that has ever been arranged for the convention.

Provision has been made for a large choir of trained voices, and the music will be a great feature. The best known men in church and government will be speakers, and conduct conferences. Scarcely in the church's history has there ever been so many prominent men brought together in a single program. Every denomination is represented among the speakers.

Los Angeles, the convention city, is known far and wide as one of the prettiest cities in all the world. Nature has been lavish in the gifts of climate and natural advantages.

Special rates have been offered by the railroads. The transportation manager for North Carolina is Mr. J. P. Russel, Lumberton, N. C. Any one anticipating attending the convention should write him.

Dr. C. L. Goodell closed recently the ninth year of his pastorate of Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, New York. During that time 3,039 members were received and there was paid for all purposes $552,471. Of the total contributions, more than $300,000 was for missions and other benevolences.—Ex.

Roman Catholics in the United States built last year 373 churches at an estimated cost of $7,500,000.

FRANKLIN'S GREAT REVIVAL.

Franklin has been visited by the greatest revival of religion ever known to the town. Services beginning April the 7th and closing April the 17th, were held in the Armory Hall, which had been filled up with seats for the occasion. Evangelist G. H. Klein, from Nashville, Tenn., did the preaching and P. M. Boyd, from Georgia, led the singing. The meeting was a union one, with all the churches co-operating, and with the Methodist directing. Mr. Klein came with the simple Gospel message, the Spirit drove it to the heart and the church was stirred to action. The church at work and the spirit, to convict, led men to seek salvation. Strong men testified of hours and nights spent in sleeplessness and unrest and of joy found in the Savior, sometimes in the small hours of the night. One noticeable thing in regard to many of the new-born souls was the earnestness with which they sought to bring their companions and those whom they had led astray to a saving knowledge of Christ. They sought them in their plans of business and on the streets and rejoiced when peace came to the soul.

A striking feature of the revival was the Children's Service and their marching through the streets of the town, singing "Franklin, all for Christ." A large number of children gave their hearts to the Savior and did personal work for Him.

There was but one topic of conversation. One could approach any group of people and join in the conversation. Again and again, it was repeated: "I never saw it like this before." "Did you ever see anything like this?" Some one remarked that it was as near Pentecost as Franklin could afford.

It occurred more than once that no sermon was preached. In the beginning of the service, the question was sometimes asked if there were any who had found peace since the last meeting and who wanted to testify to the same. And what with testimony and what with praise, and what with prayer and personal work, the hours were passed away. The last day of the meeting a twilight service was held and those who had found Christ and those who had been reclaimed—more than two hundred in number—lined up on each side of the street in front of the Armory and the great congregation of a thousand people passed through their midst with songs of rejoicing and praise. It was a glorious sight. The evangelist and his singer left in the midst of this service, but until a late hour the people lingered and new-born souls rejoiced. The atmosphere was holy, the influence was divine.

The greatest day, no doubt, in all our churches was on Sunday, after the meetings closed on Thursday. Certainly, it was a glorious one with our own. When the invitation was given for those to come forward who wanted to unite with the church, thirty-five indicated the same by coming forward or by letter. It seemed that the doors of Heaven had opened and poured us out a blessing. Boys and girls, young men and maidens, and one with his steps turned down the shady side of life perhaps, were in line.

In the Sunday school, in the Christian Endeavor, in the prayer-meeting, the influence of these days spent together in heavenly places, is felt—a new impetus has been given; new aspirations, aroused; new life infused. Franklin has been visited by the Lord, His Spirit has stirred the people, and a great forward stride has been taken. We give God the praise and rejoice because of His goodness.

IMPORTANT NOTICE!

In order that official information may be in hand as a working basis for our coming Mission Rally and Board Meeting I am asking that each Young People's Society of whatever name: "Glad Gleaners," "Willing Workers," or whatever else it might be, please be reported to me directly, and at once, also any Woman's Missionary Society having a Cradle Roll. I do not feel that this is asking too much as it will require only a postal card and a few moments of time. Please do not forget this, even if it has already been reported in some other way it will help very much if you comply with this request now.

After May 5 send your reports not to Boone but to McCullers, N. C.

As your S. C. C. Superintendent I am looking to you for this small service.

Yours trustfully,

BETTIE STEPHENSON.

THE FOREIGN MISSION OFFERING.

I hope all pastors in the Eastern N. C. Christian Conference read the notice from Dr. Wicker, the secretary of the Conference, that appeared in THE SUN a few weeks ago concerning the request of the last annual conference in regard to the special mission day. While the offering is optional with the church, I trust that no pastor in any church of the Conference will allow this to be neglected.

Rev. J. Lee Johnson, one of the youngest ministers of the Conference, is the first to take the offerings at all his churches.

Dr. Morrill, our Foreign Mission Secretary, just before leaving for Japan prepared a most earnest appeal to the ministers. This appeal in the way of a personal letter has been delayed for weeks on account of the Dayton flood. The request of Conference, together with this personal letter from Dr. Morrill, I am sure will not be ignored by our pastors, even though the offering was not taken at the time requested. It will be the 15th of May before I can take the last offering in my field.

We all realize the great need our board is in of more money. I believe the call for a special mission offering is wise and business-like.

C. E. NEWMAN, President,

Eastern N. C. Christian Con.

HOW TO INTRODUCE A MISSIONARY THOUGHT IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Missionary books should be kept before the Sunday school. Secure them for the library. Let the Superintendent announce them. There are books for boys and books for girls. They may be had at any missionary headquarters. Take "In the Days of June," announce the book by asking the question, "What do you think of a man who tore his Bible all to pieces? Mr. B. will open the school next Sunday morning by telling you the story." The story may be told in a most interesting way, but leave it unfinished with interest excited and refer them to the book for the conclusion.

This concludes my missionary thought for the present. If you have followed me closely, you have seen that it does not take a specialist to do this special work. Any one with any talent for telling a story who will give as much as ten minutes time per week to it can do it and the Sunday school will have something new and fresh every Sunday.

Brother Superintendent, try to arrange to give five minutes every Sunday morning to a bit of missionary information.

H. E. ROUNTREE.

CONTINUING TO BE SAVED.

We never, in this life, get through being saved. For, after we have received our finished salvation in Christ, at conversion, we then enter upon its unending process. It is like the grafting of a new branch into a vine. From the time of the first real union of that branch and the vine, the life of the vine belongs to the branch. The vine-life is unmistakably the branch's life; it will not be more truly so after twenty years of continued union. But from the moment of union the work of the vine-life in the branch commences to increase and develop and produce new results. So in the case of our life in Christ. From our first receiving of him we have his eternal life: and that means that at once we are saved. We shall not be more truly saved after an earthly life-time or a millennium. But our salvation may, and ought to, grow ever more complete. Its results and evidences ought to be blessedly richer with every passing day and year. Thus it is that we continue to get saved. Thus also may "work out (or out-work) our own salvation"—not because our salvation is uncertain or insecure, but because it is a process as well as a finality. Yet we do not have to work it out for ourselves, for it is God who worketh in us both to will and to work. God in Christ in us does this for us. So it is because of, or by, the life that Christ is living that I am hourly, momentarily saved. He is my complete and final salvation; and he keeps saving me. "For if, while we were enemies, we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled shall we be saved by (the Greek is 'in') his life."—S. S. Times.

WHEN WE CRITICISE OTHERS.

It is a dangerous thing to express a strong dislike of some failing of a fellow-man. For in so doing we may be calling special attention to that same failing in ourselves. It is a strange fact that the things we most dislike in others are pretty sure to be our own pet faults. The hot-tempered man speaks pityingly or contemptuously of his neighbor's lack of self-control. The gossiping man or woman has only unmeasured condemnation of the scandal-loving tongue of an acquaintance. If we find ourselves particularly intolerant of these very faults in others, it is probably because they are our own failings. Permitted sin has a fatal power to blind one to the fact of its existence. But we can let God turn to good account even our sinful tendency to criticise others, if, when we find ourselves tempted to do this, we recognize it as an index to an unsuspected weakness of our own, and claim God's deliverance from that weakness. The one who thinks least about the faults of others is he who best knows Christ's victory himself.—S. S. Times.

NOTES AND PERSONALS.

his people had already learned to greatly esteem and admire him.

—For a paper that is thoroughly clean from every moral point of view, commend to us The Concord Times, edited and published by J. B. Sherrill, Concord, N. C., and issued every Monday and Thursday. We are not surprised that Bro. Sherrill claims for The Times, a claim which we are sure is just and true, "the largest circulation of any newspaper in the eight congressional district." His keen eye culls an abundance of the best that other papers print, his correspondents give the latest from the wide constituency served, and now that Col. Wade Harris, of the Charlotte Observer, has brought him to an appreciation of the fact that he can write as well as he can clip, Sherrill is giving us an editorial page of the very highest rank and merit. There are certainly no poisoned arrows in Sherrill's quiver, and never an ungenerous line or an unwholesome sentiment appears upon his printed page. The Concord Times sets the pace for fair, just and clean journalism in North Carolina. And we don't charge the worthy Secretary of the North Carolina Press Association one penny for this bouquet of spring roses either.

INCIDENTS OF A WEEK.

—On Wednesday, the 24th inst., there was a terrible mine explosion at Finleyville, Pa., and about 100 miners were killed.

—Michigan moves forward according to returns from her election of April 7. On that date the people voted to adopt the initiative, referendum and recall of State officers, with the exception of judges, and rejected a woman suffrage amendment.

—At the end of one year, April 15, after the sinking of the Titanic, there have been filed for death and loss computation, claims amounting to about $14,000,000. But no sum of money can compensate the awful loss of life and horrors of that dreadful event.

—Our Constitution now has the seventeenth amendment. On April 8 Connecticut ratified the proposed amendment providing for the district election of United States Senators by the people, thus making a sufficient number of States ratifying the act to make it valid.

—New York still grows with strange and wonderful rapidity. According to figures recently compiled by the city Health Department there are now 5,332,000 people living in greater New York. We fail to understand why some of them don't move, especially when there is so much room elsewhere.

—It is very fitting that the voters of Spencer, Mass., should elect as water commissioner of the town, for a term of three years, Dexter Bulard, now 97 years old. Unless he had been a patron of good, clear, clean water, and nothing stronger, he would never have lived, in all likelihood, to this ripe old age.

—At any rate some capitalists believe in the efficacy of Dr. Friedmann's tuberculosis vaccine cure, if all reports be true. The German physician has sold his rights in America for $125,000 in cash and $1,800,000 in stock in thirty-six Friedmann institutes to be established in as many states with a capitalization of $5,400,000.

—It could be devoutly hoped that every judge in this State would join Judge Cook in his determined warfare against the carrying of concealed weapons. Every one convicted before Judge Cook's court, in Surry county recently, for this dangerous and cowardly nuisance, carrying pistols, was sentenced to the roads, and not allowed to pay out with a small fine.

—We felicitate The Columbia State, South Carolina's most influential daily, upon its decision to carry no more whiskey advertisements, after the expiration of a few existing contracts. Every self-respecting newspaper, especially those printed and circulated in prohibition territory ought to do likewise, in consideration of the expressed will of the people at the ballot box, if for no other reason.

—Out in an Illinois town certain illicit vendors of strong drink blew up the Presbyterian preacher's home because his activity, in behalf of law and order, enraged them. Such methods of violence on the part of rum dealers do but help the cause they try to harm. But the strange thing is that church members, professed followers of Jesus the Christ, will patronize these people and places of death and debauchery.

—Incorporated in the new triff bill which is now about to be enacted by our national Congress, and which in all probability will soon become law, is a graduated income tax. The measure means that all annual incomes of more than $4,000 will be subject to taxation is $100.00. From $4,000 to $20,000 the tax is one per cent; between $20,000 and $50,000 the tax is 2 per cent; above $50,000 the rate is 4 per cent. It is estimated that Rockefeller's income under the present law will pay a revenue of $2,000,000 a year.

—President Wilson has sent Secretary of State W. J. Bryan to Sacramento, California, to try to prevail upon the governor and legislature of that State not to pass an anti-alien land law which will operate particularly against Japanese in California, over which proposed law Japan has become much aroused. Japan is also to send a representative to California if our government will permit. The incident has aroused much interest and the outcome is not altogether certain. Californians have raised the slogan "This is a white man's country," and many are pleading for a law that will prevent all unnaturalized citizens from holding land in that State.

—The destruction by fire of the beautiful and magnificent News and Observer plant at Raleigh last Thursday P. M., April 24, is justly regarded as a statewide and public calamity. The News and Observer has a strong hold on the people of this State and there is universal sympathy for Editor Josephus Daniels, now Secretary of the Navy in President Wilson's cabinet, at his great financial loss, running into several thousand above all insurance. The plant is to be rebuilt at an early date. The paper did not miss an issue, the plant of the Raleigh Times being put at the disposal of its unfortunate neighbor, from which plant the News and Observer is now going out to its readers daily.

—We thought our cherished and long beloved friend, Capt. J. A. Turrentine, Burlington, would come in with his golden gleam of sunshine; and here it is, "Dear Brother: I want to join the throng in congratulating you on the improved condition of our CHRISTIAN SUN. Now, I speak from experience and observation. My father was one of the original subscribers for the first issue of the paper by Elder Daniel W. Kerr, and as long as he lived was a subscriber and I have been since I was a man, so it has been in our family all along. It ought to be better and it is better. The editor ought to be better and he is better. The church is improving along all lines. Let her move. I am with you." Thanks, Captain.

Children's Missionary Stories

STORIES are—yes, must be—used by every wide-awake worker among, or leader or teacher of, children.

MISSIONARY STORIES seem to have been the one field well-nigh overlooked until Mrs. Alice Moreton Burnett, Corresponding Secretary for the Woman's Board for Home Missions of the Christian Church, made a compilation of thirty interesting, instructive stories pertaining especially and directly to missions that are sure to be appreciated by workers, teachers, leaders, pastors, fathers, mothers—and the children.

Some of the Important Events of both Home Missions and Foreign Missions are also included, together with Suggestions For Junior Leaders.

They make a book 5 x 7 inches in size, 128 pages, red cloth binding—a handsome, attractive volume. Price 35c per copy postpaid.

UNHAPPY HOMES.

It is a mistake to suppose that wealth and a costly residence are the main requisites of a happy home. Many who are poor, and live in a cheap house, envy the rich ones who live in a splendid mansion; and yet there may be a great deal more of pure happiness and solid comfort in that humble habitation than there is in the other residence. Indeed, in many a rich man's house there is very much of bitter and blighting unhappiness. Here is an illustrative story: "John Stewart, of Browntown, New Jersey, is a professed atheist. Mrs. Stewart knew that he was leaning that way when she married him, but trusted to her influence to bring him over to the belief of the Christian religion. In this she was disappointed; and, after one of her vain efforts to convert him to her belief, she petulantly told him that she would never speak another word to him till he admitted the existence of a God. This was twenty-three years ago. At the same time, Mr. Stewart told his wife that never would he speak a word to her till she admitted that there was no God. On Saturday last, the death of Mrs. Stewart terminated this singular covenant, but did not inspire a change in the heart of Mr. Stewart, and since this time it has been the topic of conversation in the village of Browntown." It is stated that Mr. Stewart has considerable property, and a nice residence. He and his wife had material means enough to make a very comfortable home, yet their lives were very unhappy in that home. How could they live so long together without speaking to one another? It seems difficult to believe that story, but the writer of it says that he took pains to ascertain the facts in the case, and found them to be as he has given them. He also states that the husband and wife were of good standing in society, and the wife was "a most devout Methodist." It was well for her to earnestly desire to have her husband converted from infidelity. It was her duty to ask him to become a Christian; but she went too far when she vowed that she would never again speak to him unless he did acknowledge God. That only intensified their unhappiness.

KEEP YOUR MONEY.

A new fake consumption cure is born every week, and, as some one said, a sucker is born every minute. Supply and demand, in these two instances, seem to run a riot. The supply of unfortunate consumptives and the demand for these false "cures" are rivals. The race is nip and tuck.

But how are we going to head off such a race? Pure food and drug laws get an occasional fakir, but it is only an occasional one, scarcely a drop in the bucket. With all "consumption cures" founded on fraud and flourishing on fear, the ever-hopeful but susceptible consumptive is robbed of his money and robbed of his chance of life. But what care the "consumption-cure" companies? It is good business.

The only prevention for such wholesale robbery is education. Yes, just that. Education will banish the old superstition that for every ailment there is a "specific." Education will teach those having consumption that their only assurance of a cure lies in their strict obedience to the laws of hygiene, with unlimited fresh air, rest, and food. When this is done why there will be no more demand for patent medicine consumption cures, and the dastardly business will stop. But we must educate, and the only way to do this effectively is through health departments, town, country and State.—State Board of Health.

WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?

A twentieth century version of the Parable of the Good Samaritan comes from Kansas. The Christian Herald reports that farmer Peter Schofield tacked the following notice on the community school house after a stock plague had raged throughout the neighborhood, leaving many farmers without horses and too poor to buy others: "The Lord has spared my stock. My horses have gone through the epidemic without loss, and I have twenty head to loan to my less fortunate neighbors, without charge, for plowing. Those who need are welcome to them." Is not this the spirit of the true neighbor?—Biblical Recorder.

INDIVIDUAL DRINKING CUPS.

Arrangements have been made by the Southern Railway to furnish sanitary individual drinking cups to passengers on all trains and a large supply of cups of the collapsible paper type has been ordered. As soon as the cups have been received each conductor will be furnished with a supply and any passenger desiring a cup will receive one free of charge on application to the conductor. Notices to this effect will be posted in each coach.

All common drinking cups have been removed from trains in compliance with United States Government regulations and the statutes and ordinances of many states and municipalities.

Hereafter passengers on Southern Railway trains will be put to no inconvenience or expense in regard to drinking water and at the same time will not be subject to any possible infection through the use of the common drinking cup.

—The Burlington News graciously passes this bunch of violets up to us, and the fragrance is delightful:

We congratulate our friend, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN upon the splendid appearance of his paper under its new form. Recently the Christian Sun Company has been incorporated and put in new and modern machinery, and the paper enlarged and made one of the neatest and handsomest in the state. Dr. Atkinson has always had good strong editorials and good reading matter, but on account of the small size of the paper it has not been appreciated as it will be now that its mechanical appearance is in keeping with that of the matter it contains. We wish THE SUN abundant success and hope that it will continue to grow and prosper. Its editor is one of our dearest friends and he is a great and good man.

The good sisters are sympathising with us in our need of a range and are proving it, as you will see in the report. This is a good showing for the first week. Thank you, Prof. Lawrence, for writing of this in last week's SUN. This would be a fine work for the Ladies' Aid societies; they know the worth of a good cooking outfit.

The Sunday school at Waverly, Va., has decided to make a monthly offering and to clothe a boy. Thank you! That is a good work; can't some more of the schools undertake something of the kind?

SHINE IN THE HOME.

Be a light to all who are in the house. Shine where you live. Go on the unpleasant errand without bemoaning the necessity. Respond to the call for help cheerfully. Commend often. Censure only when you must. The lights of kindness, gentleness, patience, and consideration should never go out; we should keep the light of a holy example always burning.

A boat went out to sea, carrying a father and daughter. A terrible storm came up as they were hurrying back. The coast was dangerous. The mother lighted a lamp and started up the worn stairway to the attic window. "It won't do any good, mother," the son called after her. But the mother went up, put the light in the window, knelt beside it and prayed. Out in the storm the daughter saw a glimmer of gold on the water's edge. "Steer for that," the father said. Slowly but steadily they came towards the light and at last were anchored in the little sheltered harbor by the cottage. "Thank God!" cried the mother, as she heard their glad voices and came down the stairway, with the lamp in her hand. "How did you get here?" she asked.

"We steered by mother's light," answered the daughter, "although we did not know what it was, out there."

"Ah!" thought the boy—a wayward boy—"it is time I was steering by my mother's light;" and ere he slept he surrendered himself to God and asked him to guide him over life's rough sea. Months went by and disease smote him. "He cannot live long," was the verdict of the doctor; and one stormy night he lay dying. "Do not be afraid for me," he said, as they wept; "I shall make the harbor, for I am steering by my mother's light."—Selected

THE STORY OF GREEDY TOMMIE TOBEY.

Nobody in the Tobey family liked to have company. It wasn't because they were mean and stingy, either, for all the Tobeyes, big and little, just loved to make other people happy and comfortable. No, it was because Tommie Tobey had such dreadful table manners. All his brothers and sisters blushed rosy red for shame when any one came to dinner.

One day a carriage, drawn by two splendid black horses, stopped before the Tobey cottage, and Great Aunt Sarah Stickney Stevens hobbled out. Mother had to hustle around and get dinner. She was so busy that she quite forgot to whisper to Tommie about being greedy. Poor Tom lost all his manners when he saw the good things on the table. He ate his chicken with his fingers, he gobbled up his ice cream, and, worst of all, he leaned over and snatched a piece of chocolate cake just as Aunt Sarah was going to take it.

Aunt Sarah Stickney Stevens was very much shocked indeed, and smiled a most dreadful smile. When she was leaving, she said: "To-morrow, young man, I'll send you a new brother, and you must let him eat with you every day."

"Thank you, Aunt Sarah," said Tom politely. Aunt Sarah looked at his greasy hands and at his face, which was dotted with currant jelly and chocolate ice cream, and smiled again. Then she went away, and all the Tobeyes tried to tell Tom how ashamed they were of him.

"Huh!" said Tom, puffing himself out like a fat little pigeon. "Aunt Sarah is all right. She isn't going to send the rest of you anything, is she?"

All the little Tobeyes looked at each other and wondered why Aunt Sarah Stickney Stevens had liked such a greedy boy. The next day when the Tobeyes were at dinner, Tom's present came. He jumped up and down with delight. He broke the string, threw it on the floor, tore open the brown wrappings, and threw them on the floor; and when he saw Aunt Sarah's present inside he grew very red, and was going to throw that on the floor, too, but father reached over and took it. "What did the mean old thing want to send me that for?" snarled Tom. All the Tobeyes crowded around to look at it. It was a pig, a big plaster pig. In its mouth was a card, which said: "I've come to eat with you, Brother Tom. Put me right beside your plate."

"Aunt Sarah is a wise woman," said father, and leaned over and put the pig down beside Tom's plate. "There, my son, we'll let him stay there until you learn to eat like a gentleman."

Tom cried and screamed and screamed and cried and didn't eat any dinner, but the pig stayed there. For three long weeks he stood guard over Tom's plate—breakfasts, dinners, and suppers. Every time Tom was greedy, father pushed the pig nearer Tom's plate. How Tom hated that pig! He hated him worse every day. Who could take any comfort eating while a pig was watching him? He began to eat slowly and take small mouthfuls and let the other children be served first. One morning when the Tobeyes came to breakfast the pig was gone. He never came back.

Aunt Sarah Stickney Stevens says Tom has the best table manners of all the Tobeyes, and gave him a silver dollar the last time she came to dinner.—Mary Davis, in Christian Register

TERRIBLE PICTURE OF SUFFERING.

Clinton, Ky.—Mrs. M. C. McElroy, in a letter from Clinton, writes: "For six years, I was a sufferer from female troubles. I could not eat, and could not stand on my feet, without suffering great pain. Three of the best doctors in the state said I was in a critical condition, and going down-hill. I lost hope. After using Cardui a week, I began to improve. Now I feel better than in six years." Fifty years of success, in actual practice, is positive proof that Cardui can always be relied on, for relieving female weakness and disease. Why not test it for yourself? Sold by all druggists.

VICE-PRESIDENT MARSHALL'S BIBLE.

That is a pleasing and wholesome story which The Christian Herald tells about Vice-President Marshall's Bible. Here it is:

The Vice-President came in and chatted most pleasantly. An Oxford Bible was lying on the table and under the rubber band encircling it was lettered the Vice-President's name. This was spoken of to him and he answered:

"Oh yes, I'm very proud of that Bible. My Sunday School class of young men gave it to me just before we left Indianapolis."

Mrs. Marshall had gone into the other room, and she called out laughingly, "But he'll not tell you how opportunely the Bible came to him, I know."

"Yes, I will," called back the Vice-President with an answering laugh. "And I'll leave it to you," turning to the representative, "if the joke is not on Mrs. Marshall rather than on me. When we were packing rather hastily for our Western trip some weeks ago," he resumed, "we packed several boxes for storage, and after they were nailed up and gone I found that Mrs. Marshall had packed away my Bible with the other books."

"And do you know," said Mrs. Marshall, returning to the sitting room, "that he thinks he can't read this Bible, although it's a lot nicer than his old one."

"That's true," said the Vice-President; "it is a fine Bible and I'm very proud of it, but I had used my old Bible for more than twenty years, and some way I always seemed able to turn to whatever I wanted in it. It will take time to become as accustomed to this one."

Well, young man, it is mighty refreshing to see our leaders in the present administration—the President, Vice-President and most prominent cabinet members, not only believers, but active workers in the Book of God and the church of God.—The Golden Age.

THE WHINING BROTHER.

The man who perhaps above all others is most dreaded by the pastor is the one who is continually telling him of the lack of spirituality in the church. He bemoans the fact that the church is doing nothing, that the members are indifferent, that there is coldness in every department of the church. He tells about the condition of things in the church of which he was a member years ago, and the wonderful spiritual life that prevailed among all the members. What a prayer meeting they used to have, what a wonderful Sunday School and how he wishes for things to be as they were in the olden time. He never intimates that he is responsible for any lack of spirituality there may be in the church. On the contrary he assumes an air and a tone of voice which indicates that he is saying to himself, "Oh, if all the other members of the church were like me!" Brother, if you feel that the church is lacking in spiritual life, we would suggest that you get nearer to God yourself by prayer and personal work, and then you may induce others to become more active. You are a part of the church and therefore in part responsible for the condition of things in your church. Don't go whining to the pastor if you thought he was altogether responsible for the existing order of things. Speak encouragingly to him and offer to help him in every way you can, and you will feel better and the pastor will feel better and both of you will be prepared by such a course for better work.—Baptist Chronicle.

NONE THAT GREW THERE.

During a lesson on the animal kingdom the teacher asked if any one could give an example of an animal on the order of Edentata—that is, one which is without teeth.

"I can," replied Tommy, his face beaming with eagerness.

"Well, what is it?" asked the teacher.

"Grandpa!" shouted Tommy.

SOUL LEANNESS.

Soul leanness is progressive. Its progress may be slow, but it is definite and sure, unless arrested by gracious means. Spiritual declension has its beginning in some act of disobedience to God's law and in an unwillingness to assume definite obligations and a reluctance to perform specified duties. Of one of the Asiatic churches was said: "Thou hast left thy first love." That declension assumes that there was spiritual declension in that church, and that spiritual declension embodies disobedience to the laws of Christ's kingdom. One of the laws of Christ's kingdom is: "Hold that thou hast, that no man take thy crown." In this life it is the crown of faithfulness, in the life to come it is the crown of glory. Another law of the kingdom is: "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." That passage contemplates progress by growth—enlargement of vision, of power, and of service. Disobedience to any of these laws brings spiritual stagnation.

And still other laws of the kingdom are: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on earth; for ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." These passages refer to a condition of the heart and to the action in daily life. To be dead, or crucified with Christ, refers to a deep and broad experience of grace. Death to a life of sin, and a complete resurrection to a life of triumphant faith, is certainly implied. Then the principles governing the life are represented, positively and negatively, thus: "Seek those things which are above. Set your affections on things above and not on earth." To assume an attitude contrary to this apostolic injunction, and to reverse this curriculum of daily Christian life, can have but one issue—soul leanness. Such deterioration can be witnessed in almost every congregation of believers. "Who hath bewitched you?" asks Paul of the Galatian church.—Selected.

"NOBODY KNOWS."

"The next time So-and-So flares out at me I'm going to tell him something!" declared the usually patient but just then indignant member of the office staff to the office sympathizer. "I just spoke to him about the most ordinary matter and he nearly snapped my head off. If I'd done anything to deserve such treatment I wouldn't say anything. But there's no reason or excuse for his treating me so."

"No, I suppose not, strictly speaking," said the sympathizer quietly. "But—he buried his wife and child last week."

bravely as she tries to help bear those of her fellows not long since was confronted by another woman who poured out a bitter tale of woe. She listened sympathetically and did what she could to instill faith and courage into her friend. The talker left her at last after an hour of precious but freely given time and effort with this remark:

"But, of course, you can't know just how I feel, can you? You've never had trouble yourself."

Never had trouble! And that woman's husband had recently been placed in an insane asylum, while her little child lay at death's door.—Onward.

THE CABINET AND THE CHURCHES.

The President of the United States and all the members of his Cabinet are church members and active Christians. Their denominational affiliations are as follows: President Wilson, Vice-President Marshall, Secretary Bryan, and Secretary Wilson are Presbyterians, the first three being elders in that church. Secretaries Redfield, Garrison, and McAdoo, and Attorney-General McReynolds are Episcopalians. Secretary Daniels is a steward in the M. E. Church, South. Secretary Burleson is a Baptist.—Biblical Recorder.

With practically the same labor, horses, mules, wagons and implements, you can produce bigger crops from the same, or less acreage. It takes no more work to raise 60 to 90 bushels of corn, or one and a half to two bales of cotton, to the acre than it takes to make ordinary yields. It is not necessary to plant a larger acreage to get a bigger yield. Simply work and cultivate the same amount of land more thoroughly. You can produce bigger crops of

THE OPEN WINDOW.

A medical inspector of the Philadelphia schools, with the cooperation of teachers and parents, recently made an experiment to determine the value of cold, fresh air in schoolrooms. He opened the window at the top and bottom, and kept them open, except during severe storms, throughout the whole three months of the winter term. The room was shut off from the heating plant of the building, except on the occasional day when the temperature fell below forty-five degrees; and took frequent exercise.

Week by week during the winter the inspector weighed and examined the pupils, watched their study and their play, and compared their progress in health and scholarship with that of pupils in another room of the same building. In that other room, the pupils were of the same grade, and of about the same number, but the room was heated and ventilated according to the usual method. The pupils in both rooms were normal, healthy children from the same kind of homes, so that the test was as fair as possible.

At the end of three months the inspector found that the pupils in the room with the open windows had gained on the average a little more than two pounds in weight, whereas those in the warm room had gained less than one pound. The pupils in the open room were wholly free from colds, and much more regular in attendance than the others. They were also quicker to learn, needed less review work, and were better behaved. In health and happiness, in development both of mind and of body, the children of the room with the open windows had a clear advantage over the others.

In these days, the gospel of sunshine and pure air ought to need little preaching. Most of us accept it; but we do not always practice the doctrines that we believe in and preach. The Philadelphia experiment lay not in giving the open-air treatment to sick children—which everybody approves; it lay in giving well children some of the good things that nature intended them to have.—Youth's Companion.

MARRIAGES

Warrington-Williamson.

On April 23, 1913, Mr. William Bryant Warrington led to the marriage altar Miss Mary Regina Williamson, both of Driver, Va. The marriage was solemn, sacred and beautiful. Berea church, the scene of the marriage, was never more beautiful and impressive, the interior being decorated in perfect artistic manner. Mr. Frank Warrington, brother of the groom, was best man, Miss Jennie Lashley, Mebane, N. C., was maid of honor, little Russel Everett was ring bearer, and Miss Grace Warrington rendered, impressively, the bridal march. The pastor, Rev. I. W. Johnson, assisted by The Sun's editor, brother-in-law of the bride, spoke the holy words of the marriage vow. Mr. and Mrs. Warrington left by automobile immediately after the marriage for Norfolk, thence by steamer to Washington. This deservedly popular pair have many friends who wish them all happiness in their united lives. The marriage presents were very numerous and handsome.

DEATHS

Urssery.

Mrs. Catharine Holmes Urssery died on Friday, April the 11th, 1913, aged seventy-seven years. Sister Urssery's maiden name was Miss Catharine Holmes. She was married first to Mr. Williams, of Kittrell, N. C., and after his death to Mr. Jack Urssery, of Granville County, N. C. She was a good Christian woman and a faithful member of Pope's Christian church. She leaves a husband, two brothers and five sisters. One of these brothers is R. R. Holmes, the father of our talented Prof. Holmes who died a few years ago.

The funeral was at Pope's on the afternoon of April the 12th, conducted by the writer, and the interment was in the church cemetery. My prayers and sympathy are with the husband, who was too feeble to attend the funeral, and relatives, at all may meet in the better land.

C. E. NEWMAN.

A MODERN MIRACLE.

"Of course, no one believes in miracles nowadays," said Mr. Hardy to his neighbor, Mr. Clark.

"That depends on what you mean by 'miracles,'" said Mr. Clark, thoughtfully. "I believe in them myself."

"You mean that you think miracles occurred in the time of Christ. They certainly don't occur now. Miracles belong to the age of superstition, to the childhood race."

"I don't know about that," said Mr. Clark. "If you agree that a miracle is a change due to supernatural power, I can show you a miracle to-night right here in this city. Will you go with me and promise to look and listen without prejudice?"

"Surely I will."

The two men met after supper that night, and Clark took his friend to a part of the city in which Hardy had never been before. They went into a little hall between two saloons, and took seats with a crowd of men and women so dilapidated in appearance that Hardy whispered to Clark, "What sort of a place have you got me into? This must be a meeting of all the 'downs and outs.'"

"It is," said Clark, briefly.

After the leader had given out a hymn and made a short prayer, a big man with a voice of thunder rose and spoke.

For half an hour he poured forth a perfect torrent of appeal to that roomful of lost men and women. He begged, urged, commanded them to come to God.

When he sat down, a score of men and women went forward, and the big man knelt and prayed for them in a voice so tender that Hardy found his face wet with tears.

He and Clark went out on the street. "Well," said Clark, "you have seen your miracle."

"I grant I have seen an interesting sight and heard a good temperance talk, but where is the miracle?"

"Nine months ago that man you heard was a professional gambler and thief. He has been in state prison six different times. He has spent a fortune in drink and vice. To-day he is engaged in an honest trade. He has abandoned all his old habits, and every hour he can spare he labors to redeem lost men and women. He is a devout, prayerful man. I say he is a modern miracle, as great as any that Jesus Christ ever performed. Could anything except miraculous power make that man what he is to-night?"

Hardy was silent. Finally he said, "You are right. I shall never disbelieve in miracles again."—Youth's Companion.

I tried everything that I thought would help, and had four different doctors, but got no relief, so began to take Cardui. Now I feel

Your Money and Your Life.

When the robber waylays his victim the demand is, Your money or your life. That is an awful moment. Of course the victim yields up his money in order to keep his life. A recent writer emphasizes the fact that when the moment of death comes, the summons then is, Your money and your life. And the life is judged by the way it has handled its money. One can no more hoard money than one can hoard time. When the lease expires man has to give up both, and render an account of both, his money and his life. One can no more hold his money after his lease expires than one can hold on to time when eternity calls. We are all stewards, tenants indeed, and none are real owners save that One by whom all things were created.

Violets and Violence.

Walter Savage Landor was a British poet of an ungovernable temper. Once in a rage, it is related of him, he pitched his cook out of the window. Soon after a sober mood fell upon him and he was heard to reflect, "Good heavens! I never once thought of those poor violets growing near the window."

Landor was about as inconsistent as some men whom you have seen who are as gentle as a Spring breeze with their cattle and their horses, but who are terrible tempests in dealing with wife, children, or neighbors. Some people seem to care more for a pet poodle than they do for fallen humanity. The sweet violets, the gentle beasts, the glad earth, and every human heart that beats about us should be the object of our care and concern. And when we have lavished abundantly upon all we will still have love, sympathy and sunshine to spare.

The Power of Love.

A Mohammedan Sheik of Bagdad, says Men and Missions, has recently sent an appeal to Christian nations, which appeal contains such sentences as these: "Islam is filled with anger and hatred against Christianity. We hate you to-day more than at any other period in our history." "We have only horror and contempt for the culture and civilization which make you so rich and glorious." "We hate your civilization because you uphold that it rests upon the doctrine of the Trinity." "We desire to hold the same attitude toward you forever."

And yet, despite such sentiment as this which prevails among the Turks toward us, they are to be won by the gospel of love—the gospel which they declare they hate and want to keep on hating.

Human love would never be able to the task; but divine love is. Divine love loves even when hatred is manifest.

A Fine Compliment.

Thus the Greensboro Daily News, editorially, "Soon the halls of our colleges and universities will reverberate with lofty thoughts and flights of oratory, and a little later the kitchen and the wood-pile will reclaim familiar faces." Whether spoken in seriousness or derision, it is about the fairest and finest compliment the young men and young women now rounding out the four years' college grade that we have seen any where. The girl who when her college days are done and with her diploma tucked snugly away in her trunk, can return to the old home, and during the long, warm days that are now at hand, has the grace and the heart to take her turn in the kitchen and relieve the tired and weary mother there, is worth her weight in diamonds, and you may count on her to wear diamonds, too, some day. And the young man who, fresh from literary pursuits, can see to it that the faithful father's turn at the wood-shed is relieved, will never have occasion to be ashamed on that account.

There are in this world some bigger things than winning a college diploma, and one of those things is to be able to forget the diploma, and prove oneself a man, or a woman, whatever and wherever conditions afford and occasion requires.

The Man of Sorrows.

At the World's Fair at St. Louis, in a department in which the ancient city of Jerusalem was represented, out in a garden with canvas drawn were several apartments devoted to the portrayal of distinguished Israelitish figures. In one small apartment Solomon, and all his glory, and riches, were represented. In an apartment adjoining this Jesus praying in the garden was represented. You could see very vividly the Man of Sorrows bowed, on bended knees, with the world's burden of sin before Him. Great drops of blood burst from His face. He was agonizing in the garden for the forgiveness of man's sins.

As one looked upon Solomon there was no particular awe, wonder, or admiration. But as one looked upon the Man kneeling, agonizing, praying, in the garden, one felt that here is the real man of all time, the center of all hope, the source of all power, the solace of every sorrow. Men, when they think seriously and soberly, know that manhood, womanhood, all true and great and good character are centered, find their highest hope and greatest joy in this Man of sorrows, the one acquainted with grief. He is man's true friend, the friend of rich and poor, high and low, small and great. Commenting recently on an event of wealth and worth, the editor of the New York Advocate writes:

"A man of colossal fortune finds himself poor without the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. The gigantic dictator in the world of finance bows a suppliant knee before the meek and lowly Saviour who had not where to lay His head and who was bruised for our iniquities. The munificent patron of the arts, who lavished vast sums of money on the accumulation of rare treasures, acknowledges that the pearl of great price exceeds them all in value. The rich testator, who bequeaths great wealth to his children, gives them as his first charge the defense, 'at any cost of personal sacrifice,' of 'the blessed doctrine of the complete atonement for sin through the blood of Jesus Christ'. It is a thing to make men pause."

America's Greatest Need.

Business men of the present are living under a great strain. Automobiles and fine houses and great bank accounts have neither brought peace to the warring, contentment to the workers, nor rest to the weary. Per contra, stress and the strain on the man of business and affairs never were as great and grinding as they are today. In the intoxication of modern business, men must turn to somewhat for relief.

If a preacher, or an editor of a religious paper were to say what we are about to print below, it might not be so significant, but coming as it does right out of the heart and center of the modern business whirl, it seems to us to be one of the most potent and pointed utterances we have seen in many a day. It is from busy New York, and more than that, from the center and source of its financial stress and strain. We copy from The Wall Street Journal:

"What America needs more than railway extension, and Western irrigation, and a low tariff, and a bigger wheat-crop, and a merchant marine, and a new navy, is a revival of piety, the kind mother and father used to have—piety that counted it good business to stop for daily family prayer before breakfast, right in the middle of harvest; that quit field-work half an hour early Thursday night so as to get the chores done and go to prayer-meeting. That's what we need now to clean this country of the filth of graft and of greed, petty and big; of worship of fine houses and big lands and high office and grand social functions. What is the thing we are worshipping but a vain repetition of what decayed nations fell down and worshipped just before their light went out? Read the history of Rome in decay, and you will find luxury there which could lay a big dollar over our little doughnut that looks so large to us. Great wealth never made a nation substantial nor honorable. There is nothing on earth that looks good that is so dangerous for a man or a nation to handle as quick, easy, big money. If you do not resist its deadly influence, the chances are that it will get your son. It takes greater and finer heroism to dare to be poor in America than to charge an earthworks in Manchuria."

God blesses the home where the family altar is maintained; and if the altar has never been set up or has been neglected for a season, it is not too late to get into the path of blessing.—Sel.

ABIDING GREATNESS.

Early in the morning of May 2nd Mr. John T. Pullen, a banker and man of affairs at Raleigh, fell on sleep. Just that announcement carried a pang of sorrow and grief to more hearts in this good State than any similar announcement in a decade. John Pullen was the best known private citizen, and the most beloved man in North Carolina. And people loved him not because he was a banker, made and inherited money, and was successful in business; nay verily. People loved John Pullen because John Pullen loved people. His fame went abroad purely and simply because of his goodness. He made money; but he gave it to the poor, the unfortunate, the needy.

This writer has been in Raleigh at the hour when the Banks closed for the day. He has seen this man, immediately as his office doors were shut, strike out for a brisk walk toward the poorer districts of the city to see if he could find human suffering to relieve. He spent the hours from closing time till night in that quest. Wherever there was human suffering, or human need, you would find John Pullen there, if he could get there.

We chanced through the meat market in Raleigh one night just before Christmas. The market was thronged with buyers of meat. We saw John Pullen pass a poor old colored man, looking wistfully at the buyers. Before the old fellow knew what had happened he had a beef shank protruding from his ragged old coat pocket, his eyes bulging with grateful wonder, and ere he could say a word Pullen was out of reach or hearing. I reckon that old colored man, nor any one else in the world save this writer, knows to this day who put that roll of beef in that yawning pocket.

It would have been difficult to find Mr. Pullen, when not on duty at the Bank, elsewhere than on some errand of love, some mission of mercy.

I reckon he attended every revival in every church in Raleigh for the past fifteen years, unless two were being conducted in far different parts of the city at the same hour. And he carried a pocket bulging out with Testaments and Bibles with him to all these revivals, and gave a copy to any one who seemed to need, or would accept one. We wish we knew how many thousand copies of the Bible this man gave away. He must have bought them in lots of thousands.

It is related of him that when the news was brought that his uncle, Stanhope Pullen deceased, had bequeathed to him a fair fortune, he lifted his hands towards heaven and said, "I thank thee, O God, for thou shalt have every penny of it for the relief of suffering and the advancement of thy kingdom."

We could fill columns telling incidents we have heard of this good man's life. And almost any one else who has ever been to Raleigh many times could do the same. You could not be in Raleigh long before somebody would be telling you about the best and most beloved man in the town.

The greatest friend to the poor and needy in this State has gone to his reward. His name is enshrined in thousands of redeemed souls, and grateful hearts. When this man prayed he seemed to breathe the air of heaven, and talk to God. When he preached—yes he often found a congregation of ready listeners—his soul seemed aflame with holy joy. And in his daily life and conversation you realized that here indeed was a true son of the King.

John Pullen won a secure place among the truly great and famous men of the State—by just being and doing good. Of the company who gathered to pay this man tribute in death Editor Moore of the Biblical Recorder wrote:

"It is no wonder that on last Saturday afternoon the city in miniature gathered at his funeral. Side by side in common grief sat or stood bankers and clerks; railway magnates and newsboys; college presidents and kindergarten pupils; State officials and ex-convicts; clergymen and moral wayfarers; the aged mother out of the Old Ladies Home and the crying child in its mother's arms; the tottering veteran out of the Soldiers' Home and the street Arab who turned in hither with tears; the working girl from behind the counter or typewriter or school room or kitchen or wash-tub and the satined dame out of the palaces on Blount and Hillsboro streets. Was there ever such a company gathered within four walls to pay tribute to a departed friend?"

And this man's only claim to distinction, honor or fame was his goodness. He has built for himself a monument more enduring than marble, more brilliant than diamonds, more precious than gold—the monument of undying love in the hearts of thousands whom he helped and saved.

RAISING CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

Conference apportionments, for missions, education, etc., are hard to raise, in most churches. In about nine cases out of ten the pastor has nobody to blame for this but his own dear self. When at the end of the year the few faithful have to give, and give again, and divide up, and give some more, just put it down that your pastor is to blame for this unjust, injurious, and unholy situation.

Giving does not hurt people. It is the unfair and unequal giving that stings and bites and burns—the few being driven to give, out of pride lest their church go up to Conference "not a banner church."

This writer witnessed, last Sunday, one of the most singular circumstances he had ever witnessed in the matter of church collections. It was at a country church where the people get their money once a year—when they sell their tobacco crop. It was thought that a decent collection could not be taken there, except in the Fall and just before Conference. Then there was begging, and pulling, and pinching and teasing, in order to get up all the apportionment. It was a poor performance.

We resolved this year to try an experiment. On the first Sunday of April the pastor announced that the first Sunday of May would be Missionary Day, and we were on that day going to take a free will offering to be applied to our conference apportionment. Collection envelopes were handed out. Last week the pastor sent a circular letter to every member asking an offering—just such as one felt like one should give.

The first Sunday of May came. The congregation was large. The occasion was delightful. The pastor preached on "The Grace of Giving," taking as a text, Mal. 3:8, "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." The pastor tried to show that God was not poor, and so did not, on that account need our gifts. God could speak to the leaves on the trees and they would turn to gold; or He could send the holy angels and they could go forth to proclaim the gospel message. But God loved us so, and was so eager and anxious to reach honor and exalt us that He permitted us to share with Him the salvation of men. This is why we are to give—because God has so highly honored us, making us co-workers with Him in enlarging the Kingdom.

God did not need our dollars, but He did want to reach and save our souls; and even the divine Hand would not reach some heart strings until He had first untied some purse strings. God meant it as a privilege conferred upon us, not a painful duty exacted of us, that we should give. After the sermon we had a prayer and invoked God's blessing upon what we were about to engage in. Two deacons were then asked to pass the baskets. There was no begguig, never a word said. Each one cast in as one saw fit. Conference had put the apportionment on this church up to $146.00. The congregation was advised of this. Strange and striking as it may seem, when the deacons counted what was in the two baskets it was found to be $147.93. This country church never attempted anything like that before and all were simply astounded that the plan worked so well; that the apportionment could possibly be raised so easily, so early, so pleasantly.

Heretofore raising the apportionment in this church, as in hundreds of others, had been a drag, a drudge, and a dread. This year it was a delight, a pleasure, a joy. Some of the few who have heretofore had the greater part of the giving to do, held back a large part of their usual gifts, thinking that they would certainly be called upon to make up a large balance—as heretofore. They were disappointed in their calculations.

Pleasant Grove church, Halifax County, Va., had an experience in raising conference apportionments last Sunday that it will never forget. And it was a happy experience. Henceforth, farewell to the old unholy plan of begging the few faithful at the end of the year;—a plan that pastors are holding to the hurt of the cause and the burden of the brethren. Give the people a chance—and give it to them early in the year, my brother pastor, and see what happens.

EARTH'S REBUKE.

How quiet the days are! How still the night! How silently, and in what solemn procession, the stately planets move across the heavens. One is reminded of the prophet's words, (Isa. 14:7) "The whole earth is at rest, and is quiet; they break forth into singing."

And yet what stupendous tasks these silent ones are performing. The quiet days are bringing forth buds and blossoms and abundance everywhere. The silent nights cleanse the foul earth, rest the weary toiler, and prepare all things for the new day and added strength. The stately planets guide the wayfarer, and light up the high-arching canopy. How these world forces rebuke us little, restless, peevish, ambitious souls! These silent ones produce more in a minute than all the mad and restless throng in a lifetime. And they will go on doing their work when we feverish, fretful ones are dead and done for.

They obey the will of God; we do not stop to enquire even what that will is. They are content to serve, silently and unostentatiously the purpose for which they were created; we do not seek diligently to find out for what purpose we were created.

Matthew, inspired with divine insight urged that we (Matt. 6:28), "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

Earth's solemn and silent rebuke to us is that we will not consider. We do not take time to consider. We neglect prayer-meeting. We do not find time in the mad week for Bible reading. We have no family altar. Sunday service is too long—if Sunday school is counted in with church. The daily paper claims our thought.

When, pray, do we stop to consider? No wonder our work does not count. No wonder the worry of today is lost in the rush of tomorrow. No wonder weariness of mind and body seizes us.

When have we stopped to consider the lilies of the field. They are worth considering. They will teach us holy and heavenly truths. Consider.
